Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I say now, and I said before the committee, I cannot look hungry people in the face and vote for $3,000,000, take it out of relief funds, and pay for timber of which there appears to be an abundance. I am a conservationist with reservations. I think our resources should be used upon the theory that our Government has adopted wherever possible, namely, a sustained use.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield.

Mr. THOM. Who said the money for this purchase is going to be taken out of the relief fund?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. We had the testimony before the committee and the gentleman from California stated it a moment ago.

Mr. THOM. The relief bill was passed the other day and it practically allocates all the money.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Oh, no.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. I am against this bill if section 4 is retained, but will support the bill if it is eliminated.

Mr. Chairman, it is stated that we are setting a precedent if section 4 of this bill is agreed to. I will tell the Members of this House you are not setting a precedent. The precedent has already been established, and it should never have been established. It was established in this House many years ago, and I well remember the time. Every year since that time the Treasury has paid to the State of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], who is supporting this amendment, $250,000 for taxes on land that had been taken back by the Government.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. No; not right now; let me complete my statement. The Federal Government is paying $250,000 a year on land that the Government took back—land that it ceded to a railroad in Oregon. There was a distinguished Member of this House, who was a Republican chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Hawley, and, if I am not mistaken, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] succeeded him. Mr. Hawley was so powerful during the Republican administration that he put that bill through this House, and a Republican Senate agreed to it. As I stated, we have paid $250,000 annually to the State of Oregon for land that now belongs to the Government that it had to take back from a railroad. I remember very well the argument advanced. They told the House the schools of Oregon would be closed if the Government did not pay the taxes. That law should be repealed because no State is entitled to receive taxes on lands owned by the Government. I am as anxious as any Member of this House to save these wonderful pine trees, and the statement that the money is coming out of relief appropriations is not justified. That chairman of the committee assures us that it is not correct that the money comes from the special fund in the Treasury that can only be used to purchase lands for this purpose, and that no specific appropriation from the General Treasury fund will be required. What does the first section of the bill say? I will read it:

> That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable—otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, on behalf of the United States under any fund or moneys available for such purpose, at the time of the passage of this act, except from the general fund of the Treasury.

That should convince anyone that the argument that the money is to come from the relief appropriation is not based upon facts. Let us meet the issue squarely. If the money came from the relief appropriation, I would not support the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is indefensible. The chairman of the Public Lands Committee, Mr. DEROUEN, tells us that it will be a precedent in the future for his committee. He frankly tells us he wants the House to say "yes" or "no" whether in the future we are going to pay taxes to States for lands that the Government takes over for conservation purposes. Well, let us say "yes" or "no." My vote is "no" now and in the future. Where is all the money going to come from to pay taxes if we are going to adopt the policy of paying taxes to the various States for land we take over?

We have taken over millions and millions of acres of land and added this land to our forest reservations. We have not paid one cent of taxes to the States and the States do not deserve any taxes, nor have they asked for taxes, because when we take over that land we benefit the locality. They make money out of the transaction. National parks and forest reservations attract people that would otherwise never visit the community. If the county involved in this bill is so poor it cannot get along without the taxes it is now receiving for the property involved, why does not that county merge with an adjoining county? [Applause.]

There is absolutely no reason why the Congress of the United States should go on record today as favoring the proposition that in the future we will pay taxes to the States for land that the Government takes over.

I hope the amendment will be defeated in committee and if is not defeated in the committee, I am going to use every parliamentary means at my disposal to get a roll call when we go back into the House and see that it is defeated.

I repeat, with the amendment in I will not support the bill, but if you vote down this amendment I will support the bill and I am sure a sufficient number of Members entertain the same views. You can pass this bill if you defeat this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the House is a little bit impatient. As a member of the committee I want to point out, as the gentleman from Missouri just stated, we at this moment are facing a most vital turning point in the taxing policy of this Nation. There are States in which the domain is being purchased by the Federal Treasury and converted back into public acreage. There are States in which that situation does not exist.

There is legislation pending before certain committees, which will be brought on the floor of this House very soon, no doubt, that will make this little piece of legislation look like 30 cents with the "3" off. Are we going to pay taxes to counties and States on land that is purchased by the Federal Government or not? That is the issue involved in this bill. Section 4 is something of importance for this House to act on, and it is the vital part of the bill.

In my own State the Government is purchasing a lot of acreage and putting it back into the public domain. You know what is being said by the Secretary of Agriculture and by the Committee on the Conservation of Natural Resources with reference to the purchase of millions of acres of land. What are we going to do? If we are going to pay taxes to the counties on the land after it is put back into the public domain, we better find different ways of raising taxes, because the money is not going to be forthcoming out of our present production and national income.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not a matter of national policy that municipalities, States, and various governmental entities are always exempt from taxation so far as their property is concerned?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That has been the general rule up to date, but there is an exception to it which is going on at the present time, and the gentleman from Missouri pointed it out a while ago.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not a fact if that was not true, municipalities, counties, and various political subdivisions could hardly exist?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think that statement is correct. But there is brought into the picture a new proposition, and that is we go out here and recover or recapture, through purchase, lands that have heretofore been in the tax structure of the counties or States. If that is to be the new policy of government, and if we are to go out and buy forty, fifty, or seventy-five million acres of land, these counties have the right to raise the question, "Where are the tax dollars coming from?" Before going too far with this program of purchasing land, we better stop for a moment and consider the very question that we have before us this afternoon.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. Does not the gentleman think there is a vast difference between land which originally belonged to the Government of the United States and is taken into some agency of the Government and land that is condemned or purchased, thereby depriving the counties of the tax revenue on which they have built up their tax structure?

Mr. CRAWFORD. From the standpoint of primary settlement or primary disposition, there is a difference; but I am discussing the tax feature. That is the point I am talking about now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are several Members who would like 3 or 4 minutes apiece. May I request the gentleman to make his request 10 minutes?

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Chairman, let me clear away all this fog. I did not offer this amendment and I am willing to have it taken out if anybody objects. I spoke awhile ago in reference to quibbling about these things. Whether Mariposa County receives this tax or not, in my judgment, is a very small matter and not big enough for the Congress of the United States to be concerned with. This Congress must be concerned with saving one of the last stands of sugar pine which is getting to be the scarcest tree on the face of the earth.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I am very glad to learn that the distinguished gentleman from California is willing to eliminate section 4, which is so controversial, because I am sure, with the elimination of this section, nearly every Member of Congress will support the bill of the distinguished gentleman from California.

In the hearings I noticed that Mr. LEMKE asked Mr. Cammerer a question, and Mr. Cammerer made the following answer:

> The sugar pine is found exclusively in California and southern Oregon, and nowhere else in the world. It is the largest and most magnificent of all pine trees. As John Muir, the famous naturalist and author, described it, it is "the largest, noblest, and most beautiful of all the 70 or 80 species of pine trees in the world, and of all the conifers second only to king sequoia."

Mr. McGROARTY. I thank the gentleman from New York for his contribution.

Now, we have John Muir, one of the greatest of all naturalists, saying this is the most beautiful of all pine trees, that it is known nowhere else in the world except in California and southern Oregon, not extending down into Mexico, as has been stated here. This locality is where it grows, and this is all there is left of it. Can I believe there is a thought in the mind of any Member of Congress to give this forest, the last we have, over to a bankrupt sawmill and take it away from the generations to come? This is all there is to the opposition.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further for a question?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. When the vote is taken on the committee amendment which would insert section 4, is it the gentleman's idea that all of us should vote in favor of the committee amendment?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. We have the word of the distinguished and scholarly gentleman from California that the sugar pine is the most beautiful tree in the world.

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. We do not really need to reenforce that word by the statement of the distinguished naturalist. I am willing to believe it in the first place.

Mr. McGROARTY. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. DOWELL and Mr. IZAC rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa for 2 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. DEROUEN. I shall be glad to answer the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. It has been stated the money to be expended for this land is to come out of relief money which has been appropriated by Congress.

Mr. DEROUEN. That is not correct.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman state to the House if it is not correct that the money will be paid out of the relief funds?

Mr. DEROUEN. That is not correct.

Mr. DOWELL. Where does the money come from?

Mr. DEROUEN. I have made that explanation, but the gentleman was not on the floor at the time.

Mr. DOWELL. I have been on the floor all afternoon, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. DEROUEN. I made the explanation in the opening of my remarks, but I shall be pleased to repeat it. This money will come out of money which was earmarked previously in the Emergency Conservation Act. So much money was earmarked. There was an unexpended part of this money which will be used to acquire this timber.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the gentleman is mistaken, and it does come out of the relief fund.

Mr. DEROUEN. If the gentleman wants to ask me the question, where does all the money come from, I may say it comes from taxation.

Mr. DOWELL. I am asking the gentleman where this money comes from. The gentleman has said it does not come out of relief funds, but now the gentleman says it does come out of relief funds appropriated by Congress.

Mr. DEROUEN. No; it was money to be used for an emergency; it was money set aside for land purchases, for additions to forest reserves or national parks. There was appropriated in this act a certain amount of money, and there is a balance left which will be used to acquire this area. New appropriations will not be required.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I shall read this statement made by the Director of the National Park Service in the Senate hearings:

> The basic authority for the acquisition of lands for the relief of unemployment and the performance of useful public works is contained in the act of Congress approved March 31, 1933.

It is stated this money is to come from the emergency relief funds. The Director concludes his remarks with the following statement:

> It should also be stated at this time that under the regular procedure now followed by the Government, Executive orders are approved as to form and substance by the Attorney General. Therefore before any emergency funds are allocated to purchase the Carl Inn area of sugar pines it is safe to assume that the highest legal office of the United States will approve no order which did not fulfill the requirements of existing law.

Here is the statement in the Senate report that this money does come from the emergency relief funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment which appears as section 4 on page 3 of the bill.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIROVICH. A vote of "aye" is a vote to retain section 4, and a vote of "no" would mean the elimination of section 4?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I move the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT) there were—ayes 56, noes 62.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present, and object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 128, not voting 121, as follows:

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by the Attorney General to the President on the subject of identical sealed bids for steel products.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, June 15, immediately following the special permission granted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], which is subject to the conditions expressed by the majority leader, I may be granted permission to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN and Mr. RANKIN rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield the floor?

Mr. DEROUEN. No, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be pleased to entertain personal requests after the call of the Calendar Wednesday business, but the Chair feels the gentleman from Louisiana is entitled to the floor, and is entitled to proceed with the consideration of the bills from his committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DEROUEN. I do not yield the floor, but I yield to the gentleman to submit a unanimous-consent request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PROSPECTING PERMITS

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4277) to provide for the extension of certain prospecting permits, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4277) to provide for the extension of certain prospecting permits, and for other purposes, with Mr. MILLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding there is no objection to the bill. May I ask if the gentleman on the other side desires any time?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, we have no requests for time on this side.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all prospecting permits which were extended until December 31, 1937, under the first proviso of the fourth sentence of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain", approved February 25, 1920, as amended, and all permits granted under the authority of any amendments thereof, shall be extended until December 31, 1939, subject to the applicable conditions of prior extensions, if any: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to extend for an additional period of not to exceed 1 year any permit on which diligence has been exercised or on which drilling or prospecting has been suspended at the direction of the Secretary during the extension period hereby granted, but no extension of any permit beyond December 31, 1940, shall be granted under the authority of this act or any other act.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of having the chairman of the committee very briefly explain the purposes of this bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, this bill has to do with the extension of oil permits on the public domain.

On March 13, 1929, the issuance of oil and gas permits was suspended by the then Secretary of the Interior. Thereafter a large number of permits were canceled on the ground that no development had occurred and no equitable action by the permittees justified their extension. The remaining outstanding permits were extended upon a showing of expenditures and other equities, for not exceeding 2 years at a time, on the express condition that there be no drilling thereon for at least one-half of the period of extension. Because of an oversupply of oil and gas, the policy of the administration from 1929 to 1933 was to discourage or relieve from drilling and production upon existing permits.

April 4, 1932, the then Secretary of the Interior issued regulations permitting application for and issuance of new prospecting permits on the express condition that each applicant should agree to produce no oil or gas except pursuant to a plan of unit operation or other cooperative plans approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON. I notice from the report of the Secretary of the Interior that he is opposed to the enactment of this legislation. Will the distinguished chairman explain the opposition to this bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. It is true that the Secretary of the Interior interposed some objection. It is also true that when the act which we call the Unit Oil Act was passed they were given 2 years, but the Secretary of the Interior withheld any regulations for a year and some months, and therefore those who held permits could not do a thing. They could not operate because the Department of the Interior held off for over a year the regulations under which they were to act.

Mr. CARLSON. Is it not true that the Department of the Interior could now release these particular projects or issue new permits at great advantage to the Government instead of extending the old permits?

Mr. DEROUEN. No; the present law provides he may extend the time for 1 year. What we are seeking to do now is to provide that the permits will be extended 2 years instead of 1. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. GREEVER] will be pleased to go into the further details of the bill.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. In answer to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] in connection with these extensions, on August 21, 1935, a new law was passed, covering the issuance of leases upon the public domain. For 15 years prior to that time the operations upon the public domain had been carried on under a permit system. Under the act of August 21, 1935, a 2-year extension was granted to all of these permittees. There were some 7,000 in number, many of whom have been precluded from doing any work upon their permits because of the fact that there had been a policy from 1929 on up and practically to the present time, or at least to the passage of the act of August 21, 1935, in the interest of conservation of oil, and because of the general financial condition at that time, in which not only had liberal extensions been granted but also active discouragement of any drilling had taken place. When the act of August 21, 1935, was passed, it extended all permits up to December 31, 1937, but the regulations under that act were not promulgated until more than a year.

On September 22, 1936, the Secretary of the Interior issued rules in which he said no one could get an extension unless he went into the unit plan of operation. There was not sufficient personnel in the Interior Department to go over the unit plans of operation. I think 1,300 unit plans were submitted, and under the requirements up to the present time only 44 have been approved. One thousand and eighty-three, I think the hearings show, had been refused. I think it was due largely to the fact that they did not have time to go over them, and it made it impossible for these permittees to comply with the terms of their permits in that short time, and the committee unanimously felt that there should be an additional 2 years' extension.

A report was written against this bill by a member of the Geological Survey. If these people are forced to drill today it is going to bring into production a lot of oil that should not be in production today and further hurt the crude-oil market in this country.

Mr. CARLSON. It is the gentleman's view that this regulation will merely delay the operation of these prospecting permits instead of demanding immediate drilling?

Mr. GREEVER. Yes. It will cause orderly development.

Mr. CARLSON. In view of that statement, I shall not oppose the bill.

Mr. GREEVER. That is the purpose of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro-forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4277, and had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain extracts from certain letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RESIDENCE OF UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS FOR NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 5804, to provide for the residence of the United States commissioners appointed for the national parks, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana calls up the bill H. R. 5804 and asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any United States commissioner appointed for any of the several national parks shall reside within the exterior boundaries of the park for which he is appointed or at a place reasonably adjacent to such park, the place of residence to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. Any such commissioner heretofore appointed shall be entitled to receive the salary provided by law, which may have accrued at the date this act becomes effective, without regard to whether such commissioner may have resided within the exterior boundaries of the park for which appointed.

SEC. 3. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HAWAII NATIONAL PARK

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5805) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the exercise of sole and exclusive jurisdiction by the United States over the Hawaii National Park in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes", approved April 19, 1930, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana calls up the bill H. R. 5805, and asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act providing for the exercise of sole and exclusive jurisdiction by the United States over Hawaii National Park in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes", approved April 19, 1930 (46 Stat. 228; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 395e), be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"That during such time or times as the office of the Commissioner for the Hawaii National Park shall be or remain unfilled, or when the presence of such Commissioner cannot be conveniently procured, any United States commissioner duly appointed by the United States District Court for the Territory of Hawaii and residing in such district shall have full power, authority, and jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made with respect to offenses or violations of law or regulations occurring within the limits of the Hawaii National Park, as the United States Commissioner for the Hawaii National Park may now act with respect to offenses or violations of law or regulations occurring within the limits of said park."

SEC. 2. That section 9 of the said act of April 19, 1930 (46 Stat. 229; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 395h), be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"That any United States commissioner in and for the Territory of Hawaii, while acting in such capacity as United States Commissioner for the Hawaii National Park as authorized by section 6 hereof, shall be allowed the fees prescribed by section 21 of the act of May 28, 1896 (29 Stat. 184), upon the rendition of an itemized account."

SEC. 3. All laws or parts of laws, either Federal or Territorial, in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 1649) to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the State of Minnesota of certain lands in Morrison County, Minn.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the State of Minnesota, for park, recreational, and/or wildlife-refuge purposes, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following-described lands:

Lot 1, section 14; lot 6, section 10; lots 1 and 5, section 25, township 42 north, range 32 west, fourth principal meridian; and lot 5, section 18, township 131 north, range 29 west, fifth principal meridian, Minnesota.

Such conveyance shall contain the express condition that the above-described land may, upon approval by the Commissioner of Conservation of Minnesota, be used for such military purposes as shall not conflict or be incompatible with the normal use of said land for park, recreational, and/or wildlife-refuge purposes.

Such conveyance shall further contain the express condition that if said State of Minnesota shall at any time cease to use such lots for such purpose, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate such lots, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "and/or" and insert the word "or".

Page 2, line 6, strike out the words "and/or" and insert the word "or".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FINAL PROOF BY HOMESTEAD AND DESERT-LAND ENTRYMEN

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 329) to further extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead and desert-land entrymen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen", approved May 13, 1932, as amended, is amended by striking out "December 31, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1936".

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LANDS IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4890) relative to the disposition of public lands of the United States situated in the State of Oklahoma between the Cimarron base line and the north boundary of the State of Texas.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall be shown, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, that public land situated south of the Cimarron base line in Oklahoma and north of the north line of Texas has been used, improved, or cultivated in connection with abutting land, and has been held in good faith, in peaceful, open, adverse possession by a citizen of the United States, his ancestors, or grantors, for a period of not less than 10 years prior to the passage of this act, and until the submission of proof hereunder, such person, or persons, shall be entitled to enter such tract, not exceeding 160 acres, and to receive patent therefor upon payment of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That oil, gas, or other mineral deposits contained therein are hereby reserved to the United States; and said minerals shall be and remain subject to sale or disposal by the United States under applicable laws; and permittees, lessees, grantees, or agents of the United States shall have a right to enter upon said lands for the purpose of prospecting for and mining said minerals: And provided further, That any person entitled to patent under this act shall present his application within 1 year from the official filing of the township plat.

SEC. 2. That where any land included within said area has been included in town-site plats recorded on the county records in Texas or Oklahoma, and the lots, blocks, streets, alleys, highways, and other rights-of-way have been shown on the official United States township plats, according to such town-site plat, the title of the United States to town lots shown on such plats is hereby relinquished to and confirmed in those persons, their heirs, assigns, or successors, who would be the true and lawful owners if the lands had been owned in fee simple at the time of the recordation of such town-site plats. The township plats representing streets and alleys of any town site shall be considered as executed under the town-site laws, and shall constitute a dedication of the streets, alleys, public highways, and railroad rights-of-way shown thereon.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 5, after the word "thereon", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the oil, gas, or other mineral deposits in the land relinquished, confirmed, or dedicated by this section are hereby reserved to the United States for disposal as provided in section 1 hereof."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask about the program for tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. The program for tomorrow will be the so-called Dies immigration or deportation bill.

Mr. SNELL. That will come up tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. The first thing tomorrow; and on Friday the extension of the so-called nuisance taxes.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman expect to complete the bill from the Ways and Means Committee on Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. We hope to. We will not be in session on Saturday, at least.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may sit Thursday and Friday during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

LON D. WORSHAM CO.—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 266)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, House bill 564, entitled "An act for the relief of Lon D. Worsham Co."

The bill proposes to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Lon D. Worsham Co., of Chattanooga, Tenn., the sum of $3,427.60 in full settlement of its claims against the United States for extra work and losses said to have been occasioned by delays caused by the Government in the construction of camps for the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The records show that on November 10, 1933, Lon D. Worsham Co. entered into a contract with the Quartermaster Corps of the Army for the construction of 28 camps for the Civilian Conservation Corps. It appears that the work was completed on January 3, 1934, and that the payments made to the contractor aggregated the sum of $131,585.87. The contractor presented two additional claims—one for the sum of $3,427.60 for work performed by him in addition to that required by the contract and one for the sum of $2,733.57 for alleged losses said to have been caused by delays on the part of the Government in furnishing materials which it had agreed to supply. The bill as originally introduced was for the aggregate of the foregoing sums. It was amended, however, so as to provide for the payment of the first of the above-mentioned amounts and was passed in that form.

The records indicate that no written orders were ever issued by the contracting officer for the performance of the alleged extra work, as required by the contract. It further appears that some of the items constituting alleged extra work consisted of excavation. It is questionable whether such items properly constitute work in addition to that required by the contract, as the agreement seems to have contemplated the completion of whatever excavation would prove to be necessary. The records further disclose that some of the work under consideration appears to have been actually performed by members of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The validity of the claim, and, if valid, its amount, are at best disputed matters. In view of this circumstance it should not be adjusted without a hearing before a judicial tribunal, which may consider the evidence of both parties and make findings of fact.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 9, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield to the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LONG and Mr. COLDEN asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein excerpts from an article on Katahdin National Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein three brief tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

THE LATE JAMES COUZENS

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to one of America's great men who is with us no more—the Honorable JAMES COUZENS, who for 13 years represented Michigan in the United States Senate. Some men achieve greatness in one thing. JAMES COUZENS achieved greatness in many things. He was a great statesman. He was a great financier. His mental genius helped build one of the world's greatest industries. He was a great philanthropist. But he was greatest of all in his infinite love for the poor and handicapped children of his State and of his Nation. The poorest child, no matter how ragged, would draw his sympathy and interest as nothing else could draw that sympathy and interest. While he was in public life for years comparatively few people knew him or had met him personally. He refused to make political speeches or to campaign for public office. Most people of his State knew him only through the public press which, for political reasons, was not always friendly. It is because I want the people of my State to know "JIM" COUZENS as I knew him, particularly during the last 2 years of his life, that I am speaking today. I want to speak of him not as a great financier, not as a great industrialist, not as a statesman nor as a philanthropist. I want to talk about JAMES COUZENS—the man. I want to speak of the human side of this individual—of his unlimited love for the poor children of the land—those youngsters who have not had the opportunity in life he felt that they should have, children who because of environment, birth, and above all because of poverty, were handicapped in their unequal struggle to obtain a few of the better things in life. His great heart went out to every human being who suffered, regardless as to who that human being was. It went out particularly to these poor and handicapped children.

Senator COUZENS had in mind for years some plan whereby he could help these poor children of Michigan. On April 11, 1929, he created a trust fund of $10,000,000, and in creating that trust fund he wrote in part as follows:

On March 25, 1929, the Honorable Herbert Hoover, President of the United States, issued a proclamation stating that the future of our Nation rests with the children of today, and that the good health and protection of childhood is fundamental to national welfare. He designated May 1, 1929, as Child Health Day, and invited the people of the United States and all agencies and organizations interested in this most important subject to make every reasonable effort to bring about a Nation-wide understanding of the fundamental significance of healthy childhood and the importance of the conservation of the health and physical vigor of our boys and girls throughout every day of the year.

For several years I have had in mind the creating of a trust fund, the principal and income of which should be used, disbursed, and expended within a given period of time to promote the health, welfare, happiness, and development of the children of Michigan primarily, and elsewhere in the world.

To that end, I do hereby irrevocably create a trust fund of $10,000,000.

Senator COUZENS did not create the trust, then pass the work on to someone else, but he himself acted as chairman of the board which administered the fund during his lifetime. In the report of the children's fund and in a statement made by Senator COUZENS as chairman of the board, he again wrote as follows:

A nation which survives in this struggling world must be made up of citizens strong in body, seasoned in spirit, and supple in mind. Capacity to meet competition strongly with intelligence and zest determines the destinies of peoples as well as of individuals. If this is true, then it is equally true that the welfare of the Republic 30 years hence depends upon how well we adults of the present foster, upbuild, and train the myriads of children who throng our homes. These frail little folks who romp and weep and laugh about our knees today will be the masters of America in that time to come.

The good parent consecrates himself to this task. Every father and every mother worthy of the name has a tender and undying love for his children. Each of them works valiantly to open for his children better opportunities than he possessed himself, opportunity for good health, for better trained minds, and for well-adjusted personalities. But the job is bigger than the resources of the average parent. The obligation leaps beyond the confines of the home and offers a constant challenge to government and to wealth to join hands with parents in enlarging opportunities for childhood.

To my mind, the necessity of meeting this challenge fairly and squarely is simple and clear. The importance of child rearing overshadows all the more spectacular problems that receive attention in those tumultuous times. The children's fund of Michigan was founded 7 years ago with exactly this purpose, to open wider the gates of opportunity to Michigan's children.

Mr. Speaker, thus spoke JAMES COUZENS, not the statesman, not the financier, not the industrialist, but JAMES COUZENS, the humanitarian who loved children.

In November of 1934 Senator COUZENS supplemented his $10,000,000 donation by another donation of $2,100,000, and during the first 7 years of its operation the fund has expended approximately $4,575,000. During that period there were created 35 county or district health departments. There are now operating public nurses in 43 counties. A dental program is being carried on in 47 counties and an eye program in 42 counties. Each of these counties has its nurse, and is organized into a health district with a trained health officer in charge.

In 1921 I recall a conversation with Dr. Herman Kiefer, then State health commissioner of Michigan. He was very much alarmed at the high death rate in maternity cases in the northern part of Michigan. He spoke to me then of the need for such a service as we have now in certain counties in Michigan—counties which are too poor to finance their own health service. Many homes became motherless because the expectant mother knew nothing about what modern science teaches and has discovered with regard to prenatal care. Today the Couzens nurse goes into the smallest shack in the farthest and wildest part of Michigan, carrying scientific information to that home and educating the mother. I am informed that last year there were 26 counties in northern Michigan in which there was not a death due to childbirth.

Mr. Speaker, we have all seen the tragedy of a motherless home. I recall an instance not so long ago in a small town in my district which was particularly pathetic. The happy little family consisted of a young father and mother and two small children, Patsy and Colleen. It was Christmas time. The stork was hovering over that humble little home. They wanted a boy. The day before Christmas the mother prepared the Christmas tree, and around the tree were gifts marked "From mother to Patsy" and "From mother to Colleen." That night the mother went to the hospital. She stopped on her way through the "valley of the shadow of death." On Christmas Day in one room was the Christmas tree, with its gifts marked "From mother to Patsy" and "From mother to Colleen", and in the other room was the mother, lying in a casket, with a beautiful baby boy in her arms. Running about the house were Patsy and Colleen, too small to realize just what had happened. Many a tragedy such as this has been averted through the wonderful work done by the Couzens fund in Michigan.

Last July there was dedicated in my district a children's hospital, where the crippled and sick children can be brought; where they can be operated upon and given every care that modern medical science can give them. Mr. Speaker, I wonder how many of you have ever visited the children's ward in a great hospital. I wonder how many of you have seen those little tots with their backs strapped to boards or weights attached to their little limbs for months at a time, cheerfully smiling the weary hours and days and weeks and months away. I wonder how many of us appreciate the wonderful and miraculous work that is being done by modern science in bringing about the cure and recovery of these little sick and crippled children. Thousands of boys and girls are going to walk who have never walked before; are going to see who are blind; are going to be cured who are ill. Boys and girls whom we thought were condemned by fate to go through life hopeless cripples are going to lead normal lives, take their places in society as normal men and women, know the pleasure of having and supporting families, take their children in their arms, and know some of the joys as well as some of the sorrows of life. I wonder how many of us appreciate the wonderful and miraculous work that is being done by modern science in bringing about the recovery and cure of these little tots upon whom for some reason known only to Himself the Almighty God has seen fit to place the hand of misfortune.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one parallel that I can draw, and that is the great Master of Galilee walking up and down the highways and byways of Palestine, making the lame and halt walk, the blind see, and healing the sick. Is it not a most wonderful thing that divine Providence has endowed the human mind with that genius and the human hand with that cunning which makes the performance of these modern miracles possible? Miracles, none the less, because they take time to perform instead of being instantaneous like the miracles of old. And to me the most wonderful thing of all is that some of this work is to be done in my home community, in a little hospital at Traverse City, Mich., made possible by and through the generosity of JIM COUZENS.

I only wish the people of my State knew JIM COUZENS as I knew him, and could have felt that great human heart throb for these youngsters. During the summer of 1935 Senator COUZENS was very ill and had several major operations at Mayo Hospital. His life was despaired of, but somehow he recovered sufficiently to take up his ordinary work in life, take his seat once more in the United States Senate, and later make a trip to Traverse City to dedicate the children's hospital.

It was after his operation and shortly after St. Valentine's Day in 1936 that I went to the Senate Chamber with a group of friends. He was called to the door, where we visited for a few minutes. During the course of that conversation something was said about the children's fund and about the wonderful work that was being done. Immediately the Senator's eyes began to gleam with happiness, and his face turned into a smile as he told us how just a few short weeks before, and on St. Valentine's Day, he had received 12 valentines from Caspian, Mich. Each valentine was filled with the names of children from that vicinity, and opposite the name of each child was written the particular thing that had been done for that child by the fund, each child having written his or her own name. I never saw anyone so pleased as the Senator was about those simple little valentines. He spoke about them feelingly, and then he turned to me and said:

> You know I haven't long to stay here, but it means a great deal to me to know that some of these little tots are going to say "God bless you" after I am gone.

That was the real JIM COUZENS.

Mr. Speaker, nearly 1,000,000 children benefited in some way or another through the Children's Fund of Michigan during the past 2 years. Thousands upon thousands of boys and girls in years to come are going to receive help through this fund, and each night as they say their evening prayers they will say, "God bless daddy, God bless mamma, and God bless JIM COUZENS." And during the summer of 1935, when he was so ill and his life was despaired of, fathers and mothers knelt by the bedside of their little children and with them sent their prayers to the divine throne that JIM COUZENS might stay with us just a little while longer. He did live a little longer. He lived long enough to help to dedicate that little hospital at Traverse City, Mich., and see the wonderful success of his work. I shall always feel that he was permitted to remain with us a little longer because of those prayers, for surely a most merciful God could not turn a deaf ear to the prayers of those thousands of children for the greatest benefactor they had since that day, 20 centuries ago, when the Master said:

> Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join these millions of boys and girls of yesterday, today, and tomorrow in saying "God bless JIM COUZENS." Here in the Nation's Capital, in the Halls of Congress, where he served so faithfully and so well, he took part in writing his Nation's history. Into the record of that history let it be indelibly written that this man—a statesman who walked among the greatest of the land as one of the great, who had had political honors heaped upon him; this industrialist whose mental genius helped to create one of the greatest industries the world has ever seen; this financier at whose magic touch things seemed to turn to gold; this philanthropist who gave more than $30,000,000 to charity—found his greatest joy and happiness not in the applause of the masses, not in the creation of the great industry, not in the accumulation of wealth, but he found his greatest joy and happiness in the satisfaction of giving and in the "God bless you" of the little children he had helped.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MCGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour and for other reasons, I would like to withdraw my request to speak at this time and ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on Friday next after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the disposition of legislation in order on that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman know what program is in order on that day?

Mr. MCGROARTY. No.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand it, we are going to take up the tax bill, and if the present program is carried out it will be 9 o'clock probably before the gentleman will be able to address the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], a member of the Ways and Means Committee, is present. May I ask him if the tax bill is coming up for consideration on Friday?

Mr. COOPER. It is the purpose to bring up the extension of the excise tax bill Friday. That is the arrangement announced by the majority leader.

Mr. SNELL. The majority leader also announced he intended to finish that bill Friday and it will take a long time.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman from California is going to discuss a question that I know will interest a great many Members of the House. I think he is much better fitted to discuss this question than any other Member. I would hate to see him waste his efforts on empty seats. I wish he might have an audience worthy of his address, but it is too late in the day to have a call of the House. I wish some arrangement could be made by which the gentleman from New York could have a half hour at the earliest possible date.

Mr. SNELL. Why does he not make an arrangement with the majority leader?

Mr. MICHENER. He will have to take his time about midnight on Friday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to call the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact there is already pending one special order for Friday to address the House after disposition of the legislative program. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD] has 30 minutes to address the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What is on the calendar for tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. In the temporary absence of the majority leader, it is the program to call up the Dies immigration bill under a special rule.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, how about Monday or Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. There are several special orders already for Monday and Tuesday. The gentleman could propound his request and take his chances on either one of those days.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have time to address the House on Monday, and I would be willing to sacrifice my time and let the gentleman have the time on Monday, and I will not ask for the time. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the time heretofore granted me on Monday next may be used by the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time heretofore granted him on Monday under the terms named in the order may be used by the gentleman from California. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

HOW THE WEALTHY ESCAPE PAYMENT OF TAXES THROUGH LOOPHOLES IN OUR TAX LAWS

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should applaud the courageous action of our President in disclosing some of the glaring loopholes in our tax system which are being used by many of our millionaires to avoid their just share of the tax burden. It is hard to see how some of our wealthy citizens can expect to enjoy all the privileges and benefits conferred upon them by the country and then try by ingenious methods through schemes proposed by clever tax attorneys to escape their just burden of Federal taxes, and thereby causing a heavier burden to fall upon the rest of our citizens. Tax dodgers of this sort are unworthy of being called American citizens, and I hope immediate steps will be taken to prosecute those engaged in such schemes with the view not only of collecting taxes which are justly due but also of taking away from them their status as American citizens through criminal prosecution and conviction. We do not want such creatures in our midst.

PRESIDENT ASKS ALL LOOPHOLES BE ELIMINATED

Of course, the President could only speak of a few of the tax-dodging schemes. I have been for a long time of the opinion that our revenue laws and their administration should undergo a complete overhauling. It is only by this means that we can ever hope to make our tax burden equal and uniform and raise sufficient revenues for the support of the Government.

SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT SAYS TAX INCOME FROM WHATEVER SOURCE DERIVED—TAX LOBBYISTS TAKE CHARGE

When our income-tax law was first enacted following the adoption of the sixteenth amendment we proceeded in drafting our law, so as to tax as income everything that was income under the Constitution. However, it was not long before the lobbyists and tax dodgers began to make themselves felt in the writing of our tax laws. They soon began their systematic attack on the sixteenth amendment which provides "the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived * * *", and now we find by Supreme Court decisions and loopholes in our tax laws that far more revenue escapes taxation than is being collected annually.

CAPITAL GAIN-AND-LOSS LOOPHOLES

No better example of this can be found than in the special exemptions granted large chains of corporations and holding companies in the tax-free reorganization provision of the Revenue Act of 1924 and subsequent acts. See section 112 of the Revenue Act of 1936, which, in paragraph after paragraph, provides that "no gain or loss shall be recognized in these transactions." I mentioned this matter in my speech of last year but as nothing has been done about it I wish to bring it up again. These tax exemptions were first written into the statute by the Mellon-Mills interests during the Revenue Acts of 1921 and 1924. It should be remembered that it was this same crowd that succeeded in getting our excess-profits tax repealed.

Now, why did the Mellon-Mills interests take all the time and trouble to provide for the exemption of these transfers of property pursuant to corporation reorganizations? It was to prevent certain income which the Supreme Court held we had the power to tax under the Constitution from bearing its just share of Federal taxation. Under the revenue acts prior to the Mellon regime Congress taxed all gains from transactions involving exchanges and reorganizations in the year in which such gains were realized.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCFARLANE. I yield for a question.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman has mentioned the excess-profits tax. I presume the gentleman is familiar with the fact that if the excess-profits tax had not been repealed after the war, the war debt and the entire national debt would have been fully paid by June 30, 1927. I inserted a statement, prepared by Government officials, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD within the past 2 years, which proves this statement to be true.

Mr. MCFARLANE. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I know that is correct.

The Supreme Court in a number of cases arising under these earlier acts held that gain was realized, in fact, in the year in which the exchange or reorganization took place. In order to dodge the effect of these decisions they succeeded in getting the exempting provisions enacted into law. A subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee appointed in 1934 to investigate tax-avoidance methods recognized the clever Mellon-made device and recommended that the provisions should be repealed. It was then estimated that the annual tax saving to be effected would amount to $18,000,000. According to the Mellon crowd, these provisions merely postponed the tax.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain excerpts, tables, data, and provisions of the revenue law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. In connection with this I wish to quote the following from the report of the Ways and Means Subcommittee on the Prevention of Tax Avoidance, prepared in connection with the Revenue Act of 1934:

The statute provides that upon the sale or exchange of property the entire amount of gain or loss shall be recognized, with certain exceptions. The exceptions are the exchange and reorganization provisions already referred to. If a taxpayer desires to take a loss, it is easy to arrange a transaction falling without the exceptions. On the other hand, if it is desired to pay no tax on the gain, the transaction can be so arranged as to come within the exceptions. In addition, losses from the sale or exchange of stocks and bonds are limited, to a large extent, to the gains from such sales or exchanges, so in many cases a stock or bond loss, even if recognized, could not be utilized by the taxpayer.

Instead of increasing the Government revenues, these provisions appear to result in a considerable loss of revenue. The theory of postponing the gain by shifting the original cost basis of the transferor over to the transferee, or by requiring the transferor to keep his original cost basis for the property he receives in exchange, does not compensate the Government for exempting the prior transaction from tax. This is due to the fact that in the year which the taxpayer chooses to realize the gain he may have heavy losses or the tax rates may be different. Death and other elements may also enter in to create a new cost basis for the property.

One of the main objections to the reorganization provisions is that the recognition of gain depends more upon the form of the transaction than upon the essential facts, undue importance being given to "expert advice." Therefore, in practice the sections sometimes result in double taxes and sometimes in complete tax exemption. In many cases the shifting of the cost basis of property over to a transferee corporation frequently causes the tax burden to fall upon the backs of new stockholders who have paid full market value for their stock.

The following examples show how the provisions of the present law are availed of to avoid taxes justly due the Government:

A owns a piece of undeveloped real property which cost him $100,000, but from which he is receiving no income. This property is now worth $600,000. He exchanges it for improved business property worth $600,000. Under the exchange provisions of existing law A realizes no gain from this exchange. Under the Revenue Act of 1913, and prior acts, he would have been taxable on a gain of $500,000. It is claimed that under existing law, A, by being required to retain his original cost of $100,000 for the improved property, does not escape tax on $500,000 gain, but that payment of such tax is postponed until such time as A sells the improved city property. However, this is not true. There are many ways in which A, under existing law, may escape the payment of any tax whatever on this gain or may materially reduce the amount of such tax. The following are some of the methods by which A may secure complete or partial tax avoidance with respect to this gain:

(1) He may elect to realize a gain in a year in which it is convenient to take substantial losses from other transactions, thereby materially reducing his tax or escaping tax altogether.

(2) If A had been taxed on the gain at the time of the exchange, he would have been subject to the full surtax rate if the undeveloped real property was acquired within 2 years prior to the exchange. By the exchange provisions he is enabled to convert such ordinary gain into a capital gain by holding the improved property for a period of 2 years computed from the time he acquired the unimproved property.

(3) If A dies before he sells the improved property, its cost basis is changed from the $100,000 cost of the original property to the value of such improved property at the time of his death. Thus, if the value of the improved property at the time of death is worth $600,000, and the executor or beneficiaries of A's estate sold the property, the Government would collect no income tax whatever on the transaction. Moreover, if the value at the date of death was $800,000 and the executor or beneficiaries sold the property for $600,000, there would be a deductible loss of $200,000.

(4) From a practical standpoint the exchange and reorganization provisions lead to tax avoidance, due to the difficulty of the persons administering the law in tracing the property through a series of exchanges and reorganizations.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. I was interested in the assertion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] that if the excess-profits tax had not been repealed the war debt would have been paid. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] immediately concurred in that statement and said it was a fact. We must realize that that is a mere presumption, based on the expectation business would have continued as it was during the war and the same amount of taxes would have been paid as were paid during the war.

Mr. McFARLANE. I yielded for a question. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. MICHENER. If the prediction made a year ago by the administration as to what the taxes would be this year were to be the guiding star the statement the gentleman has made would be absolutely untrue, would it not?

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman I may say that I have the figures on that question and will be pleased to include them as a part of my remarks, bearing out the statement made by my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. MICHENER. It all depends on estimates.

Mr. McFARLANE. Such estimates have been carefully made and proper allowances made.

The gentleman from Tennessee, Hon. Claude Kitchin, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in submitting the report accompanying the revenue bill of 1918, says:

Your committee has determined the proportion of the cost of the war that should be financed by taxation and by bonds, not upon the basis of previous experience, for there is no analogy in history, but upon a careful consideration of the effect of the fiscal policy upon the morale of the people, upon the inflation of prices, upon production, and with reference to the relative ability of the people to pay taxes now and after the war.

The war expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, was about $24,000,000,000, and the Revenue Act of 1918 which was passed unanimously was estimated to produce a revenue of about $8,000,000,000. The late Speaker Longworth, in closing the debate in favor of the bill, on September 20, 1918, in part said:

We are providing in this bill a sum of money equivalent to nearly one-third of the amount that it has cost this Nation to live from the first inauguration of George Washington down to the second inauguration of Woodrow Wilson, and we have done it, in my belief, without inflicting a burden upon wealth under which it cannot at least stagger and without demanding from American industry that energy and initiative which it must necessarily possess if our war program is to be prosecuted to the limit. * * * In a few minutes there will be flashed around the world the announcement that the representatives of the American people have unanimously passed a bill carrying $8,000,000,000 in taxes to prosecute the war.

Thus you will note from the above quotations of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the Speaker of the House at the time agreed that this tax bill, unanimously voted, was based upon the relative ability of the people to pay taxes then and after the war. Certainly the records of the Internal Revenue Department amply bear mute evidence to the accuracy of their statements for had the Republican Party not have repealed the war profits tax rates in 1921 but had allowed the rates included in the 1918 Revenue Act to continue in force, based on the actual amount of business transacted from 1918 to 1926 and the income received during those years we find was more than ample to have paid in full the national debt and have left a nice surplus, as shown by the following table:

Estimate of additional revenue that would have been derived under the income and excess-profits tax rates of the year 1918 continued in subsequent years, with effect upon the public debt by the application of such additional revenue thereto

NOTE.—It is assumed that business profits (net income) would not have been depressed by the high tax.

Let me quote further from the minority report of Mr. Kitchin to the Revenue Act of 1921:

An analysis of the statistics contained in the detailed report as to corporate incomes and excess-profits taxes * * * shows that 180 corporations making annually from $5,000,000 up to $3,000,000,000 and over (the Steel Corporation made over $500,000,000 net profits in 1918), had a net income of $2,554,000,000 in 1918, and while paying only $300,000,000 income tax, they paid $848,000,000 excess-profits taxes. One thousand and twenty-six corporations with a net income of $4,255,000,000, more than half of the total corporate income of all the 317,559 corporations, while paying only $533,000,000 income tax, paid $1,422,000,000 of excess-profits tax—that is, paid over one-half, or nearly two-thirds, of the entire excess-profits tax of all the corporations making reports. At a glance one will see that the proposed proposition is one to relieve a few hundred of the biggest profiteering corporations in the United States and not, as Secretary Mellon says, to unclog business.

An analysis of the returns as detailed in the reports of the Internal Revenue Commissioner from January 1, 1916, to January 1, 1921, shows that corporations in the United States made net profits of $47,000,000,000. After deducting all of the taxes they paid, including income, excess-profits tax, and other war taxes, they have a clear profit left of $38,000,000,000 * * * four-fifths of which was made by less than 10,000 corporations, and more than one-half of which was made by 1,026 of the big profiteering corporations.

Continuing, Mr. Kitchin said:

Let every Democrat and Republican bear in mind always that these same corporations were filling their coffers with these fabulous billions for the profits of their stockholders while our brave boys were spilling their blood in France for the protection and defense of their country. Remember, too, that not a large stockholder, officer, or director of one of these rapacious corporations ever faced a German gun, braved a danger, took a risk, made a sacrifice, or endured any suffering during the entire war, but stayed at home in safety, 3,000 miles from the danger line, and made of the war and its resulting stress on their Government and its people an opportunity to plunder and profiteer upon both to the extent of these inconceivable billions.

And from his deathbed he said further in this respect:

Why in the name of right and justice should these big profiteering corporations and millionaires and multimillionaires who filled their rapacious mouths with millions of blood money be relieved of taxation while we not only keep but increase the taxation of hundreds of thousands of weak corporations and keep the war income taxes on millions of our fellow citizens who, and whose sons, went to the trenches in defense and protection not only of our country but in defense of the profiteers and wealth of these same corporations and millionaires?

His words will live to forever haunt those who made possible the repeal of the war-profits taxes that relieve the war profiteers from paying their just portion of the tax burden heaped upon our country because of the war, and the repeal of these war-profits taxes allowed the above-mentioned well-known war profiteers to hold their huge profits made during the war and by repealing the war-profits rates allowed these war profiteers to escape their just portion of the tax burden and successive revenue acts have shifted the larger portion of the tax burdens from the rich to the poor, and deficits have been covered through successive bond issues which have averaged paying largely these same war profiteers, according to Government records, the sum of $15,826,225,907 in interest on their bond national debt from 1917 to May 29, 1937.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, that would have included a fair tax on the war profiteers.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; and there are no war profiteers after a war is over, so it makes it a physical impossibility.

Mr. McFARLANE. In that regard, as above pointed out, the tax would have taken some of the unfair and unjust profits the war profiteers made during the war and would have justly placed a sufficient amount of the vast surplus profits into the revenues to pay their just portion of the war debt.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman has evidently read in the newspapers the report of an interview given recently by a gentleman in New York, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. I am wondering when the gentleman includes certain excerpts in his extension of remarks if he will not insert that as an excerpt.

Mr. McFARLANE. I shall be pleased to cover that situation in passing.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I think I know what the gentleman's train of thought is. It just occurs to me that the statement of J. Pierpont Morgan, if correct, is the equivalent of saying, "I would favor a general law against horse theft, but at the same time, if I had an opportunity, I would steal a horse and think I was lucky in discharging my duty to my country and society if I could get away with it."

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman I may say—and the records of the Bureau of Internal Revenue will, I think, amply bear out the statement—that the Mellon-Morgan crowd have been more directly responsible for the loopholes which have been written into the tax law, through which you could drive several wagons and teams and through which hundreds of millions of dollars have escaped taxation, than any other crowd in this country.

Mr. MASSINGALE. If the gentleman will yield further, I ask the gentleman if he would mind giving his estimate of the moral philosophy of the gentleman who uttered that statement, according to the press release?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. He has none.

Mr. McFARLANE. Right. I do not think Mr. Morgan and his tax-dodging friends have what we in this country consider much moral philosophy. They have clearly shown that from time to time by the way they have been consistent tax dodgers, although they have made many millions. Mr. Morgan's own sworn testimony before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee recently was that he had paid no taxes to the Federal Government in 1930, 1931, and 1932, while at the same time he was paying taxes to Great Britain.

Now, my colleagues, I am sorrry to say that the Ways and Means Committee failed to follow the recommendations of its subcommittee to strike out these special exemptions from the law. We still have these exemptions with us, an inheritance from the Mellon regime. And to make matters worse, the road to tax evasion in these transactions was made easier at the last session when a change was made in the definition of control in section 112 (h) of the Revenue Act of 1936, which change I at that time opposed—see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, page 6715.

These special exemptions are responsible to a large extent for the set-up of many of the personal holding companies designed to evade our income taxes. The schemes incorporating yachts and country estates or organizing foreign personal holding companies referred to by the President in his message would not have been resorted to if these millionaires had been forced to pay a tax when they exchanged their property for stock in these corporations.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I wonder if the gentleman has had time to read the address which I inserted in the RECORD of yesterday on that very subject. In this address I point out that this is not a new thing at all we are encountering to which the President called attention in his message to the House, but that the practices at the time I wrote the speech which I delivered on the floor of the House on June 16, 1932, have been going on for at least 10 years. In that address I also pointed out that we were losing in Canada alone $250,000,000 a year, or for the 10-year period no less than $2,500,000,000. In view of the enormous increase in stealing and defrauding under that same law from that time to the present, if we can plug those loopholes we will have enough money to balance the Budget at the present time.

Mr. McFARLANE. May I say I have read the able address which the gentleman delivered in June of 1932, in which he mentioned some of the specific exemptions which have been pointed out by the President in his recent message. I am heartily in accord with the gentleman's statement, and am hopeful that in this House in the near future we will be able to have an opportunity to vote upon a measure which will eliminate the many known loopholes existing in our revenue laws.

CONGRESS TO BLAME FOR LOOPHOLES

By writing into the statute these exemptions we have actually encouraged this sort of tax avoidance as well as the building up of enormous chains of corporations. I say now, as I have repeatedly said here on the floor of the House, something must be done toward correcting this terrible situation. Our revenue laws are filled with provisions granting special relief to privileged classes.

I have spoken on this question, as the record shows, for the past several years, pointing out these loopholes. These loopholes have surely been known to the members of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance, and to other Members of this House. While we have had insufficient votes to eliminate them, the record speaks for itself; some of us have tried our best to stop the loopholes and prevent our tax committees from continuing to provide more loopholes.

These special exemptions have crept in gradually when each revenue act has been enacted and have resulted in not only creating inequities toward the great mass of our Federal taxpayers but have also greatly cluttered up and made cumbersome the provisions of our statute itself.

BANKS PAY LITTLE TAXES

I will now mention a few of these special exemptions. I think you must all realize that the banks are among the most favored of all beneficiaries of Government exemptions. Not only does the Government give them aid in times of adversity but it also protects them from their just share of taxation in times of prosperity. We all know that it is a notorious fact that banks pay their employees low wages. Yet, in the Social Security Act, providing pensions for employees in their old age, we specifically exempt the banks and left the Government through relief appropriations to provide for these destitute employees in their old age. Moreover, our income-tax provisions have been so written that banks practically pay no income tax at all. Mr. Fleming, president of the American Bankers Association, and others have been quite active here looking after their interests.

The following table compares the gross income of the banks with their net income during the 3-year period from 1931 to 1933, inclusive.

NATIONAL BANKS

	Gross income	Net income
1931	$268,000,000	$24,000,000
1932	76,000,000	5,000,000
1933	48,000,000	9,000,000

STATE BANKS, PRIVATE BANKS, ETC.

1931	$516,000,000	$59,000,000
1932	148,000,000	10,000,000
1933	91,000,000	8,000,000

While it is difficult to compare income for revenue purposes with the actual income because of the fact that reports from the Federal Reserve System are made on fiscal-year basis, the following comparison of the fiscal year 1933 with the calendar year's statistics shown by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows the great disparity between income of national banks as reported to the Federal Reserve System to that returned for income-tax purposes. National banks for the fiscal year 1933 reported an actual income of $216,000,000. These same banks for income-tax purposes showed, so far as those reporting income, a net of $5,353,000; so far as those reporting losses, an aggregate loss of $216,109,000. A tax of only $552,000 was paid by all the national banks for 1933.

Now, I do not want to be unfair to the banks. Of course, they have kept their paid lobbyists in Washington to represent their interests. But that is all right; they have a perfect right to do this. It is the fault of Congress in allowing their paid lobbyists to get these special exemptions written into our tax and other laws.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. IZAC. Is it not true that the national banks are exempt from the payment of personal-property tax as well?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am not sure about that.

Mr. IZAC. I believe that is true.

Mr. McFARLANE. As I have just pointed out, they pay practically no income tax at all, and this is because of the laws Congress has written which exempt them from paying such income taxes.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

It is a well-known fact that a number of the banks hold tax-exempt securities. But not only is the interest on these tax-exempt securities exempt from taxation in the hands of the banks but they are allowed a deduction for interest paid on all deposits, even though such deposits are invested on tax-exempt income. See section 23 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1936. Why should a bank get a deduction for expenses incurred in connection with the earnings of tax-exempt income and all other taxpayers be denied relief?

In the Revenue Act of 1934 Congress limited the allowance of losses from the sale or exchange of capital assets to the amount of the gains from such exchanges, plus $2,000. This limitation was applied to all taxpayers with the exception of banks and trust companies. Banks and trust companies were permitted to take losses from bonds or other evidences of indebtedness regardless of the amount and apply them against their other income; and in the Revenue Act of 1936 levying a tax for the first time upon the undistributed profits of corporations banks were specifically excepted. See section 14 (d) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1936.

CHECK TAX REPEALED

We all remember what a good revenue producer the check tax was which was first imposed in the Revenue Act of 1932. If this tax were still on the books, we would be collecting about $50,000,000 annually. However, because the collection of this tax forced the banks to do some detail work in turning the proceeds over to the Government they did not like it; and through a powerful influence secured its termination, although a great many of our excise taxes which are more burdensome and should have come off first still remain on the books to plague the harassed and the heavy-laden.

INSURANCE COMPANIES FAVORED

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to know why we cannot pass a penal statute for defrauding the Government by doing these things and put some teeth in it?

Mr. McFARLANE. The only answer I can give the gentleman is that we do not seem to be able to get any legislation of that kind out of the Tax and Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate. As the gentleman knows, we have to have legislation reported here on the floor in order to be able to offer amendments and consider the same; and such amendments must be held to be germane, under the rigid rules of the House, before we can have an opportunity of voting upon any measure of that kind.

Mr. KELLER. Why not write a criminal statute and let it go before the Judiciary Committee and be reported out as a separate matter?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield for a question.

Mr. MICHENER. The answer to the gentleman's question is that there is plenty of law with teeth in it. The trouble is there is no law against doing the things that these people have been doing, and therefore we must close up the loopholes.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman I may say that this Congress is directly responsible for the loopholes in the tax laws, placed there largely through the influence and at the direction of the lobbyists for the corporate and personal wealth of the Nation. We have no legitimate complaint about the many loopholes in the law. They are placed there by virtue of the action of Congress. However, most of the gentlemen sitting here before me voted against these loopholes, but we were in the minority. As shown by the records, about 80 percent of the known existing loopholes were inserted in another body but, of course, were agreed to by the House usually by agreeing to a little-understood conference report, usually presented late in the session. And, as is well known, under the rules of the House, these reports are usually acted upon without much explanation or debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Four years ago Mr. Morgan came here to Washington and went before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and admitted that he and his 19 kings of finance had paid no income tax for 3 years, and got away with it, and went away from Washington popular for the first time in his life. Then we passed a revenue bill which was largely designed to plug up loopholes, and now, apparently, there are just as many loopholes in the law as before. It seems to be the same old story of the burglar and the safe.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think the record will speak for itself.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The burglar seems to be always ahead of the game, and if the gentleman will permit me to say so, we will never get at the root of the thing until we put some of the biggest tax dodgers in this country in jail.

Mr. McFARLANE. In reply to the gentleman I may say I think he is correct. However, to do this we will have to tighten up our tax laws and particularly straighten out and reorganize our administrative set-up. If you will bear with me a short while, I am going to specifically point out these loopholes and explain how they got into our tax laws.

Mr. MEEKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. For a question; yes.

Mr. MEEKS. As a practical matter, when talking about closing loopholes, does the gentleman think we could devise an act that would eliminate major loopholes of any character or can pass any act and know what the future will be as to such loopholes?

Mr. McFARLANE. If the gentleman will study the Revenue Act of 1936, I believe he will agree with me that the loopholes in the existing law are known loopholes and are there by vote of the Congress, and, as the gentleman has suggested, it is hard to write a bulletproof law on any subject so that shrewd lawyers cannot find supposed flaws through which they may claim exemptions or find loopholes for their clients. However, most of the loopholes in our tax laws are clearly written provisions which permit these special-privilege groups to intentionally be exempt from tax payment, as I have already pointed out and will continue to point out.

Mr. MEEKS. Will not the ingenuity of tax experts, lawyers, and financiers always find loopholes?

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman I will say this, and I think the record bears it out: They did not find these glaring loopholes in the original revenue act when it was first written into law, but since the Mellon-Mills machine, which was in control of the Government from 1921 to 1932, have rewritten our tax laws these loopholes have appeared, and that group largely has been responsible for writing loopholes into the revenue laws that are now there.

Mr. MEEKS. Can a revenue act be devised that will eliminate important loopholes, so-called? You may close these; but what about the future? Can we make a law that will be free from other big loopholes through which you can drive private trains and airplanes, or are we helpless in that regard? You know Mr. Morgan referred to Congress as being rather stupid in making these laws, and tried to put the blame on Congress. I am interested in knowing whether we are facing in a practical sense an impossible task.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman, let me say that as Jefferson and other good Democrats have repeatedly said, eternal vigilance is the price of our democratic form of government. It just takes careful revision of the revenue laws and a tightening up of the administration of our laws all the way up and down the line. The loopholes or jokers once having been eliminated, it is then the duty of the people to keep Representatives in Congress who will not permit the wealthy to again place these unfair provisions in our laws. There is no doubt in my mind but that we can largely eliminate loopholes and when we get good administration and construction of the law by our courts, our tax difficulties will be largely solved.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; for one question, and then I must get along.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has said that these loopholes originated during the Mellon regime from 1921 to 1932. Has he forgotten that we have revised the tax laws during the last 5 years under the Roosevelt administration at least 5 times, and that these loopholes of which he complains still seem to be present?

Mr. McFARLANE. If the gentleman had listened to all my remarks, he would know I have let the chips fall where they may, and I expect to continue doing that.

Mr. MICHENER. That is fine.

Mr. McFARLANE. I have traced the record as made and have pointed out the guilty parties, as to who placed those loopholes in the law. I want to give Mr. Mellon and the gentleman's crowd, the Republicans, proper credit for the loopholes they have put there, and I want to give proper credit to this administration for the loopholes written under it. It is very evident, however, that the tax lobbies and that group play no favorites, Republicans or Democrats. They are interested in evading the taxes, and they get the loopholes in there in every way possible, regardless of which party is in power.

INSURANCE COMPANIES FAVORED

Turning to the insurance companies, we also find they are in the privileged class. Under the Revenue Acts of 1917 and 1918 life-insurance companies were taxed in the same manner as other corporations. The insurance companies, however, did not like this and sought special legislation favorable to them. The result was special provisions were inserted in the 1921 act which only required them to include as income receipts from investments. From this figure, in addition to all investment expenses, a special arbitrary reduction was allowed of 4 percent of the mean of the reserve fund required by law and held at the beginning and end of the taxable year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. This turned out to be a much larger figure than was required to maintain the reserve. To the extent that this deduction was in excess of the requirements, the deduction constituted a gratuity to the life-insurance companies. The insurance companies, however, were not satisfied even with this gratuity, and as a result of litigation secured refunds in 1927 for back taxes in the amount of approximately $35,000,000, including interest.

PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES EXEMPT

The subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee in its prevention-of-tax-avoidance report, made in connection with the Revenue Act of 1934, suggested a special tax upon personal holding companies and defined these companies as being any corporation, 80 percent of whose gross income for the taxable year was derived from rents, royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and gains from the sale of securities, and whose voting stock to the extent of more than 50 percent was owned by not more than five individuals at the close of the taxable year. Before this recommendation was finally enacted into law, its effectiveness was considerably lessened by the lobby interests.

REAL-ESTATE DEALERS FAVORED

The real-estate people succeeded in exempting rents from this classification. Therefore, a personal holding company, 80 percent of whose income is derived from rents, is not subject to this special tax, even though its stock is owned by less than five individuals. (See section 351 of the Revenue Act of 1936.) This opens up an easy avenue for a rich man to avoid surtaxes, by incorporating an apartment house or an office building, and have his corporation collect and hold the rents.

PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES FAVORED

In addition to this special exemption the personal holding company itself is accorded an exemption which is denied to all other corporations. In the Revenue Act of 1934 and subsequent revenue acts the ordinary corporation cannot take a deduction for a capital loss in excess of its capital gains, plus $2,000. This limitation was placed in the law to prevent a corporation from wiping out its ordinary income by means of capital losses. However, personal holding companies are specifically exempted from this limitation. The losses which are disallowed to the ordinary corporation are specifically granted to the personal holding company by a special provision of law.

CONSOLIDATED RETURNS ABOLISHED THEN REVIVED

I was gratified that in the 1934 Revenue Act we succeeded in abolishing the consolidated returns, a haven by which the large corporations were able to secure great tax advantage at the expense of their small competitors. However, in the Revenue Act of 1936 there was inserted a provision which had the effect of restoring some of the privileges granted the large affiliated corporations. I refer to section 112 (b) (6) of the Revenue Act of 1936, the adoption of which I opposed because of the exemption which it gives to large corporations. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 74th Cong., 2d sess., p. 6715.)

A simple case will show how this section works out in practice.

Corporation A paid $100,000 for the stock of corporation B. It liquidates corporation B and receives on liquidation property which had a basis of $300,000 in the hands of B. Corporation A has realized a gain of $200,000. Under the Revenue Act of 1936 this gain is not only not recognized at the time of liquidation, but corporation A is permitted to take over the property of corporation B, at its basis in corporation B's hands, namely $300,000. Therefore, there is a gain of $200,000 which the Government will not be able to tax. This is certainly a gift to the large corporations, which paid little or nothing for the stock of their subsidiaries and which on liquidation has reaped an enormous profit from such investments.

I wish to point out that the Congress, while postponing the gain upon liquidation required in the Revenue Act of 1935 that the parent company use as its basis for the property received upon liquidation, the amount it paid for the subsidiary stock. In other words, if the parent company should dispose of the property received upon liquidation in the example given for $300,000, the Government would have collected under the Revenue Act of 1935 the $200,000 which was postponed at the time of liquidation. But the lobbyists were not satisfied with this. They wanted a subsidy of this $200,000. They wanted the Government to exempt entirely this $200,000 from tax. And, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to find that they got away with in the Revenue Act of 1936. This same crowd tried to exempt the loan sharks from the personal holding company too, but we did wake up in time to catch on to what they were doing and stopped the loan-shark amendment.

OTHER REORGANIZATION BENEFITS

Not only does this section operate unfairly against the corporation which has actually made a large cash investment in the stock of another corporation by denying to that corporation any opportunity to get back its investment before being subject to the income tax but it also permits corporations to buy out other corporations at a mere song and take over for the cost not the amount it invested in such corporations but the basis of the property held by such corporations, which in many cases is many times in excess of the investment.

Thus this section—section 112 (b) (6) of the Revenue Act of 1936—which was written into the 1936 bill by the Senate committee, follows in the footsteps of the Mellon crowd and creates a new field for tax evasion.

SAME OLD TAX LOBBYISTS CONTROL

This is another example of how unscrupulous lobbyists have succeeded in enacting in the closing hours of legislation special provisions to protect their interests. As a rule most of these lobbyists are the same old crowd. They operate successfully under both Republican and Democratic administrations. In fact, this is the same crowd which sought in the Revenue Act of 1932 to provide a special subsidy to the wealthy estates to let them out of the estate tax. This latter provision would not only have cost the Federal Government an enormous amount of revenue from the estate tax but would even have affected the death taxes collected by the States. In fact, it would have required refunds on the part of both the State and Federal Government of moneys which had already been collected and applied for public purposes. Indeed, it was at the insistence of Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania, because of pressure exerted from Pennsylvania tax authorities, that the effect of this scheme was brought to light and its iniquity disclosed. I am deeply concerned that these same people while unsuccessful in this attempt were successful in getting this special subsidy for their wealthy corporate clients enacted into law in the Revenue Act of 1936.

EXISTING LOOPHOLES PREVIOUSLY POINTED OUT

In my speech of last year I pointed out the history of the capital-gains provision of the present revenue laws. I showed how special interests had succeeded in enacting this measure under the guise of relief from some of the burdensome taxes in the case of "* * * the sale of farms, mineral properties, and other capital assets * * *."

I also pointed out that while the sponsors of this provision are continually pointing to the treatment of capital gains under the British tax laws as being exempt from tax, in contrast to our treatment of similar gains, that a survey of British law does not seem to support such a conclusion. These sponsors fail to tell you that this is a country of great speculation, in contrast to a reasonably stable price condition of property in Great Britain.

The enormous loss in revenue which the Government sustained in the years 1925 to 1929, inclusive, by the reason of this subsidy has been estimated by Mr. Herbert S. Wood, Washington, D. C., former Bureau of Efficiency expert, at $750,000,000—hearings before the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, Seventy-third Congress, second session, Revenue Act, 1934, page 174.

NEW LOOPHOLES ADDED UNDER THIS ADMINISTRATION

It also appears that the Ways and Means Committee attempted in 1934 to partly stop the loopholes created by the insertion of this provision in the revenue law. However, Mr. Wood also estimates that if the provisions which the Ways and Means Committee inserted in 1934—section 117 of the Revenue Act of 1936—had been in effect for the years 1925 to 1929, inclusive, the loss in revenue on this account would have been about $1,000,000,000. It thus appears that in attempting to partly stop the loopholes in 1934, the Ways and Means Committee created a greater avenue of tax avoidance. One of the major difficulties of the present scheme, like that of its predecessor, is that it encourages holding property for a period of years in order to secure a reduced rate of tax, thereby depriving the Government of its annual revenues. This has been condemned by many prominent tax economists as unscientific and arbitrary. It is especially designed to allow the maximum amount of tax exemption for stock-market manipulators in lieu of complete exemption as now advocated by the voices of the Wall Streeters. These provisions closely follow the method of operating in Wall Street, where the slogan is "Take your losses; let your profits run." Under section 117 of the Revenue Act of 1936, the quicker a speculator takes his losses the greater the deduction allowed him, while, on the other hand, there is less tax on the profits if he lets them "run."

NONRESIDENT ALIENS EXEMPT

And in the 1936 Revenue Act we completely exempted foreigners from the capital-gains tax, even though they realized enormous gains trading in our markets. This creates an unfair and discriminatory situation in favor of foreigners and to the detriment of our own citizens. Foreigners can now come to this country and make enormous profits on stocks and bonds sales in our markets and take the profits out of the country tax free. Our own American citizens cannot compete with these foreigners because our citizens have to pay the capital-gains tax, whereas foreigners are exempt—section 143 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1936.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield for a question.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Theodore Roosevelt, former President, repeatedly made this statement, that many of these large corporations were employing the most astute and best lawyers to advise the corporations not how to comply with the law but how to evade the law. Could the gentleman suggest whether some measure could be employed to bring criminal actions against those attorneys who prostitute their high calling in advising their clients how to evade and circumvent the law?

Mr. McFARLANE. I think it is the duty of Congress to so write the law that these shrewd tax attorneys cannot twist and the courts construe it away. The blame lies largely right here with the Congress.

PENSION TRUST LOOPHOLE

The same old crowd which has succeeded in getting legislation for privileged classes in the past was responsible for the subsidy granted in the case of "pension trust" under the guise of helping the small-salaried wage earner of corporations. See section 165 of the Revenue Act of 1936. These trusts have been utilized by wealthy officers of corporations to permit them to accumulate tax free large sums of money. The effect of this legislation is well explained in the following quotation from the Commerce Clearing House Service for 1937, volume 3, page 7035:

> It is possible for a taxpayer to deduct as expenses of his business contributions to a pension trust for the benefit of all or some of his employees, although the employees are not taxable with respect to these contributions until they actually receive moneys from the trust. The trust itself is exempt from tax. The taxpayer may also prorate over a 10-year period a deduction for a reasonable amount contributed to the trust, as a pension reserve in respect of the services of his employees during prior years. Officers of a corporation will be included under the head of employees. This makes it possible for a corporation to take deductions during the current year for pensions to be paid to its key men which will not be taxable to them until received by them.

STOCK-TRANSFER MANIPULATIONS

We have attempted in the revenue laws to prevent paper losses by denying a taxpayer a loss from the sale of stock where he buys such stock back within a certain period. However, this provision may be easily circumvented by a bona-fide reacquisition of such stock by another member of the taxpayer's family. In addition, while we have restricted losses between members of a family or between stockholder and a controlled corporation, by means of dealing through a third party, this provision can be made practically of no effect.

ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS' RENTS AND RATIONS EXEMPT

The President mentioned in his message about a retired American Army officer establishing a Canadian citizenship to avoid his just share of American taxes. It is a well-known fact that Army and Navy officers do not pay an income tax on all their compensation. In addition to their salaries, they receive additional amounts for accommodation quarters and subsistence amounting to over $20,000,000 annually. They do not pay a tax on such additional amounts. On the other hand, if an ordinary taxpayer receives as compensation for his services rendered a salary and in addition thereto living quarters and rations, the value to such person of the quarters furnished is treated as income and subject to tax. Now, why is the Army and Navy given this special privilege? It is due to an absurd decision by the Court of Claims, letting the Army and Navy out of the tax and yet forcing all other taxpayers to pay.

COURT OF CLAIMS DECISIONS

This decision was, as I remember, the Jones case (60 Ct. Cl. 552), rendered under a Republican administration. The decision was so outrageous that Republican Attorney General Mitchell prepared to take steps to appeal it to the Supreme Court, but the powerful Army and Navy lobby exerted so much pressure that he was forced to abandon this appeal and let this decision of the Court of Claims stand as final; and because of this decision, Army and Navy people were given large refunds and exempted in the future from paying taxes on income to which all our other citizens were liable to pay taxes thereon.

Further, I wish to point out that the Supreme Court in Miles v. Graham (268 U. S. 501), held that a judge of the Court of Claims was not liable upon his salary. In this case Judge Graham, of the Court of Claims, sued to recover the income tax paid on his salary for the years 1919 and 1920. Now, as a result of this decision, all these judges whose cases were not barred by the statute of limitations received refunds of the taxes paid on their salaries in the past and refrained from paying any taxes on their salaries in the future.

This decision was based upon the misapprehension that the Court of Claims was a constitutional court and not a legislative court. In a subsequent case, the Supreme Court recognized its error in regarding the Court of Claims as a constitutional court and specifically stated that it was a legislative court and not a constitutional court. However, this case might be regarded as dicta in this respect as the Court in that case was not passing directly upon the status of the Court of Claims but upon the status of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. But in another case, the Court was directly passing on the status of the Court of Claims in determining whether or not the Economy Act was applicable to the salaries of those judges. It held in Williams v. United States (289 U. S. 553), that the Court of Claims was a legislative court and that, therefore, the constitutional prohibition against diminishing the salaries of its judges did not apply. Therefore, there is now no doubt that the decision of the Supreme Court in Miles against Graham was clearly erroneous and these judges, even under the decisions of the Supreme Court, should pay income taxes on their salaries. Since the judges of the Court of Claims must fully realize that the decision in the case of Miles against Graham is erroneous, I think it is their patriotic duty to pay into the Treasury the taxes which are properly due upon the inclusion of their salaries in income subject to the income tax. I understand that in the last year or two these judges have paid taxes on their current salaries but that they have not paid taxes on their back salaries or returned to the Treasury the moneys which were erroneously refunded to them under the Miles against Graham decision. I think it would be very helpful to the Congress if the Ways and Means Committee would secure from the Treasury information as to the years for which these judges have paid taxes on their salaries, the years for which erroneous refunds of the taxes paid on their salaries were made as a result of the Miles against Graham decision, and the amount of such refunds, if any, which were paid back into the Treasury by these judges, giving this information with respect to each judge now sitting on the Court of Claims.

Now, because the Court of Claims is a legislative court and its judges are our employees, the President cannot do anything about this court. This was clearly established in the Humphreys case (295 U. S. 602), in which the Supreme Court pointed out that the Court of Claims was independent of Executive control, but being a legislative court and not a constitutional court was directly under the control of the Congress, its creator. In making plans for the reorganization of the Government, the President's hands are tied so far as the Court of Claims is concerned. This court, being our creature, and its judges being our employees, the responsibility lies with us to see that it is composed of men who will reflect honor and credit upon the judicial office. Some of us have undoubtedly heard statements made that some of these judges represent the Mellon interests and even secured their appointment through the Mellon influence. I have not had the opportunity to fully investigate these charges, but in at least one instance these charges appear to have some foundation. I refer to the appointment of Benjamin Littleton to the Court of Claims. There appears to be ample justification from the hearings of the Couzens Committee investigating the Internal Revenue Bureau (vol. V, pp. 2644–2646 and pp. 2668–2664) that this plum was given to Benjamin Littleton as a reward for losing certain cases in western Pennsylvania involving violations of the liquor laws. I am putting into the RECORD the evidence brought out at this public hearing, but first I wish to state in my own words just what this evidence shows.

It appears that Benjamin Littleton came into the Bureau of Internal Revenue as an obscure attorney in the office of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue. When he was there, that office had nothing to do with the enforcement of the prohibition laws. There was in the Treasury at that time a Bureau of Prohibition and the legal department of the Bureau of Prohibition was headed by a man by the name of Britt, who does not appear to have even been acquainted with Mr. Littleton. Prosecutions for violations of the liquor laws were at that time handled entirely by the Department of Justice, under the direction of Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, who headed a division organized for that purpose. Now, Mrs. Willebrandt has pointed out that this division was amply staffed to take care of prohibition violations and did not need men from the Treasury for that purpose but there were certain indictments pending against certain persons in western Pennsylvania for violation of the liquor laws in which Andrew Mellon was vitally interested. He wanted these cases taken care of. What did he do? He took Benjamin Littleton, an obscure attorney, out of the office of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, mind you, he was not even in the legal division of the Prohibition Bureau and had him appointed Special Assistant to the Attorney General to try these cases. Mrs. Willebrandt stated in the hearings that she did not know of any reason why this appointment should have been made to handle these cases and that she actually protested against this appointment, as her regular staff was quite capable of handling these cases. But Andy Mellon insisted upon this appointment and his request was granted. Here is what the record shows happened to these cases when they were put in Mr. Littleton's charge:

Mr. MANSON. What was the outcome of these cases?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. One case was tried. The Friedman case was tried and lost, and the rest of them at Mr. Littleton's request were nolle prossed. The request was made to nolle prosse the cases, and when the motion to nolle prosse was presented to the judge he refused to grant it.

Mr. MANSON. Upon what ground did he refuse to nolle prosse the cases? Is it not a fact the judge refused to nolle prosse those cases upon the ground that the case that was tried had not been properly presented?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. It was so reported to me; yes, sir.

Mr. MANSON. Did not you try one of these cases?

Mrs. WILLIBRANDT. I?

Mr. MANSON. Yes.

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Not any that Mr. Littleton had anything to do with.

Mr. MANSON. Was a conviction had in some of these cases, involving the same matter?

Mrs. WILLEBRANDT. Not any that Mr. Littleton had anything to do with. (Vol. V, hearings, Investigation of Bureau of Internal Revenue, p. 2644.)

And then the testimony at the hearings show that in other cases of this group involving bribery in western Pennsylvania, which Mr. Littleton had nothing to do with, convictions were obtained. And on page 2669 of these same hearings it is pointed out that in the only case Mr. Littleton tried he did not even call as a witness the principal witness upon whose testimony the grand jury relied in returning the indictment. So Mr. Littleton succeeded in doing a real favor for Andrew Mellon in getting these cases dismissed. At this point I wish to insert for the benefit of the House the full record on this matter, which appears in the published hearings of the Investigation of the Bureau of Internal Revenue by the Couzens' select committee, volume V, pages 2644–2646, and pages 2668–2669:

Now, this man Littleton, after these cases were disposed of, went back to his old job, but he did not have to wait long for his reward. When the Board of Tax Appeals was created in 1924 Andrew Mellon recommended this obscure attorney to be a member of the Board of Tax Appeals and succeeded in getting the appointment for him. He stayed on the Board of Tax Appeals for some years and then a vacancy was created on the Court of Claims. And he saw a chance to get a lifetime appointment on the Court of Claims. So his friend Andy Mellon succeeded in getting this plum, too. And there he sits in a lifetime job, drawing a salary of $12,500 a year, his reward for mishandling these prohibition cases. Is this the kind of a man we want in our judicial system? We must remember that the Court of Claims is our baby and our responsibility.

Of course, I know that there are some who will say that these judges cannot be touched because they are appointed for life. But this is not true. This is not a constitutional court and these judges have no vested right in their offices. I really feel that this matter ought to be fully investigated, and if these charges can be substantiated, I think that we ought to reorganize the court and purge it of the Mellon influence.

I also wish to make a few remarks about these judges resisting the provisions of the Economy Act when all Federal employees, including even Members of Congress, were forced to take a reduction in their salaries due to the depressed condition of the country's finances. Instead of patriotically accepting a reduction in their salaries, which all other Federal employees did, they brought suit to force the Government to pay them their full-time salaries even though they knew their country was in financial difficulties. And not only did the judges of the Court of Claims adopt this unpatriotic course but also the judges of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

The judges of the Court of Claims lost their case because the Supreme Court held that they were a legislative court, but the judges of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia won their case and took this money from their country in its hour of need. Now, let us see what array of attorneys were employed by these judges to raise legal obstructions to their moral duty to accept this reduction. Now, in the Court of Claims case a judge by the name of Williams was selected for the test case, and the attorneys handling this case for the judges were George A. King with whom George R. Shields and Herman J. Galloway were on the brief. It is a well-known fact that these attorneys make quite a specialty of handling cases before the Court of Claims, most of their business coming from this source. In the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, a judge by the name of O'Donoghue was selected for the test case, and the attorneys handling this case for the judges were John W. Davis, John S. Flannery, with whom George E. Hamilton and Daniel W. O'Donoghue, Jr., were on the brief. Now, both of these cases were argued at the same time before the Supreme Court, and I think the country ought to know what these judges paid for the services of this brilliant array of legal talent. Did these judges pay to these attorneys the same fees which these attorneys would have charged their ordinary clients for handling such matters? If they did not, if they did not charge them as much as they would have charged their ordinary clients, I think these attorneys have created for themselves an undue advantage with respect to cases which they might try before these courts to the disadvantage of attorneys handling the other side of such cases. If this is true, it cannot be longer said that these judges are exercising independent and unbiased judgment in handing down decisions in which those attorneys appear. So to remove any cloud of suspicion from those judges that they are no longer qualified to decide cases in an impartial manner, I think that it is their duty to make a public disclosure of the amounts they paid to these attorneys for their services.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS

I spoke on February 18 and reviewed many of our Supreme Court decisions and pointed out from their decisions how they have repeatedly held in favor of the utilities and the wealthy of the Nation and against the rights of the masses. In reviewing only a few of these cases I pointed out how the Supreme Court had held in favor of the special interests, to the detriment of the masses, as follows:

Decision	Issue	Loss in revenue
Collector v. Day	Taxability of State, county, and municipal employees.	$165,000,000
Pollock case	Power to tax income	1,800,000,000
Eisner v. McComber	Stock dividends	1,060,000,000
National Life Insurance Co	Reduction allowance for reserves by tax-exempt interest.	97,500,000
Railroad Retirement Act	Constitutionality of act	100,000,000
Neiner v. Donnan	Gift in contemplation of death	5,000,000
Nichols v. Coolidge	do	10,000,000
Blodgett v. Holden	Gift tax	3,500,000
Guffey Coal Act	Constitutionality of act	1,000,000
Agricultural Adjustment Act	do	1,017,000,000
May v. Heiner	Creation of trusts	25,000,000
Power rate cases 6-year loss		6,000,000,000
Total		10,290,000,000

A complete showing of all cases, including a study of all excessive utility rates permitted under the Supreme Court decisions, it is believed on good authority, would more than double this amount.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Our distinguished colleague from West Virginia [Mr. RAMSAY] has introduced this afternoon a bill which will make it a penitentiary offense for these big corporations to evade the law in the manner which was indicated in the President's message. Does not the gentleman think that is one way we can stop this evasion?

Mr. McFARLANE. That will be one of the many ways, but it will require a rewriting of the revenue act almost in its entirety to stop these loopholes. We will have to have that kind of relief before we can get very far.

Mr. DIES. I might call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the morning paper there was a statement that under our tax-exempt bonds it is more profitable for a man with a million dollars to buy tax-exempt bonds than to operate an industry and make a million dollars and pay taxes.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think that is true. However, had the Ways and Means Committee followed the recommendations of one of their counsel and the decisions of the Supreme Court, they would have years ago enacted an excise tax that would have reached such tax-exempt securities (Pacific Co. v. Johnson, 285 U. S. 480).

PARTNERSHIP LOOPHOLE

The following, taken from the Brooklyn Law Review of May 1936, shows how wealthy families can avoid high surtaxes through partnership arrangements:

The case of Commissioner v. Olds is indicative of the lengths to which one can go in employing the partnership as a means of escaping the higher brackets of the income surtaxes without destroying the managerial control over the property by the family's principal breadwinner. The respondent, who conducted a dock and timber business had three daughters whom, according to the testimony, he desired to train in the handling of large sums of money and among whom he wished to divide his property during his lifetime so as to avoid any family disputes after his death. Accordingly, he entered into a written agreement to sell to each daughter a one-fourth interest in his business. Upon the execution of the agreement, each daughter executed to the respondent her promissory note for $400,000, payable on demand without interest. It was stipulated in the agreement that the business should be conducted by the respondent in his own or any other name that he might choose; that the daughters should draw out of the profits of the business only such amounts as he saw fit to pay them and as they might need for their living and comfort during his lifetime; that they should have the privilege of looking over the books of the company and everything pertaining to the business at all times; and that, if at any time any of them should become dissatisfied with the way the business was being conducted and should think her interest was being impaired, he would return to her her note and take over her interest.

Upon the completion of this partnership agreement, entries were made on the books of the business debiting the respondent and crediting the daughters with the amounts represented by the notes; the following year further entries were made showing that a one-fourth interest in the business had been transferred to each of the daughters; and in each succeeding year withdrawals of profits were debited to the parties receiving them, with the result that at the close of each business year the books showed net balances in favor of the parties in different amounts. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue claimed that the respondent was taxable individually with all of the profits made by the so-called partnership, but both the Board of Tax Appeals and the Circuit Court of Appeals held that a bona-fide partnership had been created and that consequently the respondent was taxable only as to one-fourth of the partnership income. * * *

Not only can a properly constructed family partnership, by avoiding the surtaxes, sharply reduce the total family income-tax bill, but it can also be employed to reduce inheritance and estate taxes. Thus, if a father makes a gift to his children of a portion of his interest in his business establishment, the agreement, although it constitutes an immediate transfer of a legal interest and therefore subject to the Federal gift tax, nevertheless, on that same principle escapes the higher Federal estate and State inheritance taxes. Moreover, if the business is prosperous, the value of each child's interest in the business upon the death of the father may be greater than that at the time of the gift; and to that extent, the inter-vivos transfer results in a net saving. And, finally, the facts of the Olds case indicate a technique for escaping even the gift tax. There the wife and children "purchased" a share in the business owned by their chief breadwinner and paid for their interests by giving him demand notes.

By annual gifts by the holder of the notes, small enough to fall within the exemption provisions of the Federal Gift Tax Act, he can gradually reduce their indebtedness to him so that at the time of his death they may own a substantial part of their interest outright, and the assets of his decedent estate no longer include the notes; and even if his premature death should prevent the complete liquidation of these notes, his annual gifts would reduce the size of his net estate and subject his estate to the lower brackets of the Federal and State death levies.

MELLON INFLUENCE STILL CONTROLS

It seems to me that our income-tax law has reached the peak of ridiculousness and has largely become a farce when a man can escape tax merely by drawing up so-called articles of partnership whereby he names his wife as a partner. Notwithstanding all this, it appears that during the reign of Andrew Mellon the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the Mellon-devised Board of Tax Appeals inaugurated and maintained a practice of approving husband-wife partnerships.

Unfortunately the rulings then issued still stand and other similar rulings have been added to the list. Thus, partnerships between a husband and wife are now recognized for income-tax purposes if made in the following States:

Alabama, Bellingeruth, 3 B. T. A. 11; Arkansas, G. C. M., 450, V. 2 C. B. 49; California, I, T. 1744, II 2 C. B. 179; Colorado, S. M. 296 4, IV. 1 C. B. 171; Connecticut, G. C. M. 433, V. 2 C. M. 3034, VII. 1 C. B. 124; Ohio, Bartley, 4 B. T. A. 874; Pennsylvania, S. M. 5411, V. 1 C. B. 271; South Carolina, S. M. 3391, IV. 1 C. B. 42; South Dakota, Bartron, 3 B. T. A. 1262; West Virginia, Blackman, 24 B. T. A. 259.

GIFTS—CREATES BIG LOOPHOLES

Along the same line it could be noted that the oldest and simplest form of tax evasion is by way of family gifts. It also has the greatest possibilities for tax evasion. In this connection Mr. William M. Layman in the Tax Magazine of October 1936, states:

Perhaps the greatest possibilities for individuals to reduce the amount of their individual taxes will be found in their right to divide their estates, their income-producing property, among the members of their families, or others. This procedure results in breaking up the income from such property into smaller units, none of which would be subject to the more severe surtax which would be imposed on the same total income if it were kept intact and reported on the return of a single individual.

Furthermore, each of the individuals, except husband or wife or minor children, would be entitled to separate personal exemptions and credits for dependents, if any, which would actually reduce the total amount of income subject to tax.

This example of tax avoidance my be illustrated by the following example:

If an individual has property producing a net income of $100,000, and this constitutes his only income, the total surtax is $30,000. However, if he gives one-half of the property to his wife and each file separate returns, reporting $50,000 on each return, the total surtax is only $15,400, resulting in an evasion of approximately 50 percent of the tax.

ESTATES-TAX EVASION

It should also be noted that the same gift will also permit an evasion of an estate tax, for by making the gift to his wife the taxpayer will prevent any estate tax being assessed upon that amount when he dies, unless it is held that the gift is made in contemplation of death. Although gifts made in contemplation of death are thoroughly subject to the estate tax, in actual practice it appears that such provisions are defective. Thus it has been held that a gift by a man 84 years old was held not in contemplation of death (Wanamaker Estate, 16 B. T. A. 15).

It was for the purpose of correcting this situation that the gift tax was adopted for the purpose of taxing all gifts made during lifetime. However, the gift tax has gone only part of the way. Large tax savings can still be affected by gift during lifetime. For example, if an individual having $2,000,000 in property gives one-half of it to his wife, he will pay a gift tax of $166,950 upon such gift and the amount of estate tax assessable at his death upon the remaining $1,000,000 will amount to only $222,600. If he had not made the gift to his wife, the total estate tax upon the entire $2,000,000 would amount to $557,600, so that he escaped $168,050 by making the gift.

This easy method of tax evasion can be stopped. Instead of having estate tax and a gift tax there should be one tax, with one schedule of rates and as each succeeding gift is made it should be placed in the next higher bracket and taxed accordingly. This method is now followed under the gift-tax law but it only includes gifts made during a lifetime. It should be extended to include gifts, bequests, and devices under one tax.

Under the plan which I propose, the same amount of tax will be paid, no matter when the gifts are made, whether at death or during lifetime.

THE 1913 INCOME-TAX AMENDMENT

This 1913 income-tax amendment permits taxation of income from whatever source derived. Despite this broad language the Supreme Court has repeatedly restricted its scope. In the case of Eisner v. Macomber (125 U. S. 189) the Court held that stock dividends were not subject to income taxation, and over a period of 16 years thus lost to the Government $1,060,000,000 in revenue. In other words, if a person has a net income of $5,000, he must pay an income tax on it unless he is a State, county, or municipal employee, or comes under other exemption. However, a corporation with the same $5,000 net income can issue stock dividends and thus avoid payment of any income tax.

The Court has held that Congress cannot tax interest on bonds issued by State, county, or other local subdivisions. This act created a large field of tax-exempt securities, and this decision rendered despite the fact that Chief Justice Hughes as Governor of New York opposed the amendment, but as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court continues to adhere to the decision that Congress has no power to tax such bonds. The amount of securities from which the income is wholly exempt as a result of the Supreme Court action runs into billions. The figures for the 12 years, 1925 to 1936, are as follows:

	Amount of securities
1925	$16,645,000,000
1926	17,636,000,000
1927	18,846,000,000
1928	19,892,000,000
1929	20,957,000,000
1930	23,785,000,000
1931	25,750,000,000
1932	28,456,000,000
1933	31,804,000,000
1934	34,400,000,000
1935	36,146,000,000

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES CAN BE TAXED

In 1934 a subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee was appointed to investigate tax-avoidance schemes. Consideration was given to methods of curtailing the amount of tax evasion due to tax-exempt securities. In the report of the subcommittee there is an opinion by counsel of the committee suggesting a method by which as he says "most of the income from tax-exempt securities could be reached." Under this method there would be reached an excise tax upon the carrying on or doing business by corporations, measured by the net income from all sources, including interest from the so-called tax-exempt securities, and a similar excise tax on individuals engaged in any trade, avocation, or employment. As pointed out by one of counsel of the Joint Tax Committee on Taxation, this method of reaching tax-exempt securities is constitutional under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Stone-Tracy Co. v. Flint (220 U. S. 107). Furthermore, it appears that some of the States have used this method for taxing income from Federal securities, and this method has been upheld by the Supreme Court (Pacific Co. v. Johnson, 285 U. S. 480; Educational Film Co. v. Ward, 282 U. S. 379).

Thus if such a tax were adopted, for example, a corporation had a net income of $500,000 from its ordinary business transactions and $100,000 from interest on municipal securities, the entire $600,000 could be included in determining the amount of the excise tax upon the corporation. In this matter we could reach and tax the interest on all tax-exempt securities.

At least this is one of the ways by which it could be done. The best way, of course, would be to have a Supreme Court which would interpret the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution as it is written and not as the judges want it to be. It is provided in the sixteenth amendment that Congress shall have the power to tax income from whatever sources derived without any limitations being expressed. Nothing could be clearer than this language, and every effort should be made to unpack the Supreme Court, placing men thereon who could interpret the law as it is written and not as the Wall Streeters desire it should be construed for their own private profit. Therefore we cannot criticize the Supreme Court until the law is written so it will reach the interest on the tax-exempt securities. At the present time the income-tax laws specially provide that the interest from these securities is exempt.

Section 22 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1936 provides:

(4) Tax-free interest: Interest upon (a) the obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or (b) obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, if such corporation is an instrumentality of the United States; or (c) the obligations of the United States or its possessions. Every person owning any of the obligations enumerated in clause (a), (b), or (c) shall, in the return required by this title, submit a statement showing the number and amount of such obligations owned by him and the income received therefrom, in such form and with such information as the Commissioner may require. In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917 (other than postal savings certificates of deposit) and in the case of obligations of a corporation organized under act of Congress, the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the respective acts authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented, and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title.

This section of the law should be repealed so as to give our unpacked Supreme Court, if and when established, a chance to function.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. In connection with the questions that have been submitted to the gentleman, is not the responsibility of passing a tax law that is as nearly perfect as can be, as nearly free from loopholes as possible to make it, directly upon this Congress?

Mr. McFARLANE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LEAVY. Then, in view of what occurred yesterday, when there was an opportunity to give to the Members of this Congress the real facts upon which to act intelligently, and in view of the fact the committees of this House and the House itself denied to the membership of this Congress the right to have the facts upon which to arrive at conclusions, are we not handicapped tremendously in intelligent action and intelligent views?

Mr. McFARLANE. In my opinion, the gentleman is striking at the crux of the situation. I was glad to note that the gentleman from Washington voted with us on yesterday in trying to have publicity and information furnished Members of Congress regarding tax matters. When we sit idly here and tie our own hands and refuse to allow others to receive information on revenue matters, as was done yesterday on the loophole investigation resolution, it seems to me we are just inviting more loopholes and tax dodging through such secret methods. If Members are not interested themselves in securing this information, so that they can vote more intelligently upon the revenue laws, so that we can eliminate the jokers in our revenue laws, such as has been pointed out to us, how can we expect to eliminate these loopholes when we refuse to give ourselves information concerning the matter?

TIGHTEN UP TAX ADMINISTRATION

However, before closing I wish to make a few remarks regarding the tax administration of our law. The purpose of the tax administration is to insure the collection of the greatest tax with the least possible cost. In so doing, I realize that the Commissioner should have such safeguards as will insure reasonable accuracy of determination. However, the present set-up of tax administration seems to have gone far beyond the requirements of accuracy. To illustrate, assume a taxpayer in my district having filed a tax return which requires a field examination. The revenue agent first verifies the return from the books. His report is then verified by his squad leader, the task of the Dallas office. If the taxpayer desires a conference, a third employee attached to the Dallas office is required to examine the case and discuss his findings with the taxpayer, after which the report is transmitted to Washintgon, D. C. Upon reaching Washington, the case, in the ordinary course, is drawn by an auditor from the income-tax unit for examination. His findings, when reduced to writing, are submitted to a section unit auditor, who, if he approves it, then transmits the case to the reviewer for review.

Upon review a letter is mailed to the taxpayer, after which a conference is again afforded the taxpayer before the income-tax unit in Washington, where the case is discussed and adjustments may be made. The case is then referred to an auditor for action in accordance with the conferees' recommendations, after which his letter is again approved by the section unit auditor and returned before mailing to the taxpayer. At this point, if the taxpayer fails to acquiesce in the findings, the appeal may be taken to the Board of Tax Appeals. The taxpayer may then request his case be transmitted to the technical staff for settlement, where he may again appear in conference and discuss the case in its entirety with the employees of that division.

If he then is not satisfied, he may have the case transmitted to the legal division for trial, whereupon he may again enter into conference with the trial attorney and stipulate settlement of his case. At each of these conferences heretofore outlined and upon each review of the case, the taxpayer has the opportunity and may have succeeded in materially reducing his taxes at each step until at the time of the final conclusion of the case the tax collected may represent a very small portion of the tax originally found by the revenue agent to have been due. Indeed, it has been estimated by men familiar with the workings of the income-tax unit that the Government collects less than 25 percent of the tax found by the revenue agents to be due.

USELESS LITIGATION

Now, we come to the useless litigation; the taxpayer has three forums in which he may decide to bring his action. First, he may go before the Board of Tax Appeals, and if he receives an adverse decision from that Board, appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals and eventually to the Supreme Court, or if he does not desire to go before the Court of Tax Appeals, he may pay his tax and file suit for refund either in his own district court or in the Court of Claims here in Washington. An astute taxpayer can, by selecting the proper forum, materially aid his case. For instance, if he finds that the Board of Tax Appeals has rendered a decision in another case involving a question similar to his own, and such decision was in favor of the taxpayer, he will act to go before the Board of Tax Appeals. On the other hand, if he finds that the Board has already decided a case similar to his own against him, he may want to try his luck out in his own district court. Or, if his district court is not so favorable to his cause, he may take a shot at the Court of Claims. By giving the taxpayer the election of the forum in which to have his case tried, the Government is materially on the losing end.

BOARD OF TAX APPEALS A MISTAKE

The Board of Tax Appeals has not lived up to its expectations. Instead of acting as an administrative body to determine whether the taxpayer is liable for the tax proposed against him by the Commissioner, it has assumed the function of a court and has rendered many long and conflicting opinions. Since the Board was established in 1924, over 35 large volumes of its decisions have been printed. These decisions, instead of clarifying the tax situation, add to its confusion. As a result of writing these long opinions the Board falling behind in its work and the burden of keeping tax cases current has been shifted to the least-paid technical staff of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which in many cases reaches an agreement with the taxpayer before the petitions are filed with the Board.

These agreements and stipulations only receive approval by the Board, which does not attempt in such cases to go into the merits.

The following record taken from the Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1936 discloses the small number of cases tried by the Board in comparison with the total settlement made as a result of administration action:

	1931	1932	1933	1934	1935	1936
Closed by agreed settlement, default, dismissal, etc	5,199	7,239	6,849	8,064	4,252	3,533
Closed by trial	1,329	1,143	1,537	1,518	1,615	1,519
Total	6,528	8,382	8,386	9,582	5,867	5,052

While the Board appears to have reduced the number of cases pending before it from 21,233 in 1931 to 10,102 in 1936, the latter figure, based upon the number of cases disposed of for the year 1936, is sufficient to require the attention of the Board for the next 2 years without any additional work from new cases that will be coming in.

JACKSON SHOWS UP THE BOARD

It was stated by the Assistant to the Attorney General, Mr. Robert Jackson, in his statement before the Finance Committee in connection with the Revenue Act of 1935, that—

It is stated by a retiring member of the Board of Tax Appeals that since 1925 the Government has lost two-thirds in the amount of its cases before the Board of Tax Appeals, the average tax case involving a deficiency of $28,000.

Mr. Jackson also pointed out that, due to the delay in decisions by the Board, some taxpayers become bankrupt or insolvent, and the Government is unable to collect taxes that were justly due and could have been collected at the time the deficiency was first imposed; moreover, he pointed out that while the Board has speeded up the number of cases disposed of, in recent years the total amount of tax outstanding by the Board has actually been increasing. It is certainly an expensive procedure for the Government to have all of this tax tied up before the Board of Tax Appeals awaiting a final decision, and as the figures I have given disclose, only about one-third of the decisions when rendered by the Board are actually sustained in the high courts.

This situation before the Board is in sharp contrast with that is cases before the district courts and the Court of Claims, where the taxpayer first has to pay his tax and file claim for refund before he can maintain an action. A much larger percent of tax is secured by the Government in the latter class of cases.

In this connection the following figures submitted by Mr. Jackson are interesting:

For the year ending June 30, 1935, trials in these two courts showed the following results:

Decisions in favor of the Government, or dismissals on the basis of decisions in favor of the Government, 252; amount claimed, $16,801,896.

Decisions in favor or partly in favor of the taxpayer, or confessions of judgment on the basis of decisions in favor of the taxpayer, 135; amount involved, $555,479.

Almost a complete reversal of the percentage where they pay first and sue for a refund that exists, as against where they do not.

In addition to this, 151 cases, involving $9,949,000, were dismissed by the taxpayers without refund.

CONFLICTING DECISIONS BIG LOOPHOLE

I think we should also give careful consideration to the large amount of conflicting tax cases in our circuit courts of appeals. This undoubtedly produces discrimination and causes a burden on our taxpayers. In fact, taxpayers living in one circuit may get relief while others in another circuit may be denied relief in tax cases involving the same identical question. I feel that we might well consider the possibility of establishing one tax court of appeals to take over the function of the circuit courts of appeals in tax cases. This would permit all taxpayers to be treated alike and provide for a uniformity of decisions.

ABOLISH SUITS AGAINST COLLECTOR

I also believe that we should consider abolishing suits against collectors. This is an antiquated relic of the Civil War days and adds to the confusion of our litigation. Since the United States is the real party in interest, there does not seem to be any good reason why suits should not be directed against the United States and its duly authorized agent, instead of proceeding under the legal fiction of suing a collector in his personal capacity.

REWRITE AND CLARIFY THE LAW

Our revenue laws are becoming more and more obscure and difficult to apply to actual cases. Not only the taxpayer but the Treasury officials and the courts have difficulty in determining what the revenue laws mean. Beginning with the Revenue Act of 1918, which was enacted after the sixteenth amendment, we have had 13 revenue acts and the latest revenue act, the Revenue Act of 1936, is bewildering and the undistributed profits tax is the most complicated of them all. We have made our revenue laws unnecessarily verbose.

Moreover, in enacting our revenue laws, we have failed to consider our revenue system as a whole. Provisions which are already in force and under the decisions of the Supreme Court applicable to future taxes are often repeated in subsequent acts with no references to the former acts or any expressed intention to amend or repeal the same. Inconsistencies and discrepancies abound everywhere in the law.

Our draftsmen in an effort to be original scorn considering the language of statutes passed by State or other foreign governments, which in many cases if followed would materially cut down our litigation and make our internal-revenue laws more certain and show a decided tendency to ignore precedents or familiarize themselves with court decisions.

Mr. Hubbard, in his Preface to Federal Income Tax Laws, pages 3 and 4, has the following to say with respect to the substance of our present statute:

> The other defects of the present statute are chiefly due to the failure of its draftsmen to keep pace with the times and to modify the form according to the evolution of the substance. With a commendable affection for ancient tradition but with a distressing lack of courage to discard machinery long since obsolete they have sought laborously to fashion the canal boat into a zeppelin.

Obviously simplification of our revenue laws implies we must simplify our language and the avoidance of technical terms together with employment of general phrases to relieve unnecessary details wherever practical. More must be done to read the law and express it clearly and concisely. I feel that an effort to restate and clarify our revenue laws in simple language will be worth while both to the Government and the taxpayer alike and will remove many of the inconsistencies and duplications of our present system.

In doing this, we of course must consider not only the statutes themselves but the court decisions, regulations, rulings, and administrative practices as well as prior legislation.

The Treasury Department has a ruling which forbids its employees from accepting favors from persons interested in contesting internal revenue matters before the Department.

LIKE CEASAR'S WIFE—ABOVE SUSPICION

I believe that anyone who handles internal revenue matters for the Government should refrain from social contacts with those interested in these matters from the taxpayer's standpoint. In other words, Government employees should so conduct themselves that like Ceasar's wife, they will be above suspicion. It is only by such a course that we can be assured that their opinions are independent and unbiased.

Such a course as I have outlined is the only possible way by which tax avoidance may be prevented in this country on a large scale, if we may also expect our laws to operate fairly and consistently as between taxpayers similarly situated.

I believe the country is entitled to such an administration of the revenue system and it seems to me that one-quarter of a century of experience is sufficient on which to build permanently—it is time that we begin. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S REPORT ON AGRICULTURE—QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I wish to state to the Senate that this is the first time in my experience of nearly 30 years when it becomes necessary for me to note a newspaper article reflecting not only on me but incidentally on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which I happen to be chairman; more particularly does it very falsely insinuate things which I know the members of my committee will bear me out in saying are without foundation; in fact, they have done so this morning in executive session.

On May 25 there appeared a syndicated article—mark the date, May 25—under the heading "Merry Go Round." Senators may have heard of the article and of the gentlemen who prepared it. I read:

MERRY GO ROUND

By Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen

WASHINGTON, May 25.—If some Senator will reach into a certain filing cabinet of the Senate Agriculture Committee he will find a time bomb which will convulse the Farm Belt.

It is a public document which cost the taxpayers of the country $300,000 but for 3 months it has been carefully hidden.

The report deals with farm incomes and was compiled by the Federal Trade Commission under a Senate resolution.

Some of the dynamite-loaded facts revealed in the report are:

The first complete and detailed figures ever compiled on the sales, profits, and fancy salaries of packing companies, millers, and other big firms dealing in farm commodities.

The extraordinary profits made by dealers in farm produce—who were among the most violent foes of the Supreme Court invalidated A. A. A.

How grain and cotton speculators manipulated prices on commodity exchanges to the enrichment of themselves and the loss of tens of millions to growers and consumers. These operators also were vehement enemies of the A. A. A.

UNDERCOVER STRUGGLE

The behind-the-scenes story of the Trade Commission's struggle to unearth these closely guarded secrets is as remarkable as the facts uncovered. In some cases investigators were met with open defiance and the Commission had to go to the courts to compel the recalcitrants to open their books. In other instances firms produced their accounts only when threatened with citation for contempt of the Senate.

Virtually the entire economic staff of the Commission worked on the report, and experts who have seen it rate it as one of the most comprehensive and searching ever compiled by the agency.

Yet when it was sent to the Senate committee it was ordered impounded—

I want every member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to hear this expression:

It was ordered impounded and merely a brief summary was released, giving no inkling of the sensational contents.

Chairman of the Agriculture Committee is Senator "Cotton Ed" SMITH. When the A. A. A. was in operation the veteran South Carolinian violently opposed amendments which would have empowered the Agriculture Department to examine the books of packers, millers, and other farm-produce processors and dealers.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to give a history of what happened concerning this report.

On August 27, 1935, the President approved a joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to conduct an agricultural income inquiry and directing the Commission to submit its findings to Congress.

On March 2, 1937, the report of the Federal Trade Commission on this subject was submitted to Congress and referred in the Senate to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and in the House to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Since this report has been in the congressional committees it has at all times been open to inspection by the public.

On April 20, 1937, upon the motion of the Senator from Montana, the author of the resolution providing for the investigation, the summary, conclusions, and recommendations contained in the report were ordered to be printed as a Senate document, No. 54, Seventy-fifth Congress.

On April 23, so numerous were the requests that came in for the report, the committee decided to appoint a subcommittee to take under advisement whether the expense which would be incurred in printing so voluminous a document would be justifiable. That subcommittee was duly appointed and had a hearing with the Federal Trade Commission. The subcommittee held a meeting on May 5, 1937, at which time officials of the Trade Commission appeared and testified as to the Commission's attitude toward having the report printed. The subcommittee, after hearing this evidence, decided to recommend to the full committee, despite whatever cost might be incurred, that the report in full be printed as a Senate document. That subcommittee has reported and the full committee has approved the report. Since the report was referred to the committee it has been at all times available to anybody who wanted to read it, and I may say that thousands have come into the office or made inquiry and have taken excerpts from the report.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. In line with what the Senator from South Carolina has just had to say, I wish to state that on occasions I have desired to see the report of the Federal Trade Commission I have gone to the room of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and called for it from the clerk of the committee, and the report has at all times been available to me. On one occasion the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] and myself desired to consult the document and the report of the Federal Trade Commission in its entirety was available to us. There has never been any time of which I have known since the report was filed with the committee when all members of the committee, as well as anyone else who might desire to see the report, have not had an opportunity to see it. The report has always been available to us.

I wish in every way I know how to vindicate, if that be necessary, the chairman of the committee. He has at no time concealed the report from anyone, nor has there been any order made by the committee that it be impounded, nor has anything of that sort taken place. The only issue was, in the first instance, whether or not, due to the expense, the entire report should in its entirety be printed.

A motion was made that a brief summary of the report should be printed. The summary was printed. Later the committee appointed a subcommittee to determine whether the entire report should be printed. The subcommittee reported to the full committee and an order was made for the printing as a Senate document of the entire report of the Federal Trade Commission. I believe there is no justification of any kind or character for the article to which the Senator from South Carolina has referred, because it was not based on any facts of any kind or character.

Mr. SMITH. I am under obligation to the Senator from Kansas for his statement.

Mr. President, everybody knows the impulse which moves me to say a great many things that ought not to be said in this body. I was the subject of several antecedent articles written by these, this brilliant coterie of writers. I have received many letters from my constituents and others wanting to know for what purpose or reason I had suppressed or impounded the report. The insinuation that I did so is maliciously false. I believe in the freedom of the press when it tells the truth. I do not know that I would have taken any notice of this infamous article if it had related to me alone, but the insinuation was that the committee compounded a felony, that they were particeps criminis in suppressing what the public should have.

Let me say in passing that the insinuations are that I was fighting certain proposals which would be beneficial to the farmers. Members of this body will bear testimony that I handled the A. A. A. bill through the Senate and later the substitute for it known as the soil-erosion measure. I may have had my opinion as to certain of the amendments, but I handled the matter as best I knew how. The whole purpose of this article and similar articles is to create in the minds of the public a belief that I am a sinister influence in this body and carry my sinister work even to the committee, the respect of whose members I am proud to say I have.

Mr. President, I do not care to say anything further. As the syndicated letter went abroad in the land, I am glad to have in the RECORD the vindication of members of my committee.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETTE. In view of the fact that this matter was discussed by me last Monday, I think I ought to contribute something by way of assistance in conveying to the Senate an understanding of the absolute unfairness and injustice of the attack to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has adverted in his remarks.

I wish to state first that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry called this report to the attention of the committee as soon as it was filed, and asked what disposition they wished to make of it as to printing. Because of its unusually voluminous nature and because of the fact that a summary was filed at the same time, on motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the author of the original resolution which called for the investigation, it was thought advisable by the committee by unanimous action to authorize the printing of the summary alone; but when requests came from all over the country for copies of the report or opportunity to read the report, it being of a nature interesting to all sections of the country, the chairman of the committee, in the exercise of his duty and because of his interest in the public and in the report, again called it to our attention, and by unanimous approval of the committee he appointed a subcommittee, of which I had the honor to be the chairman, to confer with the Federal Trade Commission as to the advisability of printing the entire report. That subcommittee reported, and immediately on the filing of our report the full committee authorized the publication, in sufficient and reasonable number, of the complete report of the Commission, so it would be available to the entire country.

The intimation that the chairman of the committee was a party to or made any suggestion or took any action or by word or suggestion delayed any action, as stated in the article, is absolutely without foundation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Iowa. I think it is very well to warn those who publish syndicated articles that they had better be careful about the truth of the statements contained therein.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR BANKHEAD

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that resolutions adopted by the Southern Commissioners of Agriculture, meeting in Washington June 6–8, 1937, paying a splendid tribute to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SOUTHERN COMMISSIONERS OF AGRICULTURE ASSOCIATION

Meeting at Washington, D. C., June 6–8, 1937.

Presiding: Harry D. Wilson, commissioner of agriculture, Baton Rouge, La.

Whereas Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD has rendered great service in behalf of the cotton farmers by his tireless efforts to obtain higher and more equitable prices for their cotton: Be it

Resolved, That the Southern Commissioners of Agriculture, duly assembled, express our sincere and deep appreciation for this service rendered by Senator BANKHEAD; be it further

Resolved, That we commend Senator BANKHEAD for his efforts in behalf of the members and certificate holders of the cotton producers who were the original farmers who cooperated in the administration's agricultural program, and for his service to the 12-cent loan members; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary be authorized to deliver a copy of this resolution to Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD.

I hereby certify that this is a true copy of the resolution passed by the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture at a meeting held in Washington, D. C., June 8, 1937.

C. C. HANSON, Secretary.

TRIBUTES TO THE LATE SENATOR FLETCHER AND THE LATE SENATOR TRAMMELL, OF FLORIDA

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on the 18th of May the Legislature of Florida held a joint session which was a memorial service in honor of our former colleagues from the State of Florida, Senator Duncan U. Fletcher and Senator Park Trammell. At this joint session the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] delivered a very able and beautiful address on the life of the late Senator Fletcher, and at the same time the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] delivered a similar address with respect to both the late Senator Fletcher and the late Senator Trammell.

I ask unanimous consent that both these addresses be printed in the RECORD. Heretofore the address of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] on the life and character of Senator Trammell has been inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL OF DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, LATE A SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF FLORIDA, BEFORE A JOINT SESSION OF THE FLORIDA LEGISLATURE, TUESDAY EVENING, 8:30 P. M., MAY 18, AT TALLAHASSEE, FLA.

By WALTER F. GEORGE, senior Senator, Georgia

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, members of the senate and house, ladies, and gentlemen, the announcement at Washington in the early morning of June 17, last, of the passing of Duncan U. Fletcher, late a Senator from the State of Florida, brought sadness to the hearts and tears to the eyes of thousands throughout the Nation who honored and respected him.

Senator Fletcher was widely known. His sterling qualities of mind and character, his love of State and country, his capacity and energy, his contempt for hypocrisy, were known far and wide; nowhere better than at Washington. It is said that no member of the Congress was held in higher esteem by Presidents Taft, Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt.

Duncan U. Fletcher was just past 50 years of age at the time of entering the Senate, in 1909. He was in the prime of life. Well versed in political science and economy, he was able to cope with outstanding Republicans then in the Senate—among them Nelson A. Aldrich, of Rhode Island; Jacob H. Gallinger, of New Hampshire; Albert J. Beveridge, of Indiana; Chauncey W. Depew, and later Elihu Root, of New York; Philander C. Knox and Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania; Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin; Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts; Charles A. Curtis, of Kansas; Stephen B. Elkins and Nathan B. Scott, of West Virginia; Reed Smoot, of Utah; Francis E. Warren, of Wyoming; Eugene Hale and William P. Frye, of Maine.

His energy, intelligence, and frankness at once commended him to such well-known Democrats then in the Senate as Joseph W. Bailey, of Texas; John W. Daniel, of Virginia; Augustus O. Bacon, of Georgia; John H. Bankhead, of Alabama; Thomas S. Martin, of Virginia; and Benjamin R. Tillman, of South Carolina.

Of those to enter the Senate for the first time along with Senator Fletcher only one survives, Senator ELLISON D. SMITH, of South Carolina. Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, began his service 2 years prior and today ranks in point of length of service the oldest Member of that body. Senator SMITH is second in rank.

At the time Senator Fletcher entered the Senate that body was composed of 59 Republicans and 32 Democrats. There was one vacancy. There were then but 46 stars in the flag. William Howard Taft was President and James S. Sherman Vice President. Early in his career he was drawn into bitter tariff battles with Beveridge, Aldrich, Smoot, and other advocates of high protection. With great credit he defended the principles of the Democratic Party then enunciated in its platform. Ever after he was nationally recognized as a profound student of and an authority on foreign and domestic commerce.

Early in his career the "Ballinger-Pinchot controversy" arose, and Senator Fletcher was appointed a member of the committee to investigate the charges that the Interior Department had squandered national forest resources. By diligence, fairness, and patience he earned the admiration of his colleagues—Democrats and Republicans alike. Senator Fletcher's services in this historic investigation added greatly to his growing reputation and character both in and out of the Senate.

It was also during his early career that he was appointed a member of the committee to investigate charges of wholesale corruption in public office and election to office by fraud. One of the charges involved the election of Senator William Lorimer, of Illinois. It was specifically charged that friends had used and employed corrupt methods and practices and large sums of money in securing his election by the legislature. After the committee had conducted extensive hearings in Washington and Chicago and given careful consideration to all evidence, Senator Fletcher joined with a majority of the committee in reporting that the evidence presented did not justify unseating Lorimer, notwithstanding, after long debate, the Senate unseated him.

The charges which preceded the investigation, the investigation itself, long and bitter debate in the Senate and in the press, led to the submission by Congress of the amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators by vote of the people. The ratification of that amendment was proclaimed by the Secretary of State May 31, 1913.

You and I know that Duncan U. Fletcher, always of judicious mind, was unconvinced of Lorimer's guilt—whatever conclusion others may have reached—for you and I know that he strongly opposed the seating of Newberry at a later time; and those of us who had some part in the fight against Vare and Smith at a still later time well remember the invaluable aid given us in those cases by Duncan U. Fletcher—cases in which fraud and corruption undeniably appeared.

The Pan American Financial Conference held at Washington in 1915 provided for the organization of the Inter-American High Commission. This Commission was entrusted with the duty of eliminating the existing obstacles to inter-American trade and commerce, to establish closer financial relations between the United States and the republics of Latin America, and to bring about greater uniformity of legislation in matters relating to finance and commerce.

WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, then Secretary of the Treasury, was made chairman of the Commission and Senator Fletcher became one of its most valued members. In 1916 a meeting of the Commission was held at Buenos Aires at which Senator Fletcher played a most important part. It was to his untiring efforts that we owe the removal of many serious obstacles to inter-American trade, the marked improvement in steamship communication between the United States and the Latin American countries, and the establishment of closer financial cooperation between the nations of the Western Hemisphere.

Of Senator Fletcher's service as a member of this Commission, the chairman of the Commission has said: "He was one of the first to appreciate the importance of bringing the United States closer to the countries of Latin America and he labored unceasingly to further this important purpose. Today we are witnessing the full fruition of his efforts in an America united as never before, giving to the world an example of unity of purpose as well as of increasing prosperity. For this service alone the people of this country owe to Duncan U. Fletcher a deep and abiding debt of gratitude."

It was largely through persistent efforts of Senator Fletcher that a commission was appointed by President Wilson to investigate and study at first hand rural conditions and credits in Europe. The Senator was chairman of that commission and, upon returning to the United States, made a number of addresses throughout the country. Those investigations, reports, and explanations of what could and should be done in this country to relieve farmers of the excessively high interest rates and charges then demanded by lending agencies resulted in Congress enacting legislation providing for the establishment of Federal land banks and other agencies to relieve some of the burdens of agriculturists and horticulturists and, indirectly, the burdens of many persons dependent upon the success of those industries.

It was due largely to the efforts of Senator Fletcher, in the face of strong, organized opposition on the part of foreign and American allied interests, that Congress enacted legislation to provide America with a naval auxiliary and ships to serve our exporters and importers. This was one of his outstanding accomplishments, one for which the Nation owes him a debt of gratitude. Had it not been for the building of ships in American yards, no one can with certainty say how the World War would have ended. Certainly the building of those ships contributed largely to the early ending of the war, thereby saving the lives of thousands of American boys who might have been called upon to make the supreme sacrifice. Moreover, Americans thenceforth have not been altogether dependent upon foreign ships to transport their merchandise.

With a great sense of sorrow, as Senator Fletcher often said to his friends, he voted for the declaration of war against Germany. During and after the war he spent much time making inquiry concerning the welfare of young men in training camps, on ships en route to Europe, on the battlefields, and in hospitals, and also in doing all he possibly could in their behalf and in behalf of their loved ones. After the war ended he assisted thousands of widows, mothers, and fathers to locate their dead, lost, and disabled, and otherwise comforted them directly and indirectly. No appeal on behalf of a disabled veteran of any war was ever intentionally ignored by him.

During his entire service Senator Fletcher devoted his time to the enactment of legislation for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country. Millions of dollars have been spent for that purpose—I believe profitably. Your State and my State—in fact, all seacoast States—benefited largely by reason of his efforts in that direction.

Senator Fletcher was neither selfish nor sectional in his legislative endeavors. He favored legislation for the benefit of the people and the Nation as a whole. He considered the future as well as the present. His interest in reforestation and in conservation of the resources of this country is well known. He served during 1923 and 1924 as a member of the Senate Select Committee on Reforestation, which investigated forest and other conditions in practically all States. The outcome was enactment of legislation that encouraged National and State enlargement and protection of forest and other natural resources, which had for so long a time been sadly neglected and wantonly wasted.

From the beginning and throughout his 27 years at Washington Senator Fletcher served on important committees, among them Commerce, Military Affairs, Banking and Currency, and Joint Committee on Printing. He carefully considered all important matters coming before those committees. It was usual for him to make exhaustive studies of national and international questions, often remaining in his library until 2 o'clock in the morning. He was an industrious student at Vanderbilt University. There he laid the foundation for his intelligent and successful efforts in the Senate of the United States. At Washington he continued an indefatigable worker and student, in order better to represent his people and his party.

Born in Georgia of Scotch lineage, he was honest, industrious, and conservative. It is said that if the Senator had a fault, it was that of relying implicitly upon representations made by his friends. He was generous in forgiving those who did him an injustice. Upon more than one occasion he made the statement that the mistakes he made in life were those of the mind and not of the heart, and that he never intentionally did anyone an injustice.

Senator Fletcher was interested in many matters of Nation-wide interest, which, if time permitted, might be brought to mind. The duties and responsibilities of a United States Senator are but little understood and appreciated. The constructive work and accomplishments of Members of the Congress do not often make the front page. Comparatively little is generally known of or about them. Senator Fletcher was not a publicity seeker. Nevertheless his great virtues, his deep loyalties, his worth-while accomplishments are not "hidden under a bushel."

During recent years, especially since March 1933 and until his death, Senator Fletcher was chairman of that important committee, the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. He devoted practically all of his time, energy, and patience to investigating practices of stock exchanges, high financiers, and bankers. The outcome of those long, tedious investigations was the enactment of legislation which brought order out of the chaos that existed from late 1929 to early 1933. That legislation restored confidence in our financial institutions, without which there would be no prosperity, for confidence is, after all, the foundation of prosperity. Prosperity depends now, as ever, upon stable government, which in turn must rest upon the Constitution unimpaired.

Despite the warnings of close friends, despite their earnest entreaties to take a rest, Senator Fletcher worked on, day and night, without rest. He said days of relaxation were over for him. So another life was given in the public service. He died as we who knew him best, knew he would have wished to die—a Member of the United States Senate doing his duty simply, without dramatics, to the end. His faculties were undimmed and he was unafraid—fighting for that which he believed to be right and just in the sight of God. His going was peaceful. He was at peace with God and all mankind.

My office was near his in the Senate Office Building. We conferred frequently. I honored and respected him highly, as did all of those who knew him. He was generous, kind, and sympathetic—a lovable character. He was born in a Georgia county adjacent to the county in which I first saw the light of day. I was very close to him—probably as close as any other Member of the Senate. In the shadow of a great, simple, sincere life—such as Duncan U. Fletcher lived—we do not ask "if a man die, shall he live again." We know that surely if a good man die, "yet shall he live again."

The life and character of Senator Fletcher is an inspiration to each of us, especially to the young men and women who are today seeking knowledge in schools and colleges as the basis of service to God and country. His was a full life, well spent. His record of achievements as a public servant are surpassed by few, if by any. Floridians especially should ever revere and cherish his memory.

When Duncan Upshaw Fletcher passed to his reward, the State of Georgia mourned the loss of an illustrious son, the State of Florida the loss of a distinguished citizen, and the Nation the loss of a patriot and statesman.

Others will pay tribute to your distinguished citizen, Senator Park Trammell, who answered the summons but a little while before Senator Fletcher passed on. But before bidding you, my neighbors and friends, good night, I must add my personal tribute to the life and character and the useful public service of Park Trammell, for so many years your junior Senator, one time your Governor, and always your friend. I counted him friend also.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR PEPPER, OF FLORIDA, AT MEMORIAL EXERCISES FOR THE LATE SENATOR DUNCAN U. FLETCHER AND THE LATE SENATOR PARK TRAMMELL BEFORE JOINT SESSION OF THE FLORIDA LEGISLATURE AT TALLAHASSEE, FLA., MAY 18, 1937

Mr. President and Mr. Chairman, His Excellency the Governor and members of the Governor's cabinet, the honorable justices of the supreme court, the senate and the house of representatives, and my friends and fellow citizens:

I am glad that the privilege has come to me to participate in this memorial. I am glad that I have the opportunity to look into the faces of the members of the house and senate of the Legislature of Florida. It is not the first time that I have had the pleasure of being here, for in these two chambers have happened some of the events resulting in the happiest friendships and attachments of my life, and I see here in front of me the faces of the men with whom I have spent in happy comradeship the most eventful years of my past. They have experienced with me the pleasures and joys which have come to me. They have shared my heartaches. I have enjoyed a friendship with them for which I shall be forever grateful.

I think it is not an inopportune time to say that one of the compensatory qualities which there is about the public life, which you know has many vicissitudes and vexations, is the richness of the friendship it offers. Our being here this evening is an eloquent testimonial to that fact because, after all, we come not to honor two officials of state but to honor two friends.

I want to pay my tribute to the members of your joint committee, and to the house and the senate, whose thoughtfulness and consideration for the memories of these two honorable men have made these exercises a reality. I am sorry that it is necessary that our presence here shall be under the lengthened shadows of sorrow which move all of us as we contemplate, in regretful retrospect, the lives of the distinguished men whom we have come here to honor.

Since I come in his line of senatorial succession I have been requested to address my remarks to the life and career of Senator Fletcher. My colleague, following after Senator Trammell in succession, will speak of Senator Trammell.

A little while ago as I stood before the bier of Senator Fletcher in Jacksonville in the city hall, as I beheld above me his potrait, and all of him that was enshrouded in the beautiful tribute of flowers which had been given to him, I could not gaze upon that scene without some particular regard for the life and the career of that honorable man. Naturally, I turned back in retrospect to my own experiences with him, and I thought of the beautiful and sympathetic qualities of his character from incidents that came rushing into my consciousness. I remembered one day at Marianna, when I was on the platform with Senator Fletcher, about to address an assembly. The chairman, busy with the details of conducting the program, had not called upon me, who was the next speaker. I paid little attention to it, and I am sure no one else did, but three times I heard Senator Fletcher say to the chairman: "Don't forget that Mr. PEPPER has an advertised and prominent place on the program." Thoughtfulness and consideration for others symbolized his whole life.

Then I remember one time addressing a letter to him in Washington, asking him that he give me a letter of information about the lawyers who had attained high places in public life. I thought that was just a routine matter that some clerk in his office could attend to through proper channels, but to my astonishment I got back in a short time a letter directly from Senator Fletcher with the desired information, and in which he said: "You must have thought I didn't have anything to do all summer but get up this information for you." That matter, immaterial as it was, had come to him from one of his fellow citizens, and he proceeded to give to it the consideration of his personal attention.

Then I remember some of the repute with which he stood among his colleagues in Washington, as indicated by a testimonial spoken by one of the greatest of living Democrats, Senator HARRISON, of Mississippi. My former law partner, who was once Secretary to Senator HARRISON during the time he was a Member of the House of Representatives in Washington, asked that the Senator be good enough to give me counsel as to my duties and responsibilities in the Senate, and Senator HARRISON said: "Just tell him to be as nearly like Senator Fletcher as he possibly can, because we could all count on Senator Fletcher."

I don't suppose there is a person within the sound of my voice who has not given consideration to the life of Senator Fletcher. We all know the remarkable agility of his mind, and the fine qualities of his spirit, continuing through the latter years of his life. The thing at which I am personally so much astonished is that it seemed that his mind and his spiritual qualities were never affected by the natural deterioration of the body which time brings on. All who knew him in Washington say that even to the last day of his life he was leading the fight for the great program of liberalism, in the accomplishment of which he was so conscientiously assuming his part.

I would attribute to Senator Fletcher what I would define as a reasonable and reasoning liberalism. I have used those words advisedly—a man whose feet were on the ground, and yet whose mind penetrated into the ethereal realms of idealism; a man whose heart beat in unison with the pulsations of the great masses of mankind, and who walked as a companion to the Nation's great and powerful; a man who both worked and dreamed, and who in the latter years of his life had such a fresh outlook and such an inspired and noble point of view, that instead of lagging behind he was in the forefront of those fighting for that kind of liberalism. I speak of a liberalism which manifested itself in his kind and liberal philosophy. His was an open conscience, sensitive to the anguish of men and women and little children who suffered, with a knowledge that they did suffer and which cared whether they suffered or not; his was also an honest, open mind which made him not wedded to any particular method of solving problems but was determined that the best possible means be employed to alleviate the burdens of all who suffered. These qualities, above all else, were exemplified in the noble career of Senator Fletcher.

And so it is that from the President to the simplest child, his fellow citizens and compatriots all loved him because of the noble simplicity of his life and the beauty of his character. I know that we can ascribe to him no more fitting epitaph than those noble words which Anthony uttered over the lifeless body of Brutus as it lay upon the battlefield—

> "His life was gentle, and the elements
> So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, 'This was a man!'"

REPORT ON FRUITS, VEGETABLES, AND GRAPES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on fruits, vegetables, and grapes (agricultural income inquiry), which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the New Jersey Housing League, Newark, N. J., favoring the enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act as suggested by W. W. Royster, president of the Railroad Employees' National Pension Association, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Samuel G. Hamilton, secretary of the Potomac Valley Citizens' Association, Brookmont, Md., remonstrating, on behalf of that association, against the enactment of income-tax legislation to be levied and expended for the benefit of the government of the District of Columbia, with such proposed tax also applying to residents of the State of Maryland who are employed in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McNARY presented the petition of the Southwestern Oregon Miners' Association, Grants Pass, Oreg., which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial to the United States Congress from the Southwestern Oregon Miners' Association, Grant's Pass, Oreg.

The Southwestern Oregon Miners' Association at its regular meeting June 3, 1937, instructed its officers and executive committee to prepare and forward to the United States Congress a memorial urging the enactment of pending legislation providing for the suspension of assessment work on mining claims held by location for the year ending July 1, 1937, and to request its publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that the entire membership of the Congress may be informed as to the urgent need of this legislation.

Now, therefore, in accordance with these instructions this petition is respectfully presented. That—

Whereas the Congress in the proper exercise of its duties to provide for the general welfare of all the people has seen wise to provide relief for various groups of citizens in distress and in many cases at a substantial financial cost to all the people; and

Whereas miners and prospectors have been and yet are suffering severely from the effects of an unprecedented depression; and

Whereas these prospectors and primary mineral resources developers are essential factors in promoting this great national industry; and

Whereas failure to provide the small relief asked by this group and at no financial cost to the Government will undermine their morale and discourage further attempts to discover and develop these very important national resources; and

Whereas many of these people have found it necessary to draw on their credit in order to maintain themselves and families during these trying times not only for food and clothing but also for medical, dental, educational, and other essential services the costs of which must be liquidated in preference to other expenditures in order to preserve their credit for future emergencies as well as in a spirit of common honesty; and

Whereas the benefits of increased wages and employment in large industries have not yet reached the remoter sections of the country, but have, on the contrary, contributed to substantial increases in the cost of living, especially in foodstuffs; and

Whereas at no time during recent years has it been more difficult to maintain in the mining regions even minimum standards of living; and

Whereas many of these people have over a period of years invested their savings and spare time in developing mining properties that must be lost to them unless this legislation is passed; and

Whereas such losses would inflict on them a grievous wrong depriving them of property for which they have labored and striven strenuously and which they have hoped would provide in many cases a competency for their declining years:

Now, therefore, your petitioners do respectfully submit that this group of citizens are entitled as a mere matter of primary justice to the granting of this small benefit, which is at no financial cost to the Government as against relief given other groups at enormous money cost.

Wherefore your petitioners most urgently request the immediate enactment of Senate bill No. 187 and House Resolution No. 2254, or similar acts to secure this suspension.

All of which the undersigned officers and executive committee of the Southwestern Oregon Miners' Association submit on behalf of their membership and a host of adherents whose all is in prospects they hope to develop into mines.

Respectfully,

ROBERT E. KELLY, President.
P. DINEEN, Secretary.
HAROLD LOCKE, Treasurer.
J. R. ELDER,
P. H. HAGBERG,
HORACE HAIR,
Executive Committee.

DELIVERY OF MAIL TO STEEL PLANTS IN OHIO

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter which came to Senators from Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STEEL WORKERS ORGANIZING COMMITTEE,
Pittsburgh, Pa., June 8, 1937.

To the Members of the United States Senate:

DEAR SENATOR: The following telegram was forwarded to United States Senator BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, today. We request, in the interest of fairness, that you insist upon these amendments being added to Senator BRIDGES' resolution:

"Newspaper reports state that you introduced a resolution from the floor of the Senate yesterday asking for a Senate investigation of alleged irregularities with reference to the delivery of a package of goods at the Warren, Ohio, post office to strikebreakers employed within the plant of the Republic Steel Corporation, located at Warren, Ohio.

"The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has no objections to the appointment of a Senate committee for that purpose, but demand that the resolution be amended to include an investigation of the moral conduct of both parties to the strike—who precipitated it, and does the action of Republic Steel Corporation, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Inland Steel, in refusing to sign an agreement, although these corporations have agreed to accept the terms and conditions submitted to them by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, constitute a violation of the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

"We would also like to have the resolution amended to include a senatorial investigation of the illegal holding of and use of machine guns, repeating rifles, and other war paraphernalia, which is now in possession of these corporations and being used without permits in violation of the State and Federal firearms statutes. We also demand an amendment to the resolution to provide for a senatorial investigation of the murder of 7 members of our organization and the maiming of 60 others by the Chicago police, in the city of Chicago, on Sunday, May 30. Likewise, we insist upon an additional amendment to the resolution providing for a senatorial investigation of the dropping of material upon pedestrians on the public highways by airplanes, these planes being chartered and used by the Republic Steel Corporation; also the swooping down of planes over meetings of citizens and strikers to disturb lawful and peaceable assemblages, and the importation of gunmen across State lines by Republic Steel Corporation for strikebreaking purposes in violation of the Byrnes Act.

"In absolute fairness to all concerned, we believe it necessary, and do insist, upon a senatorial investigation being conducted sufficiently broad in its scope to enable the Federal Government to have the fullest amount of information concerning this situation."

PHILIP MURRAY, Chairman.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. WAGNER), from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2395) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 697) thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF ACTIVITIES OF AMERICAN COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 137) to investigate certain activities of the American Cotton Cooperative Association in connection with the marketing of cotton financed by the Federal Government (submitted by him on May 24, 1937), reported it without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate reported back favorably, without amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 36) creating a special committee to investigate unemployment and relief, submitted by Mr. HATCH and Mr. MURRAY January 6, 1937, and previously reported from the Committee on Education and Labor, which was read, considered, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to study, survey, and investigate the problems of unemployment and relief, including an estimate of the number of persons now unemployed by reason of the use of labor-saving devices, mechanical and otherwise, in operation in the United States, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Congress in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall begin its study, survey, and investigation as soon as practicable and shall continue such study, survey, and investigation expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, during the Seventy-fifth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expense of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HATCH subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier today the Senate adopted Senate Resolution 36, providing for a study of the causes and problems of unemployment. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and I have worked together for many months on that matter. When this particular resolution was introduced the name of the Senator from Montana was inadvertently omitted as one of the authors of the measure. I desire to correct the RECORD in that regard in order that the name of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] may appear with mine as coauthors of Senate Resolution 36.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and I have a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 68) pending on the calendar providing for the appointment of a national unemployment and relief commission. Both of us feel that the joint resolution should be considered and passed. I desire at this time to give notice that on the next call of the calendar we shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution, and shall ask that it be passed by the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on June 8, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 274. An act for the relief of Lt. Joseph N. Wenger, United States Navy;

S. 609. An act for the relief of Edith Lewis White;

S. 673. An act for the relief of S. T. Dickinson; and

S. 1699. An act granting an annuity to Frank W. Carpenter.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. CAPPER introduced Senate bill 2604, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BULOW:

A bill (S. 2605) to promote the general welfare of the Indians of the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 2606) for the relief of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOORE:

A bill (S. 2608) to advance a program of national safety and accident prevention; to the Committee on Commerce.

(By request.) A bill (S. 2609) for the relief of the First, Second, and Third National Steamship Cos.; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma introduced Senate bill 2610, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 2611) for the relief of Austin Baskin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2612) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and eightieth anniversary of the birth of John Beckley and the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the city of Beckley, W. Va.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HATCH:

A bill (S. 2613) for the relief of certain applicants for oil and gas permits and leases; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Br. Mr. HATCH and Mr. CHAVEZ:

A bill (S. 2614) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain tracts of land to the State of New Mexico and Cordy Bramlet; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. GREEN:

A bill (S. 2615) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Society of the Cincinnati, a corporation of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GIBSON:

A bill (S. 2616) to amend the Canal Zone Code so as to provide for widows' annuities; and

A bill (S. 2617) to amend the Canal Zone Code so as to provide for 30-year optional retirement; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. MURRAY:

A bill (S. 2618) to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails within national forests for the purpose of promoting the development of certain mineral resources within such forests; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 2619) to amend paragraph (1) of section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 2620) to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920;

A bill (S. 2621) to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue sewer bonds; and

A bill (S. 2622) to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and to issue bonds of the authority, to authorize said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A bill (S. 2623) to amend the act entitled "An act to recognize the high public service rendered by Maj. Walter Reed and those associated with him in the discovery of the cause and means of transmission of yellow fever", approved February 28, 1929, by including therein the name of John R. Taylor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) classifying fur-bearing animals brought into or born in restraint or captivity as domestic animals, or as livestock, for certain purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McCARRAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) authorizing Bureau of Labor Statistics to collect information as to amount and value of all goods produced in State and Federal prisons; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. RADCLIFFE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 162) to permit the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia to enter into a compact or agreement respecting the creation of a Potomac Valley conservancy district for the prevention or abatement of harmful pollution of the waters thereof; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) providing for the abolition of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the transfer of its duties and assets to the Federal Housing Administration for performance and liquidation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXCISE TAX ON PORK AND PORK PRODUCTS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill which provides an excise tax of 6 cents a pound on imports of pork, bacon, hams, sides, shoulders, loins, and other pork, including fresh, chilled, frozen, cured, or cooked, steamed, prepared, or preserved; also 3 cents a pound on pork joints, sweet pickled, fresh, frozen, or cured. The bill would amend section 601 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1932 by adding the two items at the end of the present section.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. From his statement, I judge he is introducing a bill to levy a tax on imports. Is not that a revenue measure, and, under the Constitution, would it not have to originate in the House of Representatives?

Mr. CAPPER. A similar bill is pending in the House of Representatives.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator's bill is a companion bill to the one in the other body.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senate could not act on the subject unless it had a bill from the House providing for the tax, could it?

Mr. CAPPER. In any event, I hope we may find a route by which to remedy this situation.

Mr. President, the tremendous increase in imports of pork products, particularly hams, shoulders, and bacon, in the past 2 years is causing genuine concern to American farmers and packers. Up until 1935 imports of hams, shoulders, and bacon had averaged under 2,000,000 pounds; in 1934 the imports were only 968,000 pounds.

In 1935 the imports jumped to 5,228,475, and in 1936 totaled 26,009,706 pounds—more than in the previous 10 years combined. Imports of other preserved porks jumped from 484,373 pounds in 1934 to 1,223,352 pounds in 1935 and 2,806,787 pounds in 1936.

The value of these pork imports, only $483,710 in 1934, was $1,591,365 in 1935 and $7,754,052 in 1936, of which $7,020,696 was for hams, shoulders, and bacon in 1936.

Poland and the City of Danzig are responsible for most of the tremendous increase in the past few years, so far as hams, shoulders, and backs are concerned. In 1931 there were imported from Poland and Danzig only 1,399 pounds—never as much as 500,000 pounds until 1935, when 3,566,533 pounds were imported into the United States. Last year Poland and Danzig shipped into the United States 18,674,737 pounds of hams, shoulders, and bacon, and in the first 3 months of this year 9,712,640 pounds.

I have introduced this bill to protect the farmers of the United States. It is manifestly unfair to the American farmer to hire, threaten, or cajole him into reducing his production, and then allow Poland and Danzig and other foreign producers to come in and take away that much of the American market. The American farmer is entitled to the American market, in return for having to pay much higher than world prices for American-manufactured products which carry high protective tariffs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Kansas will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 2604) to amend the Revenue Act of 1932 by imposing an excise tax on pork and pork products was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

H. R. 1649. An act to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the State of Minnesota of certain lands in Morrison County, Minn.;

H. R. 4277. An act to provide for the extension of certain prospecting permits, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4890. An act relative to the disposition of public lands of the United States situated in the State of Oklahoma between the Cimarron base line and the north boundary of the State of Texas;

H. R. 5804. An act to provide for the residence of the United States commissioners appointed for the national parks, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5805. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the exercise of sole and exclusive jurisdiction by the United States over the Hawaii National Park in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes", approved April 19, 1930.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on April 27 the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] introduced a bill (S. 2280) to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes. That bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. A few days ago the Senator from Illinois introduced a redraft of the measure, being Senate bill 2584, which inadvertently was referred to the Committee on Finance. In the meantime a bill relating to the same subject has passed the House of Representatives and has been referred to the Committee on Finance.

The proposed legislation properly belongs to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and, after consulting with the chairman of the Finance Committee, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2584) to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes, and also House bill 6635, having an identical title, and that the bills be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the changes of reference will be made.

PROPOSED REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—AMENDMENT

Mr. ANDREWS. I submit an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 100, and ask that it be read into the RECORD at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. ANDREWS to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) proposing an amendment to section 1, article III, of the Constitution of the United States, relating to the judiciary, was read, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. ANDREWS to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) proposing an amendment to section 1, article III, of the Constitution of the United States relating to the judiciary

In lieu of the matter after the enacting clause insert the following: That the following amendment, when ratified by three-fourths of the several States, shall replace section 1 of article III of the Constitution of the United States of America:

"ARTICLE III

"SECTION 1. The judiciary power of the United States shall be vested in a Supreme Court, circuit courts of appeal, district courts, and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Justices and judges of said courts shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They shall hold their offices during good behavior as herein provided, and shall receive at stated times for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office: Provided, That any Justice or judge of said courts having held a commission or commissions as such Justice or judge for at least 10 years, continuously or otherwise, may voluntarily retire upon attaining the age of 70 years, and shall automatically retire upon attaining the age of 75 years and, in either instance, shall thereafter receive the same annual compensation of which he was in receipt at the time of his retirement.

"The Supreme Court shall be composed of a Chief Justice appointed from the United States at large, and one Associate Justice appointed from the territory composing each of the circuit courts of appeal. No vacancy in the office of any Associate Justice of the Supreme Court which shall occur by reason of this amendment or for any cause, shall be filled by the appointment of any person who has not been a citizen for 10 years last past of the territory of a circuit court of appeals of which no incumbent Associate Justice was a citizen at the time of his induction to office: Provided, That if upon this amendment becoming effective the territory of a circuit court of appeals shall be represented on the Supreme Court by more than one Associate Justice, then no appointment to the extent of such excess representation shall be made from an unrepresented circuit until such excess representation shall cease.

"The respective circuit courts of appeal shall be composed of at least one judge from each State included within the territory comprising such court, the senior member of which shall be the presiding judge.

"This section shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 5 years from the date of its submission."

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO A NATIONAL PUBLIC-HEALTH POLICY

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, on January 7, 1935, I submitted a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. The resolution provided for a study to be made of a system of health insurance. At that time the American Medical Association was not sympathetic with that study. Yesterday the newspapers carried the news that the American Medical Association is ready to cooperate with the Government in making such a study. I therefore submit a resolution pertaining to a national public-health policy, and ask that it be referred to the Committe on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 143) was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor is hereby directed and instructed, either acting through the full committee or through a duly appointed subcommittee, as soon as practicable, to make a full and complete investigation in order to determine the best and most effective kind of Federal legislation to provide a national public-health policy throughout the entire United States and to report to the Senate as early as practicable the recommendations outlining the kind of legislation it is believed will most effectively accomplish this purpose.

SPOTTING OF CARS ON INDUSTRIAL PLANT TRACKS—DECISION OF SUPREME COURT (S. DOC. NO. 79)

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], I ask unanimous consent that there be printed as a Senate document the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States of America and the Interstate Commerce Commission against the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY'S OPPORTUNITY

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the people of Vermont are extremely fortunate in having a sanely progressive Governor. He is a farmer who knows the needs of the common folks and is serving all the people of the State to their entire satisfaction. He recently made a speech in Syracuse, N. Y., at a banquet given in honor of the election of Frank Costello to the New York Assembly.

I call attention to a few of the pertinent points made in that address:

If the Republican Party does not appeal to the millions of loyal but nonpartisan citizens of our country, then there will be no recourse for those citizens except to organize a new party.

It is high time for the Republican Party to discard the tall hat and get itself a blue shirt. We might as well admit that. Although our party is not alone in this respect, we have in some of the high seats those who have not, do not, and never can represent the ordinary fellow because they do not know how he thinks. We have just got to put in their places conscientious men and women from the ranks of labor and agriculture, men and women who work for a living and know what a day's work and a dollar are. And the leaders of the new Republicanism must take orders from no one but the American people.

We must get it out of the heads of the voters that we are the official organization of the holding companies and the speculators. If we do not do this, then no ten-million- or fifteen-million-dollar campaign fund is going to do us one bit of good in 1940. We have this opportunity. We can make the most of it or not.

I ask that the entire speech be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF GOV. GEORGE D. AIKEN, OF VERMONT, IN SYRACUSE, N. Y.

What I have to say may not meet with the approval of some of you, yet my views on matters on which I shall touch are well known to the people of my State who elected me by an increased majority over the vote of 1934, carrying 230 towns out of 248 towns and cities. But, in fact, I am not speaking to you as the Governor of a neighboring State, nor as one who is interested in placing party politics above public welfare, but rather I prefer to speak to you as one of several million American citizens who still have a high regard for the principles of self-reliance, frugality, and self-respect. It is not my intention to criticize the members of any other political party for errors of judgment and lack of perspective which they may have shown or are showing at the present time, for I firmly believe that, as good American citizens, we should at all times place the welfare of our Nation above the welfare of any political party. And that constructive planning is more essential just now than destructive criticism. By serving the public interests well we are doing that which will serve our party best, insure the respect and command the votes of the many who are definitely unattached to any party but upon whose support depends victory or defeat at the polls.

It is a privilege for me to be here as a citizen of a State which during the past few years, while the entire world, along with our own country, has been gripped with fear and uncertainty, has maintained what I believe to be a sensible attitude toward most of the problems with which we have been confronted. It is a tradition with Vermonters that towns and States, as well as individuals, should live within their means, and we have respected this tradition for over a hundred and fifty years. We have been taught that during hard times the town or the State or the individual must of necessity be compelled to do without some things which we might have under prosperous conditions. We have been taught from the beginning of our Commonwealth that the most precious thing in life is liberty, and our attitude was well expressed by the late President Coolidge when he stated that: "No method of procedure has been devised by which liberty could be divorced from local self-government."

To tell the truth, it has been a jolt to us people up in the hills to see the Federal Government use methods for restoring prosperity directly contradictory to those which have served us well and effectively for a century and a half. We recognize the fact that during business depressions it is necessary for those who have made a greater degree of success to contribute more liberally toward the support of those who have been less fortunate through physical, mental, or circumstantial handicaps, but we have felt that assistance granted during these periods should not be such as to deprive the recipient of self-respect or the desire to support himself with the return of better business conditions.

We recognize the fact that each succeeding generation finds itself faced with the advisability of administering its affairs more and more on a Nation-wide basis, but we hold firmly to the proposition that at no time should local government, even if it so desires, be wholly free from the responsibility for its own problems or the obligation to cope with them in accordance with its ability. It is also certain that no community can consistently protest Federal dominance while insisting that the Federal Government assume the responsibility and expense of problems that naturally devolve upon that community.

During recent years Vermont has accepted as beneficial and necessary certain State and Federal policies, and we have been faced with the necessity of appropriating funds for the support of these policies. We have raised the required revenue to meet these expenditures on a pay-as-you-go basis rather than by borrowing, with the result that during the 4 years between 1933 and 1937 we not only did not increase the obligations of our taxpayers but actually made a substantial decrease in our State departments.

We do not believe in the practice of trying to get as much as possible out of the Federal Government, under the delusion that somebody else is going to pay the bill, but have fairly allocable to our State in such manner as to get the greatest possible benefits from them.

Taxpayers' money well spent is a means of doing cooperatively what we as individuals or subdivisions of government cannot afford to do. Taxpayers' money spent wastefully results in the breaking down of the morale and sense of obligation to one's government, and actually hastens the day when the foundations of that government will become so weakened that it will collapse through its own topheaviness.

I like to think of our National Government as a massive monument set upon a base of stones of varying sizes representing our States, our counties, and our towns, all cemented together to provide a substantial foundation for the tower above them. Yet the monument which people gaze upon and admire would soon be lying in the dust if any considerable number of the smaller stones forming the foundation should crumble.

In Vermont we recognize that the Government is all the people, and that no government can be stronger than the collective wealth and ability of the respective States. Therefore, regardless of party lines, we hold strongly for local units to share in the responsibilities for local welfare, both financially and morally. We have found the grants in aid used for Federal participation in highway construction, mothers' aid, assistance for the blind and crippled, and for old-age assistance, with State administration, a highly satisfactory method. In our State between 96 and 97 cents of every dollar available for old-age assistance has actually been paid in benefits. The Vermont plan, in which political expediency has no part, in addition to being the most economically administered of any in the country, has been nationally recognized for its simplicity and common sense. When the burden of relief in other forms is placed on a more practical basis, it will be through an extension of the grant-in-aid policy. Vermont believes it would be a mistake to break down the plan of grants in aid to the States on a match basis, because such basis, with local units standing their share of the expense, results in a policy which is predicated on the maintenance of prudent administration. Only a shortsighted or dictatorial government would induce the States by coercion or distribution of favors to surrender the management of their local affairs.

In speaking here tonight in favor of the return to local communities of the duty of assuming local responsibilities and the right to administer local affairs, for which my own State definitely stands, I want to say that I do not feel that conservatism in this respect is inconsistent with liberalism in our attitude toward progress in human welfare.

Although Vermont since 1777 has stood steadfast on a pay-as-you-go policy for State government, yet we have never been ultraconservative in our political viewpoint. The first article of our Bill of Rights written in 1777 absolutely prohibited slavery of any kind and granted the right of suffrage to all men of 21 years and over. We guaranteed freedom of speech and freedom of the press. We held that "private property ought to be subservient to public use when necessity requires it", and that "the community hath an unalienable right to reform or alter government in such manner as shall be, by that community, judged most conducive to the public weal." These provisions of our State constitution were undoubtedly considered ultraradical in that day, yet in that same Bill of Rights which our State adopted was incorporated an article, lifted almost bodily from the old Virginia Bill of Rights which reads: "That frequent recurrence to fundamental principles and a firm adherence to moderation, temperance, industry, and frugality are absolutely necessary to preserve the blessings of liberty and keep government free."

In the early part of the nineteenth century Vermont had a State monopoly of all banks. For the first 60 years of our existence as a State we had a unicameral legislature. Child labor is practically unknown within our borders. Our old-age assistance law was one of the first, and it is in effect today practically unchanged from the time it was enacted. Vermont today stands alone as the first State to ratify an interstate compact for flood control, thus demonstrating our belief that working agreements among States are preferable to Federal administration of sectional interstate affairs.

Our attitude toward social security and other far-sighted measures for the alleviation of distress is most liberal. Our present State administration recognizes the right of labor to a just proportion of the fruits of its production and of the obligation of private industry to submit to proper regulation in order that the tendency among a few to acquire unearned profits at the expense of others may be curbed.

The drift toward socialism in America can be almost wholly attributed to the greediness of certain private industries and corporate monopolies to acquire that which is not rightfully theirs, and it is up to them to say to what extent this drift will continue. Unregulated monopolies are milestones on the road to State socialism or fascism.

We have long recognized the fact that agriculture has borne and is bearing far more than the proper share of the social and financial burden. I hope to see the day when through cooperative efforts, supported by adequate legislation, the American farmers, of whom I am one, will be able to reduce the unwarranted spread now existing between the price received by the producer and the price paid by the consumer to such an extent that a farmer may receive a fair reward for his honest efforts.

Now consider briefly, as a whole, the situation in which we find ourselves today. The business depression appears to have run its allotted course of years, as depressions have done from time immemorial, but the taxpayers' depression is becoming more intensified with no end in sight. We cannot continue to have Federal deficits indefinitely without disaster, and we know that the only way to stop this deficit is to reduce Federal appropriations and return the responsibility for much of the work done as emergency relief back to the States.

I was tremendously surprised 2 weeks ago to find that only one other Governor has expressed any willingness for his State to assume any portion of the relief work now being carried on under W. P. A. and other agencies. When I said that Vermont would accept a cut in Federal funds in the same proportion as other States I never guessed that I would be so much in the minority. It did not matter that a Democratic President proposed this reduction, for we should be patriotic American citizens first and Republicans afterward.

I think the time is not far distant when there will be an awakening tax consciousness in this country and our people will rise and demand an end to unwise and fruitless experimentation. During these years of experimentation, some plans have been put forward and found workable. I feel that, as Republicans, we have nothing to lose by freely acknowledging this and by bending every effort to help them operate successfully in the public interest, but there are many other schemes which have been far from successful and which should be dropped without delay.

It is becoming increasingly apparent that the party now in power in Washington will not be able to bring about the reforms necessary for a sound Federal financial policy. We know Federal expenditures must be reduced, but the papers last Sunday carried the information that the month of March saw a net gain of 2,860 in the number of Federal employees until the total has reached the astounding number of 821,193.

I can foresee little reduction in the number of Federal employees or the amount of Federal expenditures between now and 1940. No political party, having created jobs in wholesale quantities, is in a position to abolish them, especially when they are administered by the faithful. It is very evident that the tide of public opinion is turning every day. Your selection of Frank Costello by an amazing majority conclusively demonstrated this. It is now plainly up to the Republican Party to decide whether it will do that which is necessary to take advantage of that tide. By exemplifying our ability to administer sound and economical government in those States and cities where we now control and by putting and keeping our own house in order, we can, if we will, be in a position to solicit and obtain the votes of American citizens in 1940.

I am not a prophet. The State of Vermont recently enacted a law requiring fortunetellers to be fingerprinted and licensed, but so long as I am now out of the State I want to predict that any political party to be victorious in the next election must represent the common people and the conscientious voters of America.

We must get it out of the heads of the voters that we are the official organization of the holding companies and the speculators. If we do not do this, then no $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 campaign fund is going to do us one bit of good in 1940. We have this opportunity. We can make the most of it or not.

If the Republican Party does not appeal to the millions of loyal but nonpartisan citizens of our country then there will be no recourse for those citizens except to organize a new party.

It is high time for the Republican Party to discard the tall hat and get itself a blue shirt. We might as well admit that. Although our party is not alone in this respect, we have in some of the high seats those who have not, do not, and never can represent the ordinary fellow because they do not know how he thinks. We have just got to put in their places conscientious men and women from the ranks of labor and agriculture, men and women who work for a living and know what a day's work and a dollar are. And the leaders of the new republicanism must take orders from no one but the American people.

If we take this opportunity and put our party in such position that millions of working people in America have confidence in us, then they will flock to the new Republican standard and accept the new republicanism as their doctrine. They are sick and tired of waste and inefficiency. They are miserably distressed at the continued encroachment of centralized federalism into the fields of local self-government. They are disgusted at the continued expansion of Federal bureaus and the multiplication of Federal jobs. They want experimentation to stop for a while, to sift the results of that which has been done, to keep the percentage that has been found good and to discard the great bulk that has proven extravagant, inefficient, and un-American.

The average common-sense voter is looking for some party which he can support and which will carry out his heartfelt desires for a sanely progressive United States Government, which can and will be used for the purpose of cooperation among the States rather than a means of dominating them. I believe that the Republican Party can put itself in a position to merit the confidence of these voters—or it can take its place on page 319 of the schoolboy's history book.

Once again I say that this dinner here tonight may be considered a victory dinner for the Republicans of Onondaga County, but it is an opportunity dinner in a far greater sense. The citizens of the entire Nation are now looking to cities like Syracuse and States like Vermont to see what the new republicanism is like and what it can do. It is up to us to show the way, and I know we will not fail.

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY AT LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY

PARTY RESPONSIBILITY—ADDRESS BY HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS

INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS OF PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CONNALLY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 790) to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the text and the title of the bill and agree to the same.

TOM CONNALLY,
AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILLIAM P. COLE, JR.,
EDWARD A. KELLY,
CARL E. MAPES,
CHARLES A. WOLVERTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator state the terms of the report?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to do so. The report has to do with the so-called "hot oil" measure. The Senate passed a bill making the "hot oil" law a permanent piece of legislation. The bill went to the House and the House amended it by limiting its operations to 2 years. The Senate conferees now ask the Senate to recede from its disagreement to the House amendment and agree to it. The House conferees were firm in their opposition. The fact that the act expires on June 15 makes it necessary to have it extended in order to prevent a lapse. Therefore, there was nothing for the Senate conferees to do but surrender because the House went on a sit-down strike.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF INCOME TAX EVASION

The Vice President laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 155) to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance, which were, on page 3, line 6, after "committee" where it occurs the second time, insert "(at a public hearing or otherwise, as the joint committee, or a subcommittee thereof consisting of two or more members, may determine)"; on page 3, to strike out lines 14 to 23, inclusive, and insert:

(3) The joint committee shall have the right to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Senate and the House of Representatives, and shall submit such information to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance. The Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance may submit such information to the House or to the Senate or to both the House and the Senate, as the case may be. The joint committee (but no subcommittee or member of the joint committee) shall have the right to make public any such information, in such cases and to such extent as it may deem advisable, but no such information shall be made public with respect to any particular taxpayer unless specifically authorized by the joint committee; but this sentence shall not apply to information made public through the medium of a public hearing as provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection."

And on page 4, to strike out all of section 5 and insert:

SEC. 5. The joint committee may authorize any one or more persons to conduct any part of such investigation on behalf of the committee, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such hearings, and require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony, as the committee may authorize, but nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing a public hearing. In any such case subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by him.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is my intention to submit a motion that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House. It is very necessary for the joint committee which will be appointed to start its work.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the nature of the House amendments?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I do not believe the changes which have been made by the House in the joint resolution vitally affect the investigation.

The joint resolution as passed by the Senate provided that the committee could hold public hearings. A question was raised as to whether the committee could appoint some individual to go out and make investigations and have a public hearing, call witnesses, and so forth. Certain members of the committee believed that could be done, that any employee of the joint committee or anyone designated by the joint committee could hold a public hearing.

However, the House modified that provision of the joint resolution by restricting the holding of the public hearings to the discretion of the joint committee. There is no question about the holding of public hearings by the joint committee. However, under the present law relating to income-tax returns, those returns can be submitted by the Treasury or Treasury officials only to the Ways and Means Committee of the House, the Finance Committee of the Senate, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, or some special committee appointed by Congress with powers to investigate income-tax returns sitting in executive session.

Therefore we had to incorporate in the joint resolution a change in the present law in order to make public the income-tax returns. The House has modified the Senate joint resolution to the extent that while a subcommittee of the joint committee to be appointed under the provisions of the joint resolution may have a public hearing, yet any public hearing involving income-tax returns must be specifically ordered by the joint committee to be appointed by the two Houses or by a subcommittee consisting of two or more members. That is the major change; in fact, it is about the only change that was made by the House in the joint resolution, except certain restrictions placed upon agents of the committee in conducting investigations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first part of the amendment of the House, which strikes out certain language and inserts other language, the joint committee seems to be given rather plenary power to hold public hearings, and where it does not hold public hearings to make public such information as it may see fit, or which it may regard as relevant.

On page 2, however, the House struck out all of section 5 and inserted a new section, in which it is provided:

The joint committee may authorize any one or more persons to conduct any part of such investigation on behalf of the committee, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such hearings, and require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony as the committee may authorize, but nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing a public hearing.

The joint committee, I believe, is to be made up of 12 persons, and it is authorized to appoint subcommittees of the joint committee. Is that language to be construed as meaning that no subcommittee of the joint committee could hold a public hearing, or does it apply only to the appointment of others than members of the joint committee as being authorized to hold hearings?

Mr. HARRISON. The language is that the joint committee, or a subcommittee of two or more members of the joint committee may be appointed, and may hold public hearings at which tax returns may be submitted. However, no agent or individual member of the committee may make public income-tax returns, and no member or subcommittee of the joint committee can make public any tax returns of any taxpayer unless at the order of the joint committee and unless a public hearing has been held at which the information with respect to the return has been submitted.

Mr. BARKLEY. The new section 5, which prohibits public hearings on the part of anybody designated by the joint committee, applies, then, I suppose, to others than members of the joint committee.

Mr. HARRISON. For instance, if the joint committee should want to send someone out to make an investigation that person would not have the power to hold a public hearing. Public hearings are to be under the direction of the joint committee, or a subcommittee of the joint committee consisting of two or more members.

Mr. BARKLEY. My inquiry is prompted by the fact that when members of the joint committee who may be designated as a subcommittee, or the joint committee as a whole, in the course of their investigation of the evasion of taxes, ferret out those who have violated the law or have resorted to artificial devices in order to keep from paying taxes, I do not believe such persons ought to be protected by secrecy on the part of members of the joint committee itself. I can appreciate the probable advisability of having such a prohibition apply to others than members of the committee; but I certainly should not like to see incorporated in the joint resolution a provision that would handicap the joint committee itself, or any subcommittee of the joint committee, either in making public the information it obtains, or in holding a public hearing.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not believe there is anything in the amendments adopted by the House that would restrict the joint committee in making public any matter relative to any of the revelations that may be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or holding a public hearing?

Mr. HARRISON. Or holding a public hearing on any matter contained in any tax return. I do not know who will be on the committee. I do not know whether or not I shall be a member of the joint committee. If I should consult my own convenience, I should not want to be on it; but I have not the slightest doubt that the searchlight of publicity will be thrown upon every one of the evasions that have been pointed out, or any others that may be ferreted out from any of the tax returns.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am glad to hear the Senator say that, and I am glad to hear him give that construction to the House amendments. In my judgment, if a taxpayer is evading the tax laws of the country, or is using subterfuges, or is resorting to any other dishonorable practice in an effort to escape taxes or avoid taxes, I think his name ought to be given, and I think the committee ought to hold public hearings, and the facts ought to be given the fullest publicity that can possibly be given them, because I think such men in high place ought not to be protected by a committee of this body or of the other body, or by a joint committee. I hope no action will be taken by the joint committee that will avoid publicity where the law has been violated or evaded.

Mr. HARRISON. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator says, and I am sure the joint committee that will be designated by the presiding officers of the House and the Senate will not stand for any secrecy in the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further for just a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's attitude, and I know the Senator from Mississippi would be the last man in this body to protect by secrecy any deliberate violator of the law. I fully realize the undesirability of making public indiscriminately the reports of taxpayers who have made an honest effort to pay their taxes; but a different rule ought to be adopted as between honest taxpayers—those who have sought to pay all the taxes due the Government, although they may make a mistake now and then, and those who have deliberately resorted to the devices suggested and mentioned in the President's message the other day in order that they may evade the payment of taxes. I fully appreciate the Senator's attitude on that subject, and I am sure it will be carried out in good faith.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment offered by the House in reference to section 5 seems to be clear enough as to its purport. It provides:

> The joint committee may authorize any one or more persons to conduct any part of such investigation on behalf of the committee, and for such purpose any person so authorized may hold such hearings.

As I understand, the effect of that amendment is to take out of the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury the power to hold hearings, and to designate a representative of the committee to do so.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right.

Mr. BORAH. The parties holding the particular hearings provided for in section 5, however, are not to make them public.

Mr. HARRISON. No; there is to be no public hearing by anyone except the full committee or a subcommittee.

Mr. BORAH. What I should like to know is the Senator's construction of the other amendment, because it is not very plain to me:

> The joint committee shall have the right to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Senate and the House of Representatives, and shall submit such information to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance. The Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance may submit such information to the House or to the Senate or to both the House and the Senate, as the case may be. The joint committee (but no subcommittee or member of the joint committee) shall have the right to make public any such information, in such cases and to such extent as it may deem advisable, but no such information shall be made public with respect to any particular taxpayer unless specifically authorized by the joint committee.

In the first place, I presume it is conceded that the joint committee may make public such information as it desires. May the committees of the Senate and of the House, under this provision, make public such information as they desire in the public behalf?

Mr. HARRISON. There is some question as to the exact meaning of the present law, which has been on the statute books for some time. The Ways and Means Committee of the House, or the Senate Finance Committee, or the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation may obtain from the Treasury Department income-tax returns; but the law specifically provides that it must be done in an executive session, and then the committee may report the matter to either the House or the Senate, and it shall be made public. That is the present law touching the regular committees of the House and Senate. The joint committee may hold public hearings, they may get the tax returns, they may make them public, or they may authorize a subcommittee of two or more members to make them public.

Mr. BORAH. After the joint committee has made its report to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Finance Committee, may not the Committee on Ways and Means and the Finance Committee use their discretion in making public such material as they desire to make public?

Mr. HARRISON. This provision applies to the hearings before the joint committee. It is my opinion that the joint committee which is appointed under this provision may make a full report to the Houses of Congress, and is also required to make a full report to the Ways and Means Committee and to the Finance Committee. I think that is what the joint resolution states.

Mr. BORAH. Assuming that the joint committee makes a full report to the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Finance——

Mr. HARRISON. And the joint resolution says to Congress, too.

Mr. BORAH. Then, what may those committees do with this information?

Mr. HARRISON. It is already public.

Mr. BORAH. Not necessarily. The committee may not have made it public.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not any doubt that the joint committee will have public hearings, and the testimony will be taken down and printed and distributed. It will be a Government record.

Mr. BORAH. What I should like to know is whether that is the Senator's construction or whether that is the language of the joint resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the construction of the experts who helped to draw up this language in the House; and I have talked to the House Members who had the matter in charge, and that is their construction.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. At the bottom of the first page, the last sentence of the amendment provides that—

> The joint committee (but no subcommittee or member of the joint committee) shall have the right to make public any such information, in such cases, and to such extent as it may deem advisable, but no such information shall be made public with respect to any particular taxpayer unless specifically authorized by the joint committee; but this sentence shall not apply to information made public through the medium of a public hearing as provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

So if the information comes out in a public hearing, of course, it is public. It is public immediately upon its revelation; but if it is not elicited at a public hearing, under this language, nobody but the joint committee itself can make it public—not any subcommittee.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I supposed—that if it is information which has not been obtained by the public by reason of a public hearing, the sole authority to make it public is the joint committee. Is that correct?

Mr. HARRISON. The House has broadened the authority of the joint committee to say whether or not information shall be made public. Personally, I can envision, say, a community-property State where, because of the laws of that particular State, a person is not paying to the Government the amount that he would pay if the community-property law did not exist. I see no reason for advertising that particular person to the world and putting a castigation upon him when he was following the law; and I see no parallel between a case like that and the case of a man who goes into a contiguous country and organizes an insurance company in order to have policies issued to him, and borrows money on them and takes a deduction on his own income-tax return, or incorporates his yacht, or incorporates a farm down in South Carolina, because he might be a very wealthy man; or the case where the wife pays her husband a salary in order to get a deduction. Those are cases which ought to be published to the country, and the searchlight of publicity should be thrown on them. But there are certain other instances where I do not know that that should be done; if a man is not trying to defraud the Government we ought not to go out and try to harm him.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with the Senator; I think there is a difference between acts of evasion, and perhaps we would not want to make certain facts known as to certain individuals operating in a certain way, and in certain other cases we would. But what I want to know is, Who is the sole authority to determine what is to be made public and what is not to be made public?

Mr. HARRISON. The joint committee appointed under the joint resolution would be given that authority.

Mr. BORAH. And the House of Representatives, through its committee, or the Senate, through its committee, would have no authority to do that whatever?

Mr. HARRISON. It comes under the authority of the joint committee appointed by the two Houses as to what is to be made public and what is not to be made public.

Mr. BORAH. I cannot understand why we should create a joint committee to ascertain facts and then rest with that joint committee the sole authority to determine what should be made public. It seems to me that the Senate has some authority in the matter which it ought not to surrender.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say again to the Senator that I have not the slightest doubt that every matter which deals with the inequities portrayed in the President's message will be made public, and a report on them will be sent by the joint committee to the Congress and to the respective committees, the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate. These committees can in turn submit such information in a report to the House and to the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I myself have no doubt that certain cases will be made public; but it does seem to me that we ought to retain to ourselves, as the Senate of the United States, some discretion as to which cases should be and which should not be publicized in this matter.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senate should desire to write into the law a provision that the joint committee shall receive these returns and that they shall be made public, and that everyone appointed by the committee may go out and have a hearing, and that that should be public, and should be given to the press, the Senate could do that. I think it is very well to lodge the authority in the hands of the Members of this body and of the other body, because I do not believe they are going to impose on the privileges granted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language of the first amendment is:

The joint committee shall have the right to submit any relevant or useful information thus obtained to the Senate and the House of Representatives—

That is, it will be within their discretion to submit any of this information to the House or the Senate—and shall submit—

That is mandatory—

such information to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance.

Then the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance may submit such information, given to them by the joint committee, to the House and the Senate; so that it will not be altogether locked up within the bosom of this joint committee. The joint committee may submit all this information to the two Houses of Congress. They are required to submit that information to the two committees, and the two committees may in their discretion submit that information to the House and to the Senate, and, of course, when they submit it, it becomes public property.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator's construction is the correct construction, I am satisfied. As I understand the Senator, the joint committee shall submit this information to the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. And those committees, or either of them, may in their discretion make any such information public as they see fit?

Mr. BARKLEY. By submitting it to the House and to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what the joint resolution states.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

STRIKES IN THE STEEL INDUSTRY

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, at a recent session of the Senate the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] submitted a resolution (S. Res. 140) providing for an investigation into the delivery or nondelivery of mail to establishments where there are in progress industrial strikes. In a few minutes I shall send to the desk an amendment I desire to propose to the resolution, but before doing so I should like to address myself to the subject of the controversy.

Mr. President, in every form of business enterprise throughout the civilized world there is employed an instrument known as a written contract. The written and signed contract is now almost commonplace. It is used in the humblest business transaction and in transactions involving millions of dollars. It is used by honest men in dealing with other honest men, and by honest men in their dealings with dishonest men. In the first instance, where honest men deal with honest men, the signed contract takes the place of memory. In the second instance the signed contract is a necessity—a means of protection.

A written contract is simply the reduction to the typewritten or printed word of the agreement of minds previously reached by interested parties. A written contract, perhaps, is no more binding than an oral one. But honest men do not hesitate to reduce to writing and to sign their names to an agreement previously reached in verbal discussion.

I make these general observations about signed contracts because, unbelievable as it may seem, the question of a signed contract has brought to the Nation an industrial disturbance which already has cost the lives of five men in the Chicago district, has thrown into idleness some 90,000 workers in the steel industry stretching from Buffalo, down through the Mahoning Valley of Ohio, into Cleveland and along the lake front to the Middle West and the Calumet area.

To be more specific, the present steel strikes came about because Republic Steel Corporation, Youngstown Sheet & Tube Corporation, and Inland Steel Corporation have refused to sign contracts which will guarantee to their workmen certain wages, hours, and working conditions.

It is a situation which has no explanation in common sense, in morals, or justice. Perhaps we are here seeing the dying gasp of the so-called rugged individualists—Tom Girdler, Frank Purnell, and the Block brothers in Chicago.

Permit me to give you, Senators, a quick picture of the background of the present crisis.

About a year ago, in July 1936, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee set about, in answer to demands of the Nation's steel workers, to bring unionization into the steel industry. That industry had been antiunion for 40 years. It was the scene of many attempts at unionization and many bitter and bloody fights.

The success of the campaign, I know from personal investigation, was immediate. Workmen joined the union of their choice by the thousands. By March of this year, just a few months ago, the steel union was so strong, and the general trend of the times toward justice for the workingman so pronounced, that we witnessed a history-making epoch: The gigantic United States Steel Corporation did the wise and just thing by signing a union contract—I repeat, by signing a union contract—which brought the $5 day and the 40-hour week to the industry. That contract gave recognition to the union for its members.

That was the turning point of industrial America. The action of Myron Taylor, chairman of the board of United States Steel, and other officials of that corporation in signing a union contract will be remembered so long as the United States exists. It was a monumental step, a wise step and a peace-assuring step.

In the weeks and months that followed, 140 steel-producing, steel-fabricating, and steel-processing companies had also seen the wisdom of giving to their workmen the protection of signed contracts; and they, too, signed. So that today there are approximately 375,000 steel workers of the Nation protected by signed contracts. I have before me here the list of the companies by name that have signed contracts with the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, and I ask that that list be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, one of the important features of these signed contracts is that peace in the industry is guaranteed by them, because proper grievance-settling machinery is set up. While strikes are not outlawed—nor should they ever be—by the contracts, the necessity for resort to that economic weapon is made virtually negligible. The fact is that companies under contract have had no strikes.

In that connection let me quote from a public statement issued by Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, under date of March 21:

The contract establishes orderly methods for the adjustment of all disputes and grievances that may arise during the course of employment.

There must under no circumstances be any strike or other cessation of work while such disputes or grievances are in the process of adjustment.

And under date of March 19, the Pittsburgh Press had this to say editorially about the signed contracts between United States Steel and the union:

The contract signed is a sample of what can be done when both sides meet and peaceably negotiate.

Officials of United States Steel and of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee—the C. I. O. organizing agency—are to be congratulated upon entering into such a sensible agreement. Particular credit, we believe, is due to President Benjamin Fairless, of Carnegie, Ill., and to Philip Murray, head of the union. Both have shown a fine cooperative spirit in their dealings with one another.

They have demonstrated that reasonable and fair agreement can be amicably arrived at, when reasonable spokesmen do the negotiating.

We hope other strife-torn industries and other unions will follow the example of big steel and the C. I. O. in settling their labor problems.

Had the other steel companies, the so-called big independents, followed the lead of United States Steel and the 140 other steel companies and signed a union contract with the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, there never would have been that recent Chicago massacre; there never would have been 90,000 workers idle; there never would have been the present threat to industrial recovery.

The sole responsibility for the present strike in the steel industry lies at the doors of Republic Steel Corporation, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and Inland Steel. All these companies have to do to end this strike immediately is to sign the same kind of a contract that United States Steel and 140 other companies have signed.

This is the first time in the history of industrial America where the issue has revolved around the obstinacy of a few men in refusing to affix their signatures to a union contract. Most strikes heretofore have revolved around the question of recognition. Once that question was settled, nobody even gave a second thought to the question of signing what had been agreed upon. In the recent automobile strikes the question was recognition. When the degree of recognition was determined the heads of such important producers as General Motors, Chrysler, Hudson, and the others quickly signed the agreements.

Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Inland Steel, and Republic have announced they will recognize the steel union and will accept the terms of the contract but will not sign. And, believe it or not, Senators, they run to the Wagner law for solace.

They say that under the Wagner law they do not have to sign a contract. I say that the obvious intent of the Wagner law, once an agreement has been reached, is to sign such an agreement. It is true that specifically the Wagner law provides for collective bargaining; that is, the company must meet with representatives of its workmen and seek to reach an agreement. It is possible that an agreement cannot be reached in certain situations. Obviously, where there is no agreement there can be no signed contract.

But in the present instance these steel companies that have brought strikes to the Nation's No. 1 industry say they will accept the agreement. They have reached an agreement. But they will not sign.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if the sole question in dispute now is that of signing the contract?

Mr. GUFFEY. Yes; that is the sole question in dispute.

Mr. President, I contend that such an attitude taxes one's belief in their sincerity to carry out the terms of the agreement. Without a signed contract there is nothing to prevent Tom Girdler, for instance, from issuing an order tomorrow to cut wages and to lengthen hours.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The real difficulty, the age-old difficulty, is that the industry does not want to recognize the union, and all that is involved in the signing of the contract is the recognition of the union?

Mr. GUFFEY. No, Mr. President; the difficulty and the question in dispute is the signing of the contract. Representatives of 70 percent of the steel industry have signed the contract. They have agreed on the terms.

Mr. President, of course, Tom Girdler's workmen could go on strike. But that is exactly why they are on strike. They want to be sure, through a written agreement, that their working conditions and wages and hours will be as provided.

Nor can those companies say they do not sign union contracts. The record shows that they have signed contracts in the past with the United Mine Workers of America. They will give written protection to coal miners, but they will not give the same protection to steel workers.

These steel companies also argue that they will not sign because they are opposed to the "closed shop." The best answer to that lies in the action of 140 other steel companies, including such independent producers, mark you, as Jones & Laughlin, Wheeling Steel, Crucible Steel, Allegheny Steel, and others. They signed, and I doubt if they are now any more in favor of the closed shop than they have ever been. Companies under contract with the steel workers organizing committee are union shops, not closed shops. It is nothing but an excuse for bringing strikes to the industry to say that 140 other steel companies, comprising nearly 70 percent of the entire industry, committed sin in signing contracts.

For my part, I should rather be condemned a million times for signing a union contract than to have the blood of those Chicago steel workers on my head. I am glad to know that the Department of Justice has sent investigators into the Middle West to learn just what is going on.

I confess, Senators, that this attitude on the part of Republic Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Inland Steel, and the others who are refusing to sign an agreement is one of the most amazing spectacles in our era. It smacks of an arbitrary frame of mind pretty close to dictatorship. It seems to me that the American people should be told of this great injustice being done to the steel workers; and it seems to me American public opinion should tell Tom Girdler, Frank Purnell, and the Block brothers that the just thing, the right thing to do is to sign a contract with the union.

Mr. President, I offer an amendment to Senate Resolution 140, authorizing an investigation of the delivery or nondelivery of mail to the establishments where industrial strife is in progress, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 1, line 13, eliminate the period after the word "establishment", insert a comma, and add: "and (3) of the moral conduct of both parties to the industrial strife occurring and ascertain whether or not the action of the Republic Steel Corporation, the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Corporation, and the Inland Steel Corporation in refusing to sign an agreement constitutes a violation of the Wagner Labor Relations Act, and (4) of the illegal holding and use of machine guns, repeating rifles, and other war paraphernalia which is now in possession of these above-named corporations and being used without permits in violation of the State and Federal firearms statutes, and (5) of the dropping of material upon pedestrians on the public highways by airplanes chartered and used by the Republic Steel Corporation, the swooping down of planes over meetings of citizens to disturb lawful and peaceful assemblages, and the importation of gunmen across State lines by the Republic Steel Corporation for strikebreaking purposes in violation of the Byrnes Act."

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO REPORT BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today's session the Committee on Appropriations be permitted to submit reports.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I discussed the matter earlier in the day with the able Senator from Arkansas. I think he has reference particularly to the bill carrying the relief appropriation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and I thought also it might be possible that another bill would be ready to be reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McNARY. Certainly I have no objection to the order being made, provided it is understood that no vote will be taken on Monday if the relief bill is called up that day for consideration. There are some Senators who are absent who would like to be present at the time of the final disposition of that bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will say it is my expectation, if the bill should be reported during the recess or adjournment following today's session, to have it taken up Monday, but I should not expect or insist upon a vote on that day. I am satisfied the consideration of the bill will require a longer time than that, and in any event I will say to the Senator, I shall not insist upon a final vote on the bill on Monday.

Mr. McNARY. Then, Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Arkansas is granted, and the order is entered.

THE PRICE OF GOLD

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to take a few moments at this time to call the attention of the Senate to the so-called gold controversy. I call the attention of the Senate to what might be termed "our gold policy." This policy is fixed and definite; yet the public press each day carries statements such as these:

Too much gold.
The new yellow peril.

The particular news item to which I refer appeared in the press on Tuesday, June 8, and I desire to read the last paragraph:

As it happens, Government officials have on more than one occasion taken the trouble to deny rumors of any change in the gold price.

Various publications have carried the statement that the administration is about to lower the price of gold, and apparently the public believes that at any time it sees fit the administration, or some official of the administration, is able to lower the price of gold. I will say now that no official of the Government has the power under any law to lower the price of gold below $35 per ounce.

I read further:

But these denials have not set at rest the fears of a change in the gold-purchase policy of the United States. There was a time when many felt that gold was better than dollars. Now the feeling seems to be that dollars are better than gold. A solution of the present gold crisis may, sooner or later, be found. But in the meantime Uncle Sam is suffering from the plague of Midas.

Mr. President, on June 6 the public press carried a statement from the United Press from which I wish to read one paragraph:

The chief fear is that the United States will change its gold policy. President Roosevelt Friday gave an element of cheer by announcing that no change was imminent, but even that has not completely eliminated the nervousness.

Mr. President, no responsible official of the Government has stated as yet that the price of gold could not be changed unless the Congress enacts additional legislation; but the fact is that, under existing law, there can be no reduction in the price of gold.

The amendment that was passed in 1933 gave the President the power to decrease the content of the gold dollar. Such amendment gave him the power to increase the price of gold per ounce. Under existing law he has the right to reduce the gold content of the dollar 50 percent. That means, when transposed into figures, that he has the right to bid up the price of gold from $20.67 an ounce to twice that amount, or $41.34 per ounce. As the weight of the gold dollar is decreased the price of gold, as measured in dollars, is arbitrarily and positively increased.

I call attention to another statement appearing in the New York Investment News of recent date, and I read just one or two sentences from this statement.

The gold problem continues to occupy a prominent place among current pressing worries, and fears raised by recent rumors of a possible reduction in this country's price of $35 an ounce for the metal have been difficult to allay.

A little further on I read:

Thus, at the moment it seems reasonable to expect the United States to continue to buy gold at the fixed purchase price despite the hardships entailed.

Then, Mr. President, on a subsequent date the American Banker, a publication serving the banking interests of the Nation, published an editorial from which I read one paragraph:

As we pointed out a week ago in this column, the Secretary of the Treasury is not limited as to the price he may consider as justifiable for gold, although the dollar may not, under present statutes, be revalued higher than 60 percent nor lower than 50 percent of its predepression gold content.

That states the law and likewise states the facts. It may be desired to lower the price of gold, but it cannot be done. So says the editorial in the American Banker, and the statement is exactly correct.

When the law was passed in 1933 the President had power to devalue the dollar 50 percent, but he did not exercise the full power granted him; he only devalued the dollar 40 percent; he took 40 percent of the content of the gold dollar from the dollar, leaving in the gold dollar 60 percent of its weight.

Then, in 1934 an amendment was added to the original act, providing that the President could not retain more than 60 percent of the old gold content in the dollar. So, as the law now stands the President's power is limited to an increase of the price of gold but he is without power to decrease the price below $35 per ounce. He has not the power now, and no official of the Government has the power now, to reduce the price of gold below $35 an ounce. What would be the effect if such power existed and such power were exercised?

At the present time we have in the Public Treasury, as per its statement of June 7, 1937, the sum of $12,098,366,985.58. We have that much gold in our Treasury. On the same date we had a large amount of silver in our Treasury, the sum being $1,333,944,980.06. The silver is not evaluated at its legal value but at its actual commodity value, the price at which it can be sold on the market, so the value of the silver that we had is measured in terms of gold, and as measured in terms of gold it amounted to $1,333,944,980.06. Adding those two sums together we find that on June 7, 1937, we had in our Treasury gold and silver to the amount of $13,432,311,965.64, and yet all kinds of money in circulation amount to only $6,487,000,000 or less than one-half of our gold and silver stock. This means that today we could redeem every dollar in circulation with a dollar's worth of gold and still have in the Public Treasury a like amount that would be unused. It could be used, and in my opinion it should be used.

I shall presently ask permission to place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement which explains more fully the law and the limitations upon the powers of the President and the Treasury Department in this respect.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BONE. Will the Senator advise us why it is the policy of the Treasury Department to buy gold in the open market and, in order to secure the money to buy it, why they issue bonds and increase the indebtedness of the Government and pay interest on the debt in order to buy the gold?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Because that is the law of the United States.

Mr. BONE. What logic underlies that sort of activity?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Some years ago when the persons who had money in the banks thought more of gold than they thought of money they took their checks and currency to the banks and demanded gold. Because of the demand for gold for hoarding our gold supply was being rapidly depleted. Due to that situation, in 1933 Congress, following the recommendation of the President, authorized the abandonment of the gold standard by the United States. We announced to the world that no longer would the currency of this country be redeemed in gold. Because of that fact the administration issued that order taking the country off the gold standard, which order was later approved by the Congress of the United States.

It is true that at the present time we are issuing interest-bearing bonds and selling those bonds in order that we may get money or credit with which to buy gold; but I deny that the Treasury has directly bought a single ounce of gold. This is what has happened:

When we sell goods abroad such goods must be paid for. Foreigners can pay for our goods with only one of three things—either goods of their own manufacture, or gold, or perhaps silver. If we continue to trade with our foreign neighbors, we must trade with them and accept payment for our goods in their goods or in gold or in silver. The tariff walls are so high in this country that it is difficult for foreigners to pay the tariff and then sell their goods here at a profit; so our export trade is greater than our import trade.

That means that the balance of trade is in our favor, so when foreigners desire to purchase from us automobiles and other things we make in this country, they cannot pay us with goods and they have to pay us in gold. They get the gold and send the gold to the United States. It is handled through the banks. The moment the gold reaches the United States coast it becomes a sort of contraband. It is illegal for any bank to keep gold. The moment the bankers in New York or San Francisco or elsewhere get some gold in payment for goods they must turn such gold over to the Treasury under the law, and the Treasury must take it over under the law and pay the bank in some form of money, currency, or credit.

That is the reason why the United States has to issue interest-bearing bonds and sell such bonds to get the credit to take over the gold received in this country as payment for the goods which our merchants and manufacturers sell abroad.

As I have said, I deny that we are directly buying gold. The Treasury is following the law, taking over the gold as it appears in the United States.

Does that answer the question of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BONE. I am wondering just what would be the result if the Government issued its own Treasury notes in payment for the gold, thereby adding to the circulating medium of the country, to be sure; but I am still filled with a sense of wonderment, if not bewilderment, as to why we should add to our national debt to acquire gold when we might issue Treasury notes against the gold we already have.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator anticipated my motive, because when I shall have concluded in a moment I shall introduce a bill proposing to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a form of currency, against our surplus gold. Of the $12,000,000,000 of gold now on hand there is almost $1,000,000,000 that is not allocated or pledged. For the balance of the gold we have issued gold certificates and those are now in the hands of the several Federal Reserve banks.

During the last few months we have ceased to issue these gold certificates so when the gold comes to the Treasury now it is paid for and no gold certificates are issued against it, and the gold is placed in the public Treasury. In the public Treasury we have now over $800,000,000 of gold unpledged, and unallocated, and there is no obligation whatever against it. My bill suggests that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue a form of currency against this surplus gold, which means against the $800,000,000 of gold now in the Treasury which is unpledged and unallocated.

My bill further provides that in the future, instead of selling interest-bearing bonds in order to get money with which to buy more gold, the Treasury Department may issue this same kind of currency and exchange it for gold as it may come to the United States.

This is a duplicate of the silver program. We have purchased over a billion ounces of silver. We paid for that silver not with interest-bearing bonds, but with silver certificates which we have issued to pay for the silver. Through this method we have placed in circulation over $700,000,000 of silver certificates. That has made money more plentiful and cheaper, and to that extent prices have been increased. I am free to admit that the silver program of this administration has been responsible directly for the increase in circulation of over $700,000,000, and raised prices to such a point that the producers of the country have a better chance to live than they had formerly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am seeking information from the Senator. I know he has a great command of the subject. Referring to the suggestion that gold comes to us from abroad only in payment of trade balances, how does it happen that when our imports are greatly exceeding our exports we are still getting gold?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I deny that that is correct. The Senator may be correct, and I cannot state positively, but it is my information that the balance of trade is in our favor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course that is a provable fact; but it is my understanding that the imports do exceed the exports and yet we are still getting gold.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then, if the Senator is correct, my statement would be in error.

Because of the rumors that the United States might devalue or reduce the value of gold, that statement itself is calculated to induce foreigners to sell their gold when they can get $35 an ounce rather than hold the gold and perhaps get only $30 or perhaps $20.67 an ounce, as was the price prior to devaluation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not examined the figures of imports and exports for the last 30 days; but, while it is true that the imports have increased, it is not my understanding that they now exceed exports. Certainly they do not exceed them very greatly even if they exceed them at all. I do not think they exceed the exports at all.

However, as the Senator from Michigan has said, that is a matter ascertainable from the Department. I think he will find if he looks into the matter that the Senator from Oklahoma is correct, that our exports exceed our imports, though not by as large a sum as during previous years.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I think there is one question which probably is as much shrouded in obscurity to the average man, and perhaps to many Members of Congress, as anything can be; and it seems very strange, after all these years, that any obscurity should remain about this question.

It occurs to me that a couple of years ago, or perhaps within even less time than that, a resolution was introduced in the Senate asking the Secretary of the Treasury to answer this question:

Who owns the gold, amounting to some $12,000,000,000, that is impounded by the United States Government?

For instance, I take up the report of the Treasury today and find that there are outstanding—that is, outside of the Treasury—gold certificates amounting to nearly $3,000,000,000. Who is the owner of all this gold that is impounded by the United States Government? I think the people of the country are entitled to know who owns it. There is an impression that the Government owns it, but that is not true.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is very clear under the law that all the gold is owned by the United States Treasury, which means the United States Government, which means by 120,000,000 American citizens. It is true that, while we own this gold the Federal Reserve banks, which were forced to send the gold to the Treasury, are now holding what are called gold certificates. They may claim that those are gold receipts, and I know they are hoping the time will come when they can send those receipts to the Federal Treasury and have them redeemed and take back the gold. Then they are hoping that the dollar may be increased so far as weight is concerned, which means that the price of gold will be reduced, and that is exactly what they want.

Mr. President, what would be the effect if we should reduce the price of gold per ounce? At the present time we have $12,100,000,000 of gold at $35 an ounce. That means that we have several hundred million ounces of gold at $35 an ounce. If we should reduce the gold price per ounce, we should write off of the value of our gold the exact amount of the reduction. In other words, the present gold stock is valued at $12,100,000,000 on the basis of $35 an ounce. If we should reduce the gold valuation to $20.67 an ounce, as it was before we devalued the dollar, we should at one fell swoop reduce the value of our gold stock 40 percent. Forty percent of $12,100,000,000 is almost $5,000,000,000; so by reducing the price of gold per ounce we automatically and positively reduce the value of our gold in terms of dollars; and in the condition the Treasury is in today, I cannot understand who would favor that sort of a proposal.

But, Mr. President, that is not all the effect that would be sustained if we should reduce the price of gold below $35 per ounce. If we should reduce the price of gold below $35 per ounce, it means that we should put more gold in the gold dollar. As we put more gold in the gold dollar, we should make the gold dollar larger. To the extent that we made the gold dollar larger, we should make the gold dollar more valuable; and to the extent that we made the gold dollar more valuable we should decrease prices. A reduction in the price of gold means a more valuable dollar, and a more valuable dollar means a reduction in the price of everything produced in America. It means a reduction in wages. It means a reduction in the price of corn and hogs and cattle and wheat and human labor, and the standard of living as well.

So I cannot understand why anyone, save a very few, would favor a reduction in the price of gold below $35 per ounce, and I can tell the Senate who those few would be. They would be the holders of our bonds and mortgages. I can see why they would be in favor of reducing the value of gold per ounce, because it would mean making more valuable the dollars represented in their investments; and to the extent that gold is reduced in valuation, to the same extent we add value to every mortgage and every bond that is now outstanding.

Relative to the persistent rumor that the administration is considering reducing the value of gold per ounce below $35, I call attention to existing law relative to the matter.

On May 12, 1933, the President approved an act of Congress, providing as follows:

> In no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent.

At that time the weight of the gold dollar was 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine. On this basis gold was worth, in terms of dollars, $20.67 per fine ounce, so that the effect of the provision just mentioned was to give the President power to divide the existing gold dollar into two parts and call each part $1. This meant, in terms of prices, that the President had the power to increase the price of gold from $20.67 per fine ounce to $41.34 per fine ounce.

The President did not see fit to divide the dollar into two equal parts but, instead, he took out 40 percent of the weight or content of such dollar, leaving in such dollar 60 percent of its gold content. This action, when transposed into figures, meant that the President had bid up the price of gold from $20.67 to $35 per ounce.

The law which gave the President the power to devalue the gold dollar was amended by the act of Congress approved on January 30, 1934, such amendment being as follows:

> Nor shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight.

As the law now stands the President has the power to still further reduce the gold content of the dollar from 60 percent weight of such original gold dollar to 50 percent weight of such original gold dollar, but he has no power to increase the gold content of the existing gold dollar.

Transposing the present power of the President into figures the President has absolutely no power, under the law, to reduce the value of gold below $35 per fine ounce, but he does have the power under existing law to still further increase the price of gold from the said $35 per fine ounce to $41.34 per fine ounce.

The law relative to the devaluation of the dollar and the price of gold at present is as follows:

Paragraph 2, of section 43, of Public, No. 10, Seventy-third Congress, as amended, reads as follows:

> (2) By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine-tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed, or in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established, the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity, but in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent. Nor shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight.

As expressed in terms of the gold content of the dollar, the foregoing section means that, at present, the President has the power to fix the weight of such gold dollar at any point between 50 and 60 percent of the original weight of such gold dollar.

As expressed in terms of prices the President, under such section, has the power to fix the value of gold per fine ounce at any point between $35 and $41.34.

Without supplemental legislation the President is without power to fix the weight of the gold dollar at more than 60 percent of its former weight, which means that he is without power to reduce the price of gold below $35 per fine ounce.

Mr. President, a few days ago I was requested by Mr. O'Neal, the head of the American Farm Bureau Federation, to give him my interpretation of what would be the result if we should decrease the price of gold per ounce. I replied to Mr. O'Neal; and at this point I ask to have printed in the RECORD a copy of such reply.

There being no objection, the reply was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 1, 1937.

Hon. EDWARD A. O'NEAL,
President, American Farm Bureau Federation,
Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. O'NEAL: I have your favor of recent date, in which you request my "opinion as to what effect this accumulation of gold has on our monetary structure and our commodity dollar program", and, replying, advise that in order to give an opinion I must first state the facts relative to our monetary program.

Prior to 1933 the United States was on the single gold standard, which meant that all our money was based upon and redeemable in gold. In March of 1932 we had only some $4,500,000,000 of gold, and such gold had to support some $5,500,000,000 of currency and some $45,000,000,000 of credit or deposit money. Because of the depression and the uncertainties and fear which a panic develops, vast quantities of such gold was being withdrawn from the banks and the Treasury and hoarded. It was the alarming increase of gold losses in the early part of 1933 which caused the Government to stop redeeming currency and deposit money with gold coins. In addition to the stopping of putting out gold coin, the Government placed an embargo on the shipment of gold and, in addition, called in all monetary gold from all the banks and from all other sources public and private.

For many years gold, and gold alone, has been our basic primary money. Gold has always been considered as having intrinsic value; hence the redeemer of our currency. Because our currency has been redeemable in gold, every dollar of money—currency and deposit—in circulation has been considered to be of the value of the metal in the gold dollar.

In 1912, J. P. Morgan testified before the House Banking and Currency Committee that "money is gold and nothing else." It was in harmony with J. P. Morgan's definition, "money is gold", and for the following specific reasons, that our Government called in to the Treasury all monetary gold then in the United States:

1. Gold has always been considered basic primary money.
2. Until recently most of the nations were on the single gold standard.
3. For many years the currencies of all nations have been and are now constantly valued in gold.
4. Gold is universally recognized as the best medium for the settlement of international balances.

Today, while gold is still considered as money, gold coins are not in circulation in any country in the world. Today all nations, internally and domestically, have commodity money, yet their foreign exchange is always based upon gold. Within the United States we have commodity money only, yet every dollar of our money, the moment it leaves the States or figures in foreign exchange, becomes of the value of the gold content of such dollar heretofore fixed by the President by proclamation.

On this date, June 1, 1937, we have in our Treasury $12,000,000,000 in gold—a sum larger than all the gold owned and held by all the other nations of the earth. Because we own and possess this vast quantity of gold we are able to fix and maintain the price and value of such metal throughout the world. Formerly gold was priced and valued by our Government at $20.67 per fine ounce. In order to cheapen the dollar and raise the general price level the administration has raised the price of gold to $35 per fine ounce. Under existing law the President has the power to still further raise the price of gold to $41.34 per ounce, but he is without power to lower the price below $35 per ounce.

As stated, until legislation is enacted, gold cannot be lowered in price. It is obvious that only a small percentage of our people could possibly favor the lowering of the present price of gold. The reasons for the foregoing statement are as follows:

1. Inasmuch as we have a $12,000,000,000 stock of gold, made up of some 342,857,142 ounces at $35 per ounce, if we should lower the price per ounce we would immediately write off as loss the exact amount of such reduction.
2. Reducing the price of gold per ounce would have the automatic and positive effect of immediately increasing the weight and value of the dollar; hence, the extent of the reduction in price per ounce would be reflected immediately by a higher valued dollar and consequently by lower prices, lower wages, and general deflation.
3. Reducing the price of gold would restrict, curtail, and diminish our export trade.
4. Reducing the price of gold would have the effect of increasing the value of the dollar, thereby decreasing the price level which, for the vast majority of our people, would increase taxes, interest, and debts.
5. Reducing the price of gold would postpone the balancing of the Budget and prolong the lingering depression on the self-evident proposition that the value of the dollar controls prices and prices control income and prosperity.

From the foregoing it is obvious that gold is money, and the more gold we acquire the more money we will have in our Treasury. It is further obvious that to reduce the price of gold would be to commit financial if not national suicide. As stated herein, the United States, as well as the world, is on a commodity money basis. All nations are cheapening their money units rather than increasing their value. This means that all nations are, in effect, raising the price of gold instead of reducing such price.

Because of our vast gold holdings and because of our favorable trade balance, the United States is able to fix the value of gold as measured by commodities at any point we see advantageous and proper. As stated, under existing law we may increase the price of gold, but we cannot lower such price; however, without additional legislation we may either increase or decrease the value of gold as measured by commodities to any point to suit our own domestic economy.

Such increase or decrease in gold value, as measured by commodities, may be brought about by increasing or decreasing the amount of money and credit permitted in circulation. Our program of raising commodity prices has been carried out through the raising of the price of gold, which means the decreasing of the gold content of the dollar, and through our Silver Purchase Act, under which we have added over $700,000,000 to the amount of money in circulation.

By increasing our circulation we dilute the supply of money, make money more plentiful, thereby cheaper, and to the extent the dollar is cheapened prices are increased proportionately. To lower prices a reverse policy would be followed. We may decrease the amount of money in circulation, which would make money scarcer, thereby higher in value, and to the extent that the dollar increases in value, prices fall in proportion.

Based upon the foregoing statements of fact, my answers to your communication are as follows:

1. We are now on a commodity-dollar basis and at present there seems little, if any, chance that we will ever leave the commodity-dollar standard.

2. Inasmuch as basic primary money is gold, and gold is money, and in view of the following additional facts: That we have "one-third of a nation ill-housed, ill-clad, ill-nourished"; that our Budget is still unbalanced; that taxes are high and debts are heavy, it is obvious that no one can justly complain that the Treasury is acquiring too much gold, and therefore too much money.

Respectfully submitted.

ELMER THOMAS.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I now ask permission, out of order, to introduce a bill. The bill contains but one paragraph. It is very short. I ask that it be read, and thereafter ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be read.

The bill (S. 2610) to authorize the issuance of currency against the security of unobligated gold in the Treasury was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue currency in such form and denominations as he may determine against any gold in the Treasury of the United States, except the gold funds held as a reserve for any United States notes, Treasury notes of 1890, or other outstanding currency or obligations. The amount of such currency issued and outstanding shall at no time exceed the value, at the legal standard, of the gold so held against such currency; but the face amount of the currency so issued shall not be less than the cost of all gold purchased after the date of enactment of this act under the provisions of section 3700 of the Revised Statutes, as amended: Provided, That the currency issued under this act shall be legal tender for all purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question before we leave the subject he has been discussing?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask the Senator to listen to the following computation: I am dealing now with the colloquy in which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] participated, based upon the suggestion that gold comes to us only to settle unfavorable trade balances.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that our favorable trade balance of 1935 was $235,000,000; that it fell to $34,000,000 in 1936; and that the balance of trade for January and February 1937 is an unfavorable balance of $63,826,000. I also call the Senator's attention to the fact that in 1935, when our favorable balance of trade was only $235,000,000, our gold imports were $1,739,000,000, and that in 1936, when our favorable balance of trade was only $34,000,000, our net gold imports were $1,117,000,000.

In the face of these figures, I am unable to see that the thesis can be sustained that gold comes to us only to settle merchandising balances of trade. I ask the Senator to comment on these figures.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am fearful that the Senator from Michigan does not take into account many of the things that we sell, and for which we expect payment. Not only do we sell automobiles abroad, and sell wheat abroad, and sell cotton abroad, but we sell many bonds and many securities abroad; and foreigners, when they desire to purchase our bonds and our securities, being without goods to deliver in payment, and having only gold, or being able to get only gold, must send gold here when they purchase our bonds and our securities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I completely agree with the statement the Senator is now making. I have always contended that the foreigner was using our gold-purchase program to denude our markets of our best equities at bargain prices. The Senator's original statement related, as I understood him, to a merchandising balance of trade.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I did not intend so to limit it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, if the Senator is including alien speculation in our good equities, it certainly is true that this gold at the pumped-up price of $35 an ounce is coming here primarily to take away our best securities; and the net result is, as the Secretary of the Treasury himself to all intents and purposes has confessed, that we may find ourselves at the mercy of Europe some day when it wants to raid these equities and put them back into our market.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Does the Senator object to the policy whereunder we have accumulated approximately $12,100,000,000 of gold? Does the Senator think that this gold is a dangerous commodity?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator does.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, let me read a little colloquy which took place before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives.

This is testimony taken before that committee on December 19, 1912. The colloquy was between Mr. Untermyer, the attorney representing the committee, and a man by the name of J. Pierpont Morgan. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if he knows either of these parties either personally or by reputation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think I have heard of them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, while I am not qualified to pass upon the ability of this gentleman, or his truth and veracity, for that matter, I have always had the impression that Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan enjoyed a reputation, not only here but abroad, as knowing something about money. I wonder if the Senator agrees with me about that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I think he had some such reputation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then I will read the colloquy, in which Mr. Untermyer was interrogating Mr. Morgan:

> Mr. UNTERMYER. The control of credit involves a control of money, does it not?
> Mr. MORGAN. A control of credit? No.
> Mr. UNTERMYER. You do not think so?
> Mr. MORGAN. What I call money is the basis of banking.
> Mr. UNTERMYER. But the basis of banking is credit, is it not?
> Mr. MORGAN. Not always. That is an evidence of banking, but it is not the money itself. Money is gold and nothing else.

If Mr. Morgan is correct, we have not only $12,100,000,000 of gold, but we have $12,100,000,000 of the only kind of money that the orthodox financial world recognizes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not desire to compete either with the Senator from Oklahoma or Mr. Morgan as a financial expert, but, as a matter of sheer, elementary common sense, I am unable to believe that the United States of America alone, by itself, can continue indefinitely to purchase all the loose gold in the world at an artificially high price. I think something has to intervene somewhere to save us from a Frankenstein.

The Secretary of the Treasury within the last week has been forced to issue additional Federal securities amounting to $800,000,000, as I recall the figures, for the purpose of overtaking another anticipated deficit, and $500,000,000 of that $800,000,000 is for the purpose of purchasing gold, which obviously is beyond any present or prospective necessity in the United States. I do not believe we can ever overtake our internal deficits so long as we are bonding ourselves to buy gold, then sterilizing the gold, and putting it back into the ground whence it originally came. Neither do I believe we can stabilize our economy if we continue to purchase Russian gold produced for $10 an ounce over yonder, South African gold produced for $16 an ounce over yonder, and take it into our Treasury automatically at $35 an ounce. I concede that the answer is entirely beyond my comprehension. I rose solely to deal with the figures which seemed to be involved in the thesis of the able Senator from Oklahoma. But we have been led into the other field, where, I freely confess, my observations are limited.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, because we devalued the dollar and increased the price of gold to $35 an ounce, the automobiles of Detroit were automatically, instantaneously, and positively reduced 40 percent abroad; and I make the statement—and ask the Senator if it is not correct—that it is because of such reduction in the price of automobiles abroad that their sales have increased so greatly in foreign countries.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is probably true, although the Senator is aware of the fact that Secretary Hull, on the other hand, would undertake to give the whole credit to the trade treaties.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think it is a wise policy if it affords an opportunity not only of denuding America of some of her stocks and bonds but likewise of denuding Detroit of some of her surplus automobiles.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I take it that the Senator from Michigan finds in foreign investments in American securities something that is challenging.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I certainly do.

Mr. BONE. I wonder, then, what the Senator thinks of the picture of American investments abroad, and hundreds, perhaps thousands, of factories owned abroad, that is, the stock, undoubtedly in corporate form, owned by Americans. I understand, and if my figures are inaccurate some one will correct me, that a thousand American factories are located in Canada. American investments abroad have run into billions of dollars. Does not the Senator feel that that is something which might well challenge our attention?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I entirely agree; and I am happy to say to my good friend from Washington that in the course of the tariff discussion 6 years ago I presented a complete analysis, which showed that 1,800 major American producers were operating plants abroad, which is virtually not only an exploitation of our capital but also an embargo against the opportunity to produce those goods in our own country and export them.

Mr. BONE. I think I have seen some of the studies the Senator put into the RECORD, and that is one of the reasons why I asked him the question. That has amounted to an export of American capital.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely.

Mr. BONE. Which has been used in actively competing with American standards of living; in other words, American capitalists have used their own money, literally, to beat down standards of living in this country to the plane of those of the cheap labor employed in foreign countries.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Since some question was raised regarding figures on exports and imports, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD at this time a monthly summary of foreign commerce for March 1937, as furnished by the United States Department of Commerce.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan realizes, I presume, that there was an acceleration of this exodus of factories from the United States due to the tariff and other artificial walls, or barriers, erected in the different nations of the world which were seeking to prevent the importation of goods. There is no law against an American investing in a factory or building a factory in any country in the world, and I do not know that any restriction could legally be placed upon such enterprises.

In addition to that, however undesirable it may be that foreigners should invest in American securities by their purchase on the security exchanges, there is no law against it. Does the Senator from Michigan feel that there ought to be any legal inhibition against a foreigner purchasing securities of corporations of the United States, while at the same time American citizens are at liberty to invest in foreign enterprises as much money as they see fit to invest?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I answer the Senator in this way: When I can get a reply from the Secretary of the Treasury to the series of questions on that subject I have been submitting to him for the last 6 months, I shall consider myself sufficiently informed to be able to reply, and I shall wait until I get the information.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the information and the figures will enlighten the Senator as to what policy should be adopted regarding any legal restriction to be imposed, I will be glad to wait.

STATUS OF PROVISIONAL OFFICERS OF THE WORLD WAR

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1040, placing officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War. I desire to deliver an explanation of the bill, and then I shall ask that the bill go over as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1040) placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who served as provisional officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, and were honorably separated from such service prior to December 31, 1921, are hereby placed in the same status with all persons who served as emergency officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War and extended the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers: Provided, That application under this act for benefits and/or privileges must be made within 1 year after the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

PROTECTION OF NORTHERN PACIFIC HALIBUT FISHERY

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of order of business 711, being Senate bill 1984, for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course we are not considering measures on the calendar today, and it is only by general accord that we can proceed in this fashion. What is the request of the Senator? Is it to lay aside temporarily the bill called up by the Senator from Texas, and consider his proposal?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes. I do not believe it will take more than a minute or two, and the reason for the request at this time is that this bill is an enabling measure, carrying out the provisions of a treaty. It relates to a halibut treaty, entered into in 1930. When the ratification of the treaty comes to Washington we will have no act upon this subject, and it is necessary to have a law enacted as quickly as possible.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oregon that the bill was pending before the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and I was authorized to make the report for the committee. I concur in the views voiced by the Senator from Washington that there are very special reasons for the prompt enactment of the proposed legislation. It implements the treaty, and it ought to become law at the earliest possible date. So far as I know there is no objection to it from any source.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1984) for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 6, page 8, to strike out, beginning with line 13, "Provided, That such duties as are imposed upon the collector of customs or any other person with respect to the seizure and forfeiture of a vessel under the customs laws shall be performed with respect to seizures and forfeitures under this act by the Secretary of Commerce or by such officers, agents, or other persons as may be authorized or designated for that purpose by the Secretary of Commerce" and to insert "Provided, That except as provided in section 5 hereof all rights, powers, and duties conferred or imposed by this act upon any officer or employee of the Treasury Department shall, for the purposes of this act, be exercised or performed by the Secretary of Commerce or by such persons as he may designate", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Northern Pacific Halibut Act of 1937."

SEC. 2. When used in this act—

(a) Convention: The word "convention" means the Convention between the United States and Canada for the Preservation of the Halibut Fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, signed at Ottawa on the 29th day of January 1937, and shall include the regulations of the International Fisheries Commission promulgated thereunder.

(b) Commission: The word "Commission" means the International Fisheries Commission provided for by article III of the convention.

(c) Person: The word "person" includes partnerships, associations, and corporations.

(d) Territorial waters of the United States: The term "territorial waters of the United States" means the territorial waters contiguous to the western coast of the United States and the territorial waters contiguous to the southern and western coasts of Alaska.

(e) Territorial waters of Canada: The term "territorial waters of Canada" means the territorial waters contiguous to the western coast of Canada.

(f) Convention waters: The term "convention waters" means the territorial waters of the United States, the territorial waters of Canada, and the high seas of the Northern Pacific Ocean and the Bering Sea, extending westerly from the limits of the territorial waters of the United States and of Canada.

(g) Halibut: The word "halibut" means the species of Hippoglossus inhabiting convention waters.

(h) Vessel: The word "vessel" includes every description of water craft or other contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation in water.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for—

(a) any person other than a national or inhabitant of the United States to catch or attempt to catch any halibut in the territorial waters of the United States;

(b) any person to transfer to or to receive upon any vessel of the United States, or to bring to any place within the jurisdiction of the United States any halibut caught in convention waters by the use of any vessel of a nation not a party to the convention, or caught in convention waters by any national or inhabitant of the United States or Canada in violation of the convention or of this act;

(c) any national or inhabitant of the United States to catch, attempt to catch, or to possess any halibut in the territorial waters of the United States or in convention waters in violation of any provision of the convention or of this act;

(d) any person within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States to furnish, prepare, outfit, or provision any vessel, other than a vessel of the United States or Canada, in connection with any voyage during which such vessel is intended to be, is being, or has been employed in catching, attempting to catch, or possessing any halibut in convention waters or the territorial waters of the United States or Canada;

(e) any person within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States to furnish, prepare, outfit, or provision any vessel of the United States or Canada in connection with any voyage during which such vessel is intended to be, is being, or has been employed in catching, attempting to catch, or possessing any halibut in violation of any provision of the convention or of this act;

(f) any person within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States or any national or inhabitant of the United States within convention waters knowingly to have or have had in his possession any halibut taken, transferred, received, or brought in in violation of any provision of the convention or of this act;

(g) any person to depart from any place within the jurisdiction of the United States in any vessel which departs from such place in violation of the convention or of this act;

(h) any person in the territorial waters of the United States or any national or inhabitant of the United States in convention waters to catch or attempt to catch any halibut, or to possess any halibut caught incidentally to fishing for other species of fish by the use of or in any vessel required by the convention to have on board any license or permit, unless such vessel shall have on board a license or permit which shall comply with all applicable requirements of the convention, and which shall be available for inspection at any time by any officer authorized to enforce the convention or by any representative of the Commission;

(i) any person to take, retain, land, or possess any halibut caught incidentally to fishing for other species of fish, in violation of any provision of the convention or of this act.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for the master or owner or person in charge of any vessel or any other person required by the convention to make, keep, or furnish any record or report, to fail to do so, or to refuse to permit any officer authorized to enforce the convention or any representative of the Commission to examine and inspect any such record or report at any time.

SEC. 5. (a) The provisions of the convention and of this act and any regulations issued under this act shall be enforced by the Coast Guard, the Customs Service, and the Bureau of Fisheries. For such purposes any officer of the Coast Guard, Customs, or Fisheries may at any time go on board of any vessel in territorial waters of the United States, or any vessel of the United States or Canada in convention waters, except in the territorial waters of Canada, to address inquiries to those on board and to examine, inspect, and search the vessel and every part thereof and any person, trunk, package, or cargo on board, and to this end may hail and stop such vessel, and use all necessary force to compel compliance.

(b) Whenever it appears to any such officer that any person, other than a national or inhabitant of Canada, on any vessel of the United States is violating or has violated any provision of the convention or of this act, he shall arrest such person and seize any such vessel employed in such violation. If any such person on any such vessel of the United States is a national or inhabitant of Canada, such person shall be detained and shall be delivered as soon as practicable to an authorized officer of Canada at the Canadian port or place nearest to the place of detention or at such other port or place as such officers of the United States and of Canada may agree upon.

(c) Whenever it appears to any such officer of the United States that any person, other than a national or inhabitant of the United States, on any vessel of Canada in convention waters, except in the territorial waters of Canada, is violating or has violated any provision of the convention, such person, and any such vessel employed in such violation, shall be detained and such person and such vessel shall be delivered as soon as practicable to an authorized officer of Canada at the Canadian port or place nearest to the place of detention, or at such other port or place as such officers of the United States and of Canada may agree upon. If any such person on any such vessel of Canada is a national or inhabitant of the United States, such person shall be arrested as provided for in subsection (b) of this section.

(d) Officers or employees of the Coast Guard, Customs, and Fisheries may be directed to attend as witnesses and to produce such available records and files or certified copies thereof as may be produced compatibly with the public interest and as may be considered essential to the prosecution in Canada of any violation of the provisions of the convention or any Canadian law for the enforcement thereof when requested by the appropriate Canadian authorities in the manner prescribed in article V of the convention to suppress smuggling concluded between the United States and Canada on June 6, 1924 (44 Stat. (pt. 3), 2097).

SEC. 6. (a) Any person violating any provision of section 3 of this act upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 nor less than $100 or be imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

(b) The cargo of halibut of every vessel employed in any manner in connection with the violation of any provision of section 3 of this act shall be forfeited; upon a second violation of the provisions of section 3 of this act, every such vessel, including its tackle, apparel, furniture, and stores may be forfeited and the cargo of halibut of every such vessel shall be forfeited; and, upon a third or subsequent violation of the provisions of section 3 of this act, every such vessel, including its tackle, apparel, furniture, cargo, and stores shall be forfeited.

(c) All provisions of law relating to the seizure, judicial forfeiture, and condemnation of a vessel for violation of the customs laws, the disposition of such vessel or the proceeds from the sale thereof, and the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures shall apply to seizures and forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under the provisions of this act, insofar as such provisions of law are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act: Provided, That except as provided in section 5 hereof all rights, powers, and duties conferred or imposed by this act upon any officer or employee of the Treasury Department shall, for the purpose of this act, be exercised or performed by the Secretary of Commerce or by such persons as he may designate.

SEC. 7. Any person violating section 4 of this act shall be subject to a penalty of $50 for each such violation. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and empowered to mitigate or remit any such penalty in the manner prescribed by law for the mitigation or remission of penalties for violation of the navigation laws.

SEC. 8. None of the prohibitions contained in this act shall apply to the Commission or its agents when engaged in any scientific investigation.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce are authorized to make such joint rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. This act shall take effect on the date of exchange of ratifications of the convention signed by the United States of America and Canada, on January 29, 1937, for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, unless such date shall be prior to the date of approval of this act in which case it shall take effect immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUS OF PROVISIONAL OFFICERS OF WORLD WAR

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1040) placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the officers affected by this legislation received no compensation benefits under the 1924 Adjusted Compensation Act because they were excluded by its terms. They received no retirement benefits under the 1928 Emergency Officers' Retirement Act because they were held by the Comptroller General to be not entitled to retirement under that act on the ground that they had not served as emergency officers within the meaning of the act. Furthermore, unless they actually made application for disability retirement before leaving the service, they were further denied Regular Army retirement benefits for disability because the Judge Advocate General of the Army ruled that they could not be retired upon an application made after leaving the service. They constitute a group of World War officers who have been penalized because they held provisional commissions. The relatively few World War provisional officers who were given Regular Army retirement because of disability, or who were discharged under Regular Army retirement law with 1 year's pay, are excluded by a proposed amendment to this legislation from receiving its benefits. Evidently this class received the same consideration and benefits as any Regular Army officer received who was subject to retirement for disability or to discharge with a full year's pay.

The bill (S. 1040) provides that all persons who served as provisional officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, and were honorably separated from such service prior to December 31, 1921, shall be accorded the same status as those individuals who served as World War emergency officers. It stipulates that these provisional officers shall be entitled to the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and regulations for World War emergency officers. It further provides that applications to obtain the benefits and privileges it extends must be made within 1 year following the date of the enactment of this measure.

Section 24 of the 1916 National Defense Act provided that all appointments to the grade of second lieutenant in the Regular Army, other than those of graduating classes from the United States Military Academy at West Point, should be provisional for a period of 2 years, and that all appointees receiving provisional commissions should be between the ages of 21 and 27. This provision was carried over in the National Defense Act of 1916 from existing law. The provision was originally enacted into law, and retained in the 1916 National Defense Act, on the theory that its operation would produce for permanent commissions in the Regular Army the best type of officer material outside the West Point graduate. An individual desiring a permanent commission in the Regular Army, other than a graduate of West Point, was required to pass through a 2-year provisional, or probationary, period, during which time he was carefully observed and rated by his superiors, and his efficiency ratings were closely studied and compared with those of other provisional officers. If, at the end of the 2-year probationary period, it was found that a provisional appointee was not desirable officer material, his provisional appointment was terminated, and he did not receive a commission in the Regular Army.

When it became apparent that the United States would become involved in the World War there was a heavily increased demand for Army officers. Section 24 of the 1916 National Defense Act at that time was the only law by which appointments could be made in the Regular Army other than appointments of graduates from West Point. Regulations were such that very few Reserve officers were available for assignment to active duty. Therefore the United States Government satisfied very largely its immediate demand for officer material at the beginning of the World War through the provisional appointments under section 24 of the 1916 National Defense Act. As the war proceeded the growing demand for officers was also met by additional war legislation.

A total of 4,968 provisional appointments were granted in the Regular Army between 1916 and 1920. Of these, 353 were commissioned from the Regular Army, the Philippine Scouts, and the National Guard, 577 from the Officers' Reserve Corps and the R. O. T. C. honor schools and colleges, and 3,167 came directly from civilian life. As to the remaining 871 there are no accurate statistics, but Army authorities agree that they came from the same sources in about the same proportion as did the other provisional officers.

It is readily seen that the men accepting World War provisional commissions, as did those accepting World War emergency officers commissions, came principally from civilian life.

Objection to this legislation is sometimes based on the contention that it would operate to grant certain benefits to those members of the Regular Army who accepted provisional appointments, which benefits were never intended to be extended to personnel of the Regular Establishment. In the first place, I direct attention to the fact that a very small number of those obtaining provisional commissions came from the Regular Army. Only 353 came from the Regular Army, the Philippine Scouts, and the National Guard combined. In the second place, attention is directed to the fact that provisional appointees from the Regular Army were enlisted men holding noncommissioned ranks and the moment they accepted a provisional appointment they lost every right they had ever possessed as enlisted men in the Regular Establishment and took their chances along with all other provisional appointees. If they did not release their provisional commissions by December 31, 1921, they obtain no benefits under this bill. It is unlikely that any of them reenlisted in the Regular Army after their separation from the service as officers, because if they had so elected they could have remained in the regular service as commissioned officers.

The appointment of provisional officers was discontinued by the National Defense Act of 1920.

Of the total of 4,968 men commissioned as provisional officers between 1916 and 1920, 2,744, or 55 percent, were separated from the service by December 31, 1921. Approximately 2,224 were commissioned in the Regular Army, and are, therefore, not included in this legislation inasmuch as the measure applies only to those World War provisional officers honorably separated from the service prior to December 31, 1921.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POPE. How many officers would receive benefits under this proposed legislation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About 2,200 would be benefited by it.

Mr. POPE. I see by the report that the enactment of the bill would mean the expenditure of a little over $3,000,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. POPE. And that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Veterans' Administration have all reported adversely on the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They have reported adversely because they do not want any change of policy in the matter of compensation at the present time. But the committee, after going into the matter thoroughly, and after studying the facts which I am laying before the Senate, felt that this consideration ought to be accorded these officers. They are the only retired officers left who have not received consideration in the adjusted-compensation law or in the emergency officers' retirement legislation or in retirement legislation pertaining to the Regular Army.

Mr. POPE. It is also reported that the bill is not in accord with the financial program of the President.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true, but the amount is comparatively so small and the injustice so great that the committee felt favorable action was justified.

Of the 2,744 provisional officers separated from the service prior to December 31, 1921, 135 were retired under Regular Army retirement law, 2,112 resigned, 202 died while in the service, 197 had their appointments terminated, 15 were discharged for inefficiency but received honorable discharges inasmuch as their inefficiency was not due to bad conduct or avoidable habits, 32 were honorably discharged under section 24b of the act of June 4, 1920, with 1 year's pay, 2 were discharged not honorably under section 24b of the act of June 4, 1920, 1 was discharged for physical disability held to be not an incident of the service, and for which the individual received a discharge other than honorable, 40 were dismissed under conditions other than honorable, 7 were dropped from the rolls, whose service is held not to be honorable, and one received his commission erroneously, but the commission was in force until November 21, 1918.

Senate bill 1040 affects the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, by making eligible for the benefits of that act the World War provisional officers who were honorably separated from the service prior to December 31, 1921. The Veterans' Administration advised the Senate Military Affairs Committee that insofar as adjusted compensation benefits are concerned the enactment of this legislation will occasion a cost of approximately $3,302,046.

This measure also affects the 1928 Emergency Officers' Retirement Act, in that it extends to World War provisional officers who were honorably separated from the service prior to December 31, 1921, emergency officer retirement benefits. The effect of the measure, so far as the 1928 Emergency Officers' Retirement Act is concerned, would be to extend to World War provisional officers honorably discharged prior to December 31, 1921, the right to file application under the 1928 act, and the right to have such application determined on its merits.

Based on applications which were filed by provisional officers under the 1928 Emergency Officers' Retirement Act before the Comptroller General in 1929 ruled that they were not entitled to the benefits of the act, the Veterans' Administration estimates that the cost of the retirement feature of the legislation under consideration would be approximately $10,000. However, as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs points out in his communication to the Senate Military Affairs Committee of May 1, 1937, this figure cannot be taken as a maximum inasmuch as it takes into consideration only those claims which were filed prior to the ruling of the Comptroller General in 1929. It is possible that many provisional officers honorably discharged prior to December 31, 1921, who did not file for benefits under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act before the Comptroller General's ruling of 1929, may file for benefits under the 1928 act within 1 year after the enactment of the pending bill.

The Senate Military Affairs Committee believes that these men who served as provisional officers during the World War, and who were honorably discharged from the service prior to December 31, 1921, are entitled to the benefits of the 1924 Adjusted Compensation Act and the 1928 Emergency Officers' Retirement Act. For all practical intents and purposes they occupied a status during the World War similar to that held by emergency officers. Many of them were among the first to respond to the exigencies of war, leaving gainful pursuits in civilian life at the outset of the conflict to volunteer their services. They were all young men, between the ages of 21 and 27, and all of them entered in the grade of second lieutenant. It is true that these men were excluded by the 1924 Adjusted Compensation Act from its benefits on the theory that, having been given provisional appointments, they had the option of remaining in the Army. However, as the statistics show, over 50 percent of these men did not remain in the Army but left the service following the war, as did the emergency officers, returning to civilian life. It is this group of former provisional officers whom the pending bill is designed to benefit. Having entered the military service of their country voluntarily in time of war, they separated themselves from that service voluntarily when that emergency passed. This measure was under study for some weeks by the Senate Military Affairs Committee, and it was reported favorably with a recommendation that it pass. It has been on the Senate Calendar since May 11. The Senate Military Affairs Committee respectfully urges its passage.

As introduced in the Senate, it was believed that this bill included officers of the Navy who entered the naval service from civilian life during the World War and who resigned their commissions following the war. However, it appears that as now worded this group of former naval officers would not be benefited by the enactment of this measure, because the Navy Department holds that there were no provisional officers in the Navy. There are between four and five hundred men who were commissioned in the Navy during the World War and who resigned their commissions following the war. Rightfully, this bill should be amended so as to include them. They occupied in the Navy a status similar to that of the World War provisional officer in the Army. They entered the naval service from civilian life because of the war emergency, and they resigned their commissions when the war was over. The records show that not one of these men was retired for disability. Furthermore, not one of them received any compensation under the 1924 Adjusted Compensation Act or any retirement benefits whatsoever. I have conferred with the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and I understand that he has a proposed amendment which will bring under the provisions of the pending legislation this group of temporary World War naval officers. The proposed amendment is acceptable to the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he offer his amendment now in order that it may be pending.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will yield, I offer the amendment at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 5, after the word "War", it is proposed to insert "or who were appointed to commissioned or warrant grades or ranks in the Navy from civil life subsequent to April 6, 1917."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and be considered as pending when the bill shall again be before the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the amendment embodying modifications to which I have referred in the course of my address, and ask that they may be considered as pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments submitted by the Senator from Texas will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this measure, I assume, will become the unfinished business on the adjournment of the Senate today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be the unfinished business when the Senate shall meet again.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I hope the bill will be taken up for consideration on Monday next.

PLANS FOR POWER PROJECT ON CLARK FORK OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 114) to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation pumping or other uses, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. POPE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. POPE, Mr. HATCH, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCCARRAN, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, ETC.—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MCKELLAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 7, 13, 19, 55, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 82, 84, 85, 90, 91, and 92.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 8, 14, 20, 25, 27, 29, 30, 33, 34, 38, 43, 45, 46, 47, 52, 53, 59, 65, 72, 73, 74, 75, 80, 86, 89, and 93, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,220,480"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$563,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$1,889,660"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$530,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$47,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,560,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$563,040"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$455,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,023,465"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number inserted by said amendment insert "six"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$543,800"; and the Senate agree to the same

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "; and all other necessary incidental expenses (not exceeding $50 in any one case) not included in the foregoing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

PAT MCCARRAN,
FREDERICK HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS S. MCMILLAN,
JAMES MCANDREWS,
ROBERT L. BACON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 5779, the Departments of State, Justice, etc., appropriation bill, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,

June 9, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 4, 12, 28, 41, 49, 51, 56, 58, 63, 77, 79, 83, and 88 to the bill (H. R. 5779) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and concur therein each with an amendment, as follows:

In the matter proposed to be inserted by each of the said Senate engrossed amendments strike out the word "detailed."

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to each of the amendments of the Senate in question.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, that completes the legislative action on the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding.

AUTHORITY FOR APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES, ETC., DURING RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to be taken at the conclusion of today's business, the Vice President be authorized to appoint such committees, joint committees, or otherwise, and perform such other duties as may be incumbent upon him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, some time ago I requested the Works Progress Administration to furnish me with a list of the names, addresses, and salaries of those employed in administrative or supervisory capacities by the Works Progress Administration in West Virginia. I was advised that this was not the policy of the Works Progress Administration because, first, it would lead to solicitation by salesmen, and second, that it would subject its employees to the gossip of neighbors. I ask to have the reply of Mr. Williams inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

MAY 15, 1937.

Senator RUSH HOLT,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HOLT: This is in reply to a telephone request from your office for names, addresses, and salaries of persons holding supervisory or administrative positions in the W. P. A. in West Virginia.

We have not made it a practice to give out information concerning the individual salaries and addresses of employees except those in a position to formulate policy or direct major portions of the operations. We have felt that the public could have no legitimate interest in such information and that its release would very possibly result in these persons being subjected to solicitation from salesmen and the gossip of neighbors.

We do feel that the public could and should have a very real interest in the total amount of our administrative pay roll, the various salary grades for different kinds of work, and the number of persons employed in the various categories. Upon request we are glad to make listings of this kind.

Very truly yours,

AUBREY WILLIAMS,
Acting Administrator.

Mr. HOLT. I immediately dispatched a reply to Mr. Williams, a copy of which I request may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the reply was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 25, 1937.

Mr. AUBREY WILLIAMS,
Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: I am in receipt of your letter of May 15. Since it is my duty as one of the Members of Congress to determine the amount of money to be spent by the Works Progress Administration during the coming fiscal year, I feel that the information requested is of much importance. Certainly, it is not being procured for solicitation of salesmen. As to gossip, I feel that a public pay roll is a public matter. The best way to stop gossip is to let the people know the facts. If anyone on the pay roll does not deserve to be there and is receiving far beyond what he should, I see no reason why neighbors should not talk about the matter, because the neighbors are the one who pay the bill. As you know, I unearthed a large number of individuals last summer on the W. P. A. pay rolls who were not entitled to be there on need or merit, and I feel that it has come to quite a state of affairs when a Member of the United States Senate, who is called upon to pass appropriations, cannot find out how much and who is being paid within his own State. Therefore, I request again that you furnish me with a list of names, addresses, and salaries of persons holding supervisory and administrative positions with the W. P. A. in West Virginia.

I cannot agree with you that the public could have no interest in such information. I feel that the public has a very important and definite interest. I do not agree with the contention that a public pay roll is a closed affair and that the people who pay the bill do not have a right to know the details.

Through a list last year I found very wealthy individuals receiving money from the relief administration. I found employees holding more than one job. I found employees placed on the relief pay rolls who were receiving many times their former private salaries. I found salaries increased by large amounts with no specific reason given or known for such advancement except political consideration. Could you mean that this is not legitimate for me to trace down such practices?

Yours very truly,

RUSH D. HOLT.

Mr. HOLT. I may say, in all fairness to Mr. Williams, that I do not believe the letter was actually the work of the Assistant Administrator, but that it was the work of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins, who has always maintained the policy, and has publicly expressed that policy, that the public is "too damned dumb to understand." In other words, he is the benevolent adviser to determine just what the public should know about relief. I desire to state briefly why I wanted the information which I requested of the Works Progress Administration.

First, I deem it advisable for the Members of Congress to know where and how the money is being spent. The power to appropriate is a power given to the legislative branch of the Government. Congress has seen developed in recent years a tendency to appropriate money and allow the disbursement to be at the discretion of the executive branch. Such a policy was excused on the ground that an emergency existed.

Today, with all the talk of prosperity, it is time that Congress is regaining the power of appropriation. I feel that I would be in position to know more about how the money was being spent in West Virginia than in any other State. It was not only my right to know where the money has gone, but it was my duty as a Senator from West Virginia to inform myself of these facts. Through this information I could have a better idea of how much was being spent properly and how much was being spent improperly. I could procure more data within my own State than I could if I should undertake to investigate the matter throughout the entire Nation, although I believe each Senator should know how the money is being spent in his State and each Member of the House of Representatives should know how the money is being spent in his district.

To vote for an appropriation bill for the continuation of a system without knowing the full facts about how that system is operated is not a proper approach to a problem by a Member of Congress. But this bureaucratic machine has said that it is not the business of the Senate to know how the money is being spent or where it is going, but that it is our duty to keep our mouths shut and our eyes closed and to do as they advise. So far as I am concerned, I am not going to keep my eyes closed nor am I going to keep my mouth shut when I see the public funds misused, wasted, and thrown away.

I have been advised that it was said that Mr. Hopkins was going to take the roll call in the House, earmark the Representatives who dared object to his policies, and use that earmarking within the various congressional districts. Such a state of affairs is a natural consequence of allowing a starry-eyed, egotistical bureaucrat to spend money at his own will and tell Congress that it is none of its affairs where the money is going.

Last year I did procure such a list from the Works Progress Administration, and I found on that list wealthy individuals who had no business nor right to be on the relief rolls. Officials of banks had gone on relief in West Virginia. Businessmen had found it more profitable to leave their businesses and secure W. P. A. employment; but may I say that employment was not at the rate of salary given to men in the ditch or women in the sewing rooms. I want to see if these same men are still maintaining their W. P. A. status.

I also found individuals who had been in private employment leaving their private employment because the W. P. A. offered them higher salaries for less work. Instances were found of individuals receiving three times as much as their former salaries. Some instances are similar to the Government's dollar-a-year men who were perfectly willing to help their country for a dollar a year plus, only these men are receiving the plus and a much higher salary. I want to see if this practice is still continued.

I found men who were interested in the manufacture and sale of supplies on the W. P. A. pay rolls in West Virginia. Some of these have returned to their former private employment. In this way they are in a better position to sell to the Federal Government. I want to see if this practice is still continued.

I want to see if the men who went around and got nickels, dimes, and quarters from the men working on the projects were rewarded for their ability to collect. I want to see how many of those who worked faithfully during the months of September and October on the W. P. A. pay roll, yet not at W. P. A. work, had their salaries increased. I know the individuals, but I want an official record from the Government in order that I may check them.

I have found that on some projects the cost of administration and supervision exceeded the amount of money paid the relief workers. I want to see if this practice is still continued.

I have found instances of individuals who worked in the district and State offices, and yet were charged to projects, although they had never seen them or worked upon them. This was to reduce the State administrative cost. I want to see if this practice is still being continued.

I have found on the pay roll one man who was placed there, according to their own statement in a letter which I have at hand, as being "a possibility toward healing a rift that certain of the opposition had in mind to make with the Italian vote." I want to see if that practice continues.

I found an instance of a certain individual being appointed, according to the letter I have in my possession—here is the letter—because "it would go a large way toward holding our line intact here in the county." I want to see if this practice is still being continued.

I want to see if the same large number of individuals whose duties were to write for the newspapers "to sell the W. P. A. to the people of West Virginia" are still employed at tremendously high salaries, when there are still many people in the State of West Virginia who are hungry and in need of relief.

I want to find out if Mr. Raymond Lewis, brother of the deep-voiced labor racketeer, John L. Lewis, has received more increases in his salary. I desire to advise the Senate that Mr. Raymond Lewis—not a resident of West Virginia, a man who never resided in West Virginia—was brought down from his residence in another State to help put over the W. P. A. program. He was listed as an engineer, and he must have been good because those in charge of W. P. A. found it very advisable to increase his salary. Of course, the fact that he is a brother of John L. Lewis may have had something to do with it. It may be, although I am not certain, that he has continued to improve and that his salary has been increased again and again. Of course, you know, Mr. President, that Mr. Hopkins would not want Mr. Lewis to be subjected to the gossip of neighbors. Of course, his neighbors do not know him so well, because he has not been in West Virginia very long, and, of course, they would want to check into that. I want to see if that practice is being continued in the State.

I understand that certain individuals have been released from the pay roll because they questioned certain equipment contracts and the use of certain equipment. I feel that it would be well to know if that practice is being continued.

I want to see if those officials who are assisting the C. I. O. to try to wreck the American Federation of Labor and who are receiving their money from the W. P. A. as Federal employees—not as C. I. O. employees, but as W. P. A. employees—are receiving the same salaries as they would have received before the C. I. O. drive got under way. I want to see if that practice continues in West Virginia.

I am sure that neither Mr. Hopkins nor any of his close associates would be desirous of subjecting to the gossip of neighbors the individuals who have been guilty of some of the things mentioned; and they certainly would not want salesmen to knock at the doors and say, "I understand you have had your salary increased three times over what you were formerly getting, and that you are required, according to the social needs of the W. P. A., to look your best to please the eyes of those who come from Washington to investigate the W. P. A. You should buy this product. It will make you look more lovely than ever, and therefore your salary should be increased."

That is what I am interested in. That is why I wrote the letter. I am interested to know how much money is going to those who need relief, and how much is going to those who get relief and do not need it.

I shall discuss the issue more fully when the relief appropriation bill comes on the floor of the Senate next week; but I do want to let Mr. Hopkins know why I want that list of officials of the W. P. A. in the State of West Virginia.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend John W. Rustin, pastor of the Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church South, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, Father of us all, high above us and yet living in each one of us, forgive us, we pray Thee, that too often when we pray we do it as a matter of form and do not actually enter into Thy spirit.

Bless, we pray Thee, this group of men who have been placed in such responsible positions in a time like this. Grant that they may feel the need of Thy divine guidance and not be dependent on their own strength.

Forgive us that too often our eyes are closed to the major issues of life by prejudice, greed, and selfish interest.

May we ever be mindful of our brothers, so that when we pray we can actually say, "Thy kingdom come in earth as it is in heaven."

Breathe, Thou Breath of God, into our restless world, that we may this day hear that still, small voice of calm speaking to our inner souls, bringing quietness and peace to our troubled lives. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow; and coupled with that request, I ask unanimous consent that there may be four hours and a half of general debate on the resolution (H. J. Res. 375) extending the excise taxes, the time to be equally divided between and controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and myself.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if they are going to have in the tax bill anything with reference to the undistributed surplus taxes this year?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We hope to later.

Mr. RICH. That is fine. I hope the gentleman will see we get that bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether or not the committee has made any amendments to the House joint resolution as originally introduced?

Mr. DOUGHTON. None.

Mr. BOILEAU. No committee amendment at all?

Mr. DOUGHTON. None at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, June 18, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the legislative business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a copy of a speech delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] on the new hours and wages legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes in order to discuss the violation of the National Labor Relations Act by the Republic Steel Corporation, the Inland Steel Corporation, and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, under the system we have adopted I feel constrained to object.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will, if it does not take much time.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we should have an opportunity to discuss an important matter like this, and should be given time to do so. This is as important as any matter which may come before the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman understands there will be no objection to his speaking this afternoon after the business of the day has been completed. I cannot agree to the gentleman speaking at this time.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. That will probably be about 5 or 6 o'clock, when everybody is tired and wants to go home.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

DEPORTATION OF CRIMINALS AND CERTAIN OTHER ALIENS

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 229.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6391, a bill to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, the Dies bill (H. R. 6391), which will be under consideration when the rule is adopted, is a compromise measure. As is well known, for some 5 or 6 years there has been an attempt, heretofore futile, to work out some sort of fair compromise on the deportation question as well as in reference to the meritorious cases. It was a most difficult task to find any common meeting ground, because on this question, particularly, as well as on practically every other question, there are extreme views on both sides. We know, of course, that legislation of all kinds and character is necessarily the result of compromise.

When the original proposal, the Kerr-Coolidge bill, was before the House, many of us opposed its passage for certain reasons which I will hereafter explain. All of the labor organizations were likewise opposed to the passage of that measure. This compromise measure has been worked out by and between opposing groups and factions. It now has the unqualified support of the American Federation of Labor and John L. Lewis, the head of the Committee for Industrial Organization.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the letter from William Green in support of this measure, as well as the letter from John L. Lewis, who also endorses the measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1937.

Hon. MARTIN DIES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: As a result of a careful examination and analysis of H. R. 6391, of which you are the author, by capable representatives of the American Federation of Labor, I am writing you advising you of our endorsement of this measure.

This revised immigration measure seems to be reasonably satisfactory. I am transmitting this information to you so that you might be acquainted with the official attitude of the American Federation of Labor toward this proposed legislation.

Very truly yours,

W. GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1937.

MR. EDWARD J. SHAUGHNESSY,
Acting Commissioner, Immigration and Naturalization Service, United States Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SHAUGHNESSY: House Resolution 6391, authorizing the deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, has been given careful consideration. I am of the opinion that the bill, as it now stands, should be enacted by Congress.

It provides for a wider discretion in the Secretary with respect to the more humane treatment of aliens on limited stay in this country, and, at the same time, enlarges the statutory grounds for deporting objectionable aliens.

As the bill provides that quotas under existing laws shall not be disturbed, we think that the objectives of this bill are praiseworthy and I am glad to give it our endorsement.

Very truly yours,

JOHN L. LEWIS.

Mr. DIES. Not only does this measure represent the views and wishes of these labor organizations, but in its present form meets the objections those organizations had to the Kerr-Coolidge bill. It follows to a large extent the recommendations contained in the platform of the American Legion adopted in its last convention. I hold in my hand the platform of the American Legion relative to deportation. You will observe that this bill contains in many instances language almost identical to that adopted by the American Legion. For instance, the American Legion platform states:

We recommend the deportation of any alien who has been convicted of violation of any narcotic law of any State, Territory, insular possession, or the District of Columbia.

That identical language is incorporated in this measure.

The American Legion also recommended the following:

We recommend the deportation of any alien who has knowingly encouraged, induced, assisted, or aided anyone to enter or try to enter the United States in violation of law.

This recommendation, with certain exceptions which I will hereafter explain, is also incorporated in the present law.

Mr. STARNES rose.

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman will not ask me to yield now, I will try to yield later.

Then, also, the American Legion said:

We recommend that designated persons holding supervisory positions in the Immigration and Naturalization Service be given power to issue warrants of arrest for persons believed to be subject to deportation.

This recommendation is also carried in this bill.

Also, the American Legion said:

We recognize, however, the possibility of meritorious exceptions arising and the necessity of judicial interpretation of appeal from strict enforcement of the foregoing deportation provisions, and therefore recommend the power to exempt from deportation be vested in judges of the respective United States district courts, before whom all such appeals should be heard.

The language of the present act, as I shall hereafter explain, recognizes the principle of discretion in meritorious cases subject to deportation, but unlike the recommendation of the American Legion, the present bill vests such limited discretion with the Department of Labor, whereas the American Legion in their convention, recommended the vesting of that discretionary power in a board of review.

Likewise the American Legion recommended the deportation of any alien who has been convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a crime involving moral turpitude or a felony.

This provision, not exactly in that language, is to a large extent incorporated in this measure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall undertake to discuss the provisions of this bill fairly, so that the facts in regard to it will be well known to all of the Members present.

The first section deals with a new class of cases that are made mandatorily deportable. In the original Kerr-Coolidge bill and the bills that preceded it, all of the new classes of deportable cases were made discretionary with the Secretary of Labor. In addition to this, in the original bills that were introduced, unlimited discretion was given to the Secretary of Labor for all time without any restriction as to time or as to number to be permitted to remain in the United States.

The first four sections of this bill deal strictly with criminal aliens who are not now deportable under existing law. The bill does not represent all that I want. Certainly, it does not represent all that any Member on either side of this question wants.

The first paragraph states that any alien is subject to deportation who is convicted in the Untied States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a crime involving moral turpitude for which the alien is committed to an institution as a result of such conviction.

Under the language of this paragraph any alien in the future who is guilty of any crime involving moral turpitude is deportable, and I may say that under the interpretation given by the courts of most States moral turpitude includes a great variety of crimes ranging from petty offenses to crimes of a more serious nature. This provision undertakes to put the alien upon notice that insofar as the future is concerned any alien who is guilty of any crime that involves moral turpitude and is sent to an institution, which may mean a jail or a penitentiary, is subject mandatorily to deportation.

Under existing law the only alien that can be deported for the perpetration of a crime involving moral turpitude is an alien who, within 5 years after entry, commits such crime and is actually sentenced to a year or more in the penitentiary. A considerable class of criminal aliens, therefore, escape deportation under the terms of existing law. This Dies bill reaches out and includes all aliens, whether they were sentenced to 1 year or less, even if they were sent to jail or the penitentiary, no matter how long the time or what the period may be.

In my previous bill, which was amended by the committee, I provided for the mandatory deportation of aliens, even if they were pardoned, and the provision was retroactive. The committee, however, by unanimous action, considered that too harsh and amended that provision with the compromise proposal which I have just read.

Paragraph 2 of the bill says, also—

Has been convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of the crime of possessing or carrying any firearm, even if the alien was not sentenced to imprisonment.

Some objection has been raised to this provision on the ground that an alien who is hunting rabbits would be subject to deportation under the terms of this bill. The alien must first be convicted of the offense of carrying a firearm before he is subject to deportation, and under the laws of every State that I ever heard of a citizen or an alien or anyone else who has any legitimate purpose or use for a weapon can secure a permit to carry one.

Not only is that true but in the State of Texas a man is entitled to have a weapon in his home for self-defense, and, so far as I know, there is no law that prohibits a man from using a gun to go hunting, provided he has a permit for doing so.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Not now; in a few minutes. The purpose of this language was to reach a class of criminal gangsters and racketeers that could not be apprehended upon any other charge, men who have successfully evaded the law for many years. The only crime that you can pin on them is the crime of having firearms in their possession. Of course, an alien who has lawful purposes can secure a permit, and with a permit he could not be convicted, and therefore would not be subject to deportation; but aliens who carry firearms, machine guns, and various other contraptions for illegal and unlawful purposes could be apprehended under the terms of this provision, which is admittedly very strict, very rigid, for the purpose of reaching out and apprehending a large class that immigration authorities are unable to deport under existing law. As I said, there is opposition to that section from some who think it is too drastic, but in view of the experiences of the immigration authorities that provision is essential if we propose to deport the gangsters and racketeers who have infested this country and who have heretofore been successful in escaping conviction.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. DIES. Not now.

Paragraph (3) deals with any alien who violates the narcotic law of any State, Territory, or possession. There is no controversy in reference to that paragraph. Under existing law you can deport an alien for violating a Federal narcotic law, but not for violating a State or Territorial narcotic law.

Paragraph (4) deals with the smugglers. Under the existing law an alien who has been smuggled into the United States can be deported, but an alien who is engaged in smuggling another alien into the country cannot be deported. The language of that provision is:

> Knowingly and for gain encouraged, induced, assisted, or aided anyone to enter the United States in violation of law, or on more than one occasion subsequent to the date of the enactment of this act knowingly encouraged, induced, assisted, or aided anyone to enter the United States in violation of law.

The purpose of that language was to get the professional smuggler, but to protect the mother or father who might be guilty of writing to a son or some near relative encouraging that son to enter, and who under such law would be subject to deportation. Under that provision, if they did so on more than one occasion they would be subject to deportation.

In reference to paragraph (1), I do not think anyone can deny that paragraph makes deportable a large class of criminal aliens not now deportable. I do not see how any restrictionist can oppose that paragraph. It may not go far enough in the minds of some, but, as I said a few moments ago, if we are to have any solution ever of this vexing problem, there must be a spirit of concession, which has been very generously made by the labor organizations in the United States in reference to this bill.

Section 2, as I said, deals with the so-called meritorious cases. Heretofore in legislation that has been proposed unlimited discretion was vested in the Department of Labor. I join with Mr. STARNES and Mr. SCHULTE and others in opposing the provisions of that bill, because I was opposed to granting any unlimited discretion to any department to say who should or should not be deported. It was my original thought that the way to handle all these meritorious cases was through special bills. I am absolutely convinced as a result of what has occurred in this House that it is impossible to deal with this situation through special bills. We had a demonstration of that fact not long ago when 15 special bills were before this House. The House consumed 5½ hours considering four bills and made no disposition of any of the bills. So necessarily the Congress of the United States, representing 127,000,000 people and dealing as it does with many major questions, cannot deal with all of the cases that are entitled to exceptions in the deportation laws.

This compromise proposal limits that discretion. First it says except as to aliens who are Anarchists or Communists, and so forth. That excludes from the operations of the act those aliens who, under the provisions of existing laws, are classified as radicals or Anarchists or Communists. It also excepts from this discretion those aliens who have imported opium or who are subject to deportation under an act to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes." It excepts them from the discretion. Also aliens who are subject to deportation upon the ground that they have violated a narcotic law, and aliens who are criminals, prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons. It first limits the discretion vested in the Department of Labor as to the character of aliens that can be granted leniency or exception from deportation. Then, in addition to that limitation upon the exercise of the discretion, there is a time limit placed in the bill of 4 years. At the expiration of 4 years no further discretion can ever be exercised by the Secretary of Labor.

During that 4 years, for the first year the Secretary of Labor can permit 3,500 to remain in the United States and 1,500 for each and every year thereafter for a period of 4 years.

I realize this is a very controversial section in this bill, but we have a situation that we must recognize if we want to be absolutely fair on this question. As long as the hardship cases exist and those who are in favor of restriction refuse to do anything constructive to relieve them, then the cause of restriction in the United States is damaged and injured. There are some 2,500 cases where deportation stays have already been granted, the Congress having passed an act a year or two ago permitting a temporary stay, as I recall, and where the aliens are subject to deportation in certain classes of cases. For instance, an alien has entered this country legally, not under quota but for temporary purposes. He has come as a student, a visitor, a preacher, or a doctor, or whatever the exceptions may be that enable him to enter for a temporary period. After he came to the United States he overstayed his limit and did not depart when he should have departed. In the meantime he has married. He has a wife and he has children. I have a number of cases in my file, but there is one case that illustrates the point under which one alien would be subject to deportation to Ireland, his wife to Canada, but neither country will accept his four children. Therefore they would be left in the United States without their parents. There are other classes of aliens, and a majority of classes that the Department of Labor has temporarily held up are classes, as I have said, where the alien entered legally but overstayed the limit and in the meantime married, and through lax enforcement of the law they have formed family ties in the United States, and now they are subject to deportation, some 2,500 of whom will be deported unless some provision is made by Congress.

What are we going to do about it? We cannot handle it by special bills. That is manifest. If we do not repose discretionary power in some department or some bureau, how can we handle the hardship cases? Not only is that true but those hardship cases that are now pending, as I said a moment ago, are not the criminal classes, the radical classes, or the immoral classes, but they are aliens who are already here; aliens who have family ties.

What is the effect of this provision? It simply says this: We have a quota of 153,000 for all of the countries, on a quota basis. In September 1930 President Hoover issued an Executive order in which he called the attention of the consuls to a provision in the immigration laws permitting them to reject applicants who were likely to become public charges. Ever since 1930, by administrative action, the consuls have excluded people from the United States, with the exception of a few. That discretion is almost unlimited, as many Members who have had experience with this character of cases know. By administrative action the Department of State estimates that 993,000 aliens who would otherwise have been admitted to the United States since 1931 have been excluded from the United States on the ground that they would likely prove to be hardship cases. But the effect of this hardship provision is simply to say this: Here is a man, already here; he has got a wife and he has children. If he is deported, he will go back to Ireland or Germany, or whatever his country is, and then some new immigrant who has no ties in the United States will come in his place, because under the terms of this bill every immigrant who is permitted to remain under this limited discretion is charged to the quota of his particular country. So that there is no increase in immigration. It is simply a question of choice between those who are here and who have family ties and those who have never entered the United States and who seek entrance for the first time.

So that it seems to me in making that choice, in the interest of humanity and for the sake of settling this eternal controversy that exists with reference to hardship cases, this compromise proposal should be accepted.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Is not the present law farcical, monstrous, and tragic in its operation?

Mr. DIES. Of course, when you go into that question you must consider this: We have a Canadian border of approximately 3,000 miles. We have a Mexican border of 2,500 miles. Do you know how many immigration officials we have to patrol those borders? We have 800 and some odd. They must work on an 8-hour basis, and they must work in units of two; so that, for practical purposes, at one time you have only 60 units to patrol 3,000 miles. Therefore, it has been utterly impossible to prevent illegal entrance into the United States. As a matter of fact, the Congress has never made adequate appropriations for the purpose of enabling us to patrol the borders and to prohibit aliens from illegally entering the United States.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming that an alien married an American citizen, had children, and was deported; he could come back to this country nonquota, could he not?

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It would just put him to that expense and deprive his family of the money spent on his deportation.

Mr. DIES. That is true.

As I was saying, by reason of our inadequate appropriations, it has been very easy for aliens to cross our great border. There is another reason: Up until 1929 it was not a violation of the law to enter this country illegally, there was not any crime attached to it; so, while no one could condone the illegal entrance, nevertheless it does seem to me that we should recognize some exceptions. I know of no law that does not recognize exceptions. Under the law of my State a jury can suspend a man's sentence even when he is known to be guilty. The Governor of my State can pardon a criminal; even the police magistrate who has power to sentence an alien for 1 year or more can grant a pardon and prohibit him from being deported. I cannot, therefore, see how in any way it will hurt our immigration laws if we give a limited discretion. I am as much opposed to wide and unlimited discretion as anyone. I frankly admit that it was my belief for a long time that these cases should be handled by special bills. The Department of Labor dumped into the lap of the Immigration Committee, as I have been informed, some 2,000 cases. It was utterly impossible for them to proceed in that way.

We are face to face with a practical question of whether we should give preference to these people who have home ties—

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the gentleman's bill, section 1 lists aliens who are to be mandatorily deported under four subheads.

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. MAY. Section 2 provides that under the provision of certain laws now existing the Secretary of Labor may permit to remain in the United States any one of these classes that are to be mandatorily deported if she finds certain things to exist.

Mr. DIES. No; that is not absolutely correct.

Mr. MAY. I want to be informed about that.

Mr. DIES. As to the four classes that are to be mandatory deported under section 6, paragraph 3, there is no discretion whatever; in other words, as to those, the Secretary cannot grant any exception. As to the other classes the Secretary has limited discretion, as I said, for a period of 4 years, limited to these so-called hardship cases.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DIES. I am sorry, but I cannot yield further.

Section 5 makes it plain that this act is supplemental to existing law, that it in no way repeals any provision of existing law requiring the deportation of any alien.

Section 6 does away with the preference that is now given under our quota laws to immigrants skilled in agriculture, their wives, and their dependent children. This is repealed, for the facts show that it has been abused, that many aliens have entered the country under the guise of being agriculturists when as a matter of fact they were destined for our industrial centers. I do not suppose any restrictionist will oppose that.

Section 7 deals with a subject that has been controverted ever since I have been here; it deals with that class of aliens who entered between 1921 and 1924 illegally, walked across the borders, and who now are not subject to deportation, they cannot be gotten rid of under existing laws. [Applause.]

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. (After counting.) One hundred and forty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 86]

Amlie	Connery	Hill, Wash.	Phillips
Arnold	Curley	Hoffman	Rabaut
Bates	Driver	Hook	Richards
Beam	Duncan	Imhoff	Sabath
Bell	Eicher	Izac	Sadowski
Bernard	Faddis	Jenks, N. H.	Schuetz
Bigelow	Fitzgerald	Kvale	Smith, W. Va.
Brooks	Flannagan	Lesinski	Taylor, Colo.
Buckley, N. Y.	Ford, Calif.	Lucas	Taylor, S. C.
Caldwell	Fulmer	Luckey, Nebr.	Tinkham

Coffee, Nebr.	Griswold	Pace
Collins	Harlan	Pettengill
Colmer	Hartley	Peyser

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-three Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. DIES, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a splendid address delivered by our colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] at the commencement exercises of Southeastern University, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

DEPORTATION OF CRIMINALS AND CERTAIN OTHER ALIENS

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I shall not attempt to discuss analytically the provisions of the pending measure, because the distinguished author of the bill, who has just preceded me, with his usual and customary vigor and perspicacity has done so.

The proposal under consideration today is essentially and fundamentally a deportation measure. However, it does possess a slight immigration feature, in that such of the so-called hardship cases in which an order of deportation is definitely stayed shall be charged against the quotas of the countries from which the immigrant in question came.

During the past decade, happy to relate, we have practically solved our immigration problem, and, interesting to note, credit for this achievement belongs to a man who has been, perhaps, the most misunderstood and most ruthlessly misrepresented—yes; the most unjustly maligned individual in America—former President Herbert Hoover. [Applause.] In the early days of the depression, with statesmanlike vision, President Hoover saw the imperative importance of materially curtailing our foreign immigration. He summoned to the White House the then Secretary of State, Hon. Henry L. Stimson, and after a conference on the subject the Secretary of State promulgated an order to our consular representatives abroad to reduce by 90 percent their existing quota visas to the United States. This was done, and the result has been that aliens have left the United States every year since, either by deportation or by voluntary departure, in larger numbers than those coming in. This Executive order, however, should be written into permanent law.

In the meantime, however, very little, if any, progress has been made in the solution of our deportation problem, and it was with the hope of meeting this situation, at least partially, that this measure was introduced.

While the bill before us does not meet the demands and aspirations of all of us who are interested in this difficult problem, in my opinion, it is an important step in the right direction.

I want to congratulate the author of the bill, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], for the splendid work he has done on this measure, and the energy, ingenuity, and resourcefulness which he has displayed in bringing the bill to the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped the bill would contain a provision for registering all aliens now within our borders. We know just how many are here legally, but we have no record or knowledge of those who entered otherwise. According to the Federal Census of 1930, we had approximately 6,000,000 aliens in the United States, but since that date we are advised that about one-third of that number have become naturalized, so that today we have approximately 4,000,000 aliens still within our borders who have not seen fit to become American citizens. Of course, this does not take into account those who are here in violation of our immigration laws, and that number has been estimated at from 600,000 to a million. These aliens are enjoying jobs which rightfully belong to unemployed American citizens. [Applause.] They are aggravating our tremendous relief burden. They are congesting our penal and eleemosynary institutions at the expense of the already overburdened American taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, no other country in the world save the United States would maintain aliens on its relief rolls or maintain them in its penal and charitable institutions. No other country would give employment to aliens when its own citizens who are just as able and efficient stand idle. We are in the habit of proudly proclaiming the slogan, "America for Americans", and at the same time our own Government itself, to say nothing of private industry, is persistently employing aliens when American citizens are unemployed and their families destitute and hungry. It is a sad commentary, Mr. Speaker, and is not only indefensible but downright un-American.

While I deprecate the idea of enforced citizenship, however, I think that these aliens who are here enjoying the protection of our Government and the opportunities afforded by residence under our flag ought to be willing to assume the burdens, the obligations, and responsibilities of citizenship. I would like to see written into this bill a provision, with real teeth in it, requiring these aliens, after having been here a reasonable length of time, to take the necessary steps to become American citizens, subject to prompt deportation. To have large groups of people who are not citizens and who manifest no interest or intention of becoming such, and who owe allegiance to some foreign nation, and who at the same time claim and receive the protection of our Government, is manifestly an unwholesome and dangerous situation.

There has been a great deal of press propaganda about the so-called hardship cases. I concede that there are many such cases and they appeal very strongly to my sense of sympathy. I think that consideration should be extended to those aliens who have come into the United States in some irregular manner and who have been here 10 years or more, who have married here and who have had children here, and who have walked uprightly during their residence in this country; and, as I interpret this bill, ample provision for such consideration is provided by its terms. The difficulty has been that a great many of us have lost faith in those charged with the administration of our deportation laws. It is the candid belief of some of us that those charged with the administration of these laws are not in genuine sympathy with their execution; and this opinion has its foundation in the fact that some 3,000 deportation cases have been allowed to accumulate, a large majority of which have little or no merit whatever. Of course, some of them are meritorious and have been so recognized and adjudged by the Congress. In making this observation I mean no reflection on the Acting Immigration Commissioner, because I entertain a high personal regard for him and I have absolute confidence in his integrity. I consider Mr. Shaughnessy an honorable and conscientious public official; but, of course, he must undertake in good faith to carry out the policy of his superiors, else he would not remain in the Department for a great length of time. If this bill is enacted into law and the law vigorously enforced, in my opinion, this so-called hardship situation can be entirely cleaned up and eliminated within the next 2 or 3 years.

Not only in the interest of the Nation but the alien as well, these hardship cases should be disposed of with the greatest possible dispatch and thereby put an end to this unsavory agitation.

The enactment of this legislation and its rigid enforcement will rid our country of the alien criminal. It will deport the alien gangster and racketeer who have gathered here in large numbers, and whose depredations have brought shame and disgrace to our Nation. It deports aliens who have been convicted of violating any narcotic law of any State, Territory, peninsular possession, or the District of Columbia, in the same manner as they are subject to deportation now for violating the Federal narcotic statute. It deports the alien who has been found guilty of carrying firearms, even if the alien was not sentenced to imprisonment. It deports the alien who is found guilty of aiding or abetting illegal entries into the United States.

While, as I stated in the outset, this bill does not fully satisfy all of us interested in this vital subject, in my judgment, it is a very important step in the right direction.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that my interest in this legislation is not due to any alien problem in the district I have the honor to represent. The people of my district are almost 100 percent native stock of Anglo-Saxon origin. I doubt if 5 percent of the people of my district were born abroad, and of that 5 percent, not 1 percent has remained alien. It has been characteristic of the people who were born abroad and came to east Tennessee that they instinctively seize the first opportunity to become American citizens; and, as a general rule, they have made exemplary ideal citizens, and as such have been a valuable contribution to our communities. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my zeal for this legislation is not inspired or influenced by any local condition but purely on account of my interest in the subject as a national problem and a national emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman talked about aliens on relief. The people who will be affected by this legislation are not on relief and they have been here some years, and they have on the average from two to five children born in the United States. Is that correct?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. At the same time it will deport more than 20,000 alien racketeers throughout the country who have no place in the country.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is my understanding.

Mr. STARNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES. Did not Colonel MacCormack, testifying before the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration of the House in 1935, under the terms of a resolution, state of the hardship cases held up at that time a certain percent of them were on relief, and he gave the percentage?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not recall the matter mentioned in the report referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. STARNES. I will insert in the RECORD the number he stated were on the relief rolls at that time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It is a national scandal that we have so many aliens in this country on relief today.

Mr. STARNES. He said out of 2,800 there were 480, or 17 percent, who were public charges and on relief.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. They should have been deported promptly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Did he not say if we are going to deport heads of families, we would have 8,000 American women and children born here on relief?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With reference to the 20,000 referred to by the chairman of the Immigration Committee, are they located so the Department knows where to put their finger on them and they may be deported if this bill becomes law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think so. I understand he has been advised to that effect.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Under the present laws they cannot be deported?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I understand they cannot, but they certainly should be.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is rather unfortunate that this matter has come for consideration at this time. It was supposed to have been taken up last Tuesday, but it was put over until today. The reason I say it is unfortunate that this matter is being considered today is because there is now pending before the Committee on Immigration a series of bills that, if considered adequately and extensively, and if they could have been brought out upon the floor of the House for final consideration, would have enabled us to have a real, modern, up-to-date deportation bill. Just why some members of the Immigration Committee are pushing the Dies bill forward with one hand and lending encouragement to Mr. STARNES for his bill is hard to understand.

This bill, as the author apologized for it, is more or less of a compromise. The bill, as the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee told you, is a bill that is only a step in the right direction. I agree with him absolutely. Since this bill is brought out on the floor for consideration today, we ought to take the best there is in it and we ought to take out the bad things and insert matter that we believe is better. That will be my purpose in the discussion of the bill, and I will try to do that if I can.

Mr. Speaker, there are two bills before the House. One is known as the Dies bill and the other is known as the Starnes bill. Both of these gentlemen are very distinguished Democrats and both of them are keen students of this question of immigration. However, their bills differ very materially. If you will pardon a personal allusion, I have tried to formulate in my studies of the question, with the help of some of the best students on immigration in the United States, a program which would bring together the finest provisions contained in both of these bills.

Let us take the Dies bill first and refer to the first section of the Dies bill. Down to line 10 the Dies bill and Starnes bill are exactly alike. Permit me to read the first three or four words in the first provision of the Dies bill. Here is what it says, after providing who shall be deported. It says:

Has been convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him.

It does not provide anything with reference to those who have already been convicted, those fellows who are already here. That should be corrected. That is plain. We should correct that provision. Some of you good Democrats who have the voting power ought to make the motion to correct that. If you do, I will support it. I would like to have you on that side correct it, because you have the voting strength and you will, of course, want to do that which is right.

Let us go over to the next page. On page 2 there is a provision with reference to the crime of possessing or carrying any firearm. Let us take a gunman when he has a gun on him. That is the time to take him, when you know who he is.

Let us take him then. What is the use of talking about 5 years? We ought to take him out then. Some of you should introduce such an amendment. If you must require 5 years' limitation, why have the provision at all?

Now let us go to part 3. I have no objection to part 3, because the bills of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] agree exactly regarding part 3.

Let us now take part 4. I can point out to you something in part 4 which I think you will agree ought to be changed. Here is the phrase, "knowingly and for gain encouraged, induced, assisted, or aided anyone to enter the United States in violation of law." We are talking now about sending out an alien who encourages someone to enter the country unlawfully when he himself is probably unlawfully here. I say the words "for gain" should be stricken out of the paragraph. Why? Because most of these people who are guilty of bootlegging immigrants into the country are effecting the entry of their own relatives, who are not going to receive any gain for it. Under this provision all an alien would have to do to defeat this provision is to say, "Why, certainly, I helped my brother and I helped my sister come in, and I helped all my other people come in, but I never got anything out of it." Therefore, what is the use of saying "for gain"? Let us strike that phrase out of the paragraph. When this is done I am sure the provision will be much more acceptable.

Let us go next to section 2. I have an amendment to strike out all of section 2. By that I do not mean to take out everything in section 2, because much of section 2 is worthy of our consideration, but there is one provision in it that should claim your closest attention. It is the section that gives the discretion to the Secretary of Labor which so many of the patriotic organizations of the country have been opposing.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] made reference to the Kerr-Coolidge bill. You know the Kerr-Coolidge bill was a very unpopular bill. It was so unpopular its proponents never had courage enough to bring it on the floor for a vote. It never was brought up here for a vote because it contained a provision which was looked upon with much disfavor by the people of the Nation. The bill surrendered the power of Congress to the Secretary of Labor, and gave the Secretary of Labor great discretion, so much so, as the gentleman from Texas stated in the opening of his remarks, that he did not favor it then, and most of you did not favor it. I mean by that you did not favor it in your own sentiments, for, of course, as I have heretofore stated, you did not have a chance to vote on the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If you please, not now; in just a minute.

Line 20 and following reads that the Secretary of Labor shall have the right to deport up to 3,500 persons in the first year and 1,500 in the next year and each year thereafter. Do you know how many people have been coming into this country under the quotas in the last 6 years? Only 16,000 a year. Are you going to give this woman—Miss Perkins—authority to pass upon whether nearly one-third of that number shall be deported? If you do this you have no right in good conscience to stand up before an American audience and profess your interest in safeguarding the power of Congress.

What we want to do, what we ought to do, and the right thing to do is to do something with reference to the alien of good character who may have a wife or children in this country who are American citizens. I have steadfastly stood on the floor of this House and have maintained my opposition to the tearing down of the immigration bars, and I am opposed to the surrender of this power. We should be careful, pending the time when we can find some formula by which the problem can be worked out. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] stated he had been in favor of having these hardship cases come up as separate private bills. I never was in favor of that. I thought I knew exactly what would happen, and as the gentleman has told you, you saw what happened. We tried to consider 15 of these bills the other day, and I think we considered 4, and all of them were sent back to the committee. We must have some plan for handling the aliens who have wives and children here.

The bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] provides that any man who has lived in this country for 10 years would be subject to this woman's clemency. I maintain that requirement is not sufficient. That man should have something besides his stay in this country for 10 years to recommend him. If he has been an alien 10 years and has not obtained citizenship, that is greatly to his discredit, it would seem. But this bill says, in effect, to an alien, "If you can buy, steal, or forge your way to the United States and stay here 10 years all you have to do is to hunt up Mme. Perkins, and she will grant you full immunity." Any man who has been in this country 10 years and has made no effort to become a citizen ought not to have any consideration shown him.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Let me proceed for just a minute and explain what I think should be done regarding this problem. I would humbly suggest to some of you good Democrats that you offer an amendment, if you think this measure should be changed in this respect.

Let us take the next section, reading as follows:

has lived continuously in the United States for at least 1 year, and has living in the United States a parent, a spouse, legally recognized child.

The gentleman from Texas refers in his bill to an adopted child.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield now for a brief question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. A moment ago the gentleman referred to eliminating the words "for gain" from the bill. Does not the gentleman believe there are people who are paid for helping to bootleg these aliens into this country?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; but this would include them, too. This would include anybody, whether his action was for gain or not for gain. It would include everybody. I think the gentleman will see that he and I agree absolutely.

I think this is what should be in the bill. A study on your part will, I think, convince you of the merits of the proposition. Why not put into the bill a provision something to this effect: That no alien will be considered to be in the class that we consider "hardship cases" unless he has been a resident of the United States for 5 years and has not been guilty of these heinous offenses set forth in the exceptions, and has a wife or child who is an American citizen.

If such a child is born in the United States of America, he is a citizen and should receive consideration; and if such a man has a child or has a wife that is an American citizen, then we should say that we will give him consideration only when he can show that he has been a resident for 5 years and is not a person included in the exceptions provided in the bill. We should consider carefully one thing here, and that is the fact that American citizenship means something. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes up under most unusual conditions and is an unusual bill in many respects.

The original bill offered by my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], H. R. 5573, was probably unobjectionable to practically 90 percent of the membership of this House, but the bill which we are today considering, H. R. 6391, sounds a retreat from the principles set out in H. R. 5573, and all I ask the membership of this House to do is to obtain a copy of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] on March 12, numbered 5573, read that bill, and then compare it with H. R. 6391, which was introduced on April 14 and was written by someone else; no hearings were held and the full committee did not act. Then let your conscience be your guide in voting on amendments to this bill, H. R. 6391, Mr. Speaker, which will make it less objectionable than it is at the present time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I have only 5 minutes, and, while I am very sorry, I cannot yield.

I want to make this statement to you. If you adopt H. R. 6391 in toto, without amendment, and without striking out the objectionable features in it, you are sounding a retreat from restrictive and selective immigration into the United States of America. You are surrendering to the ceaseless hounding brought upon us by alien groups in this country to loosen the bars and to open the gates and let the flood tide in, and you are going to reward violators of immigration laws and violators of basic laws of the countries from which some of these aliens come, as well as of this country. You are going to reward such violations by conferring upon them the right of American citizenship. You can do this if you want to, but I want you to know that the record shall set out the full facts.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I may say to the Members of the House that I am not opposed to immigration into this country, and I am not opposed to giving relief in genuine hardship cases. I am opposed to the separation of families where there is genuine hardship, but I want to tell you that some of the cases involved here do not require a separation from father or mother in this country. Some of the cases in which the Department of Labor has suspended deportation for a period of 4 years, even though the law provides they must be deported, involve no family separation so far as father and mother are concerned, but simply involve separations among aliens who came to this country and in some instances all of them entered here illegally. It involves, Mr. Speaker, the retention in this country of men and women who came here suffering with syphilis, gonorrhea, insanity, or tuberculosis, and I will set out the names and the case records that are on file down there now. It involves the granting of the privilege of American citizenship to men and women convicted of perjury and other crimes involving moral turpitude; and I think there should be more time given for debate on this subject, and those of us who have studied this question and have definite views about it should have an opportunity to inform the membership of the House before they vote on this bill.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I have not the time and cannot yield.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the late Colonel MacCormack, a very able administrator, although I differed from his views and his philosophy with regard to the immigration problem, he was an able man; and when he offered me the dubious honor of sponsoring a bill of this sort last year in the closing hours of the Congress, he said that if he could once establish the principle of granting discretionary power to the Secretary of Labor on these cases, that, though only eight or nine thousand cases would be involved, the law could be amended so as to extend the time for handling such cases in the future, and, in his judgment, from 150,000 to 200,000 cases eventually would be cared for under the provisions of such an act.

I think this bill ought to be amended radically or defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5779) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to Senate amendments numbered 4, 12, 28, 41, 49, 51, 56, 58, 63, 77, 79, 83, and 88 to the foregoing bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 155. Joint resolution to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 790) entitled "An act to repeal section 13 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes', approved February 22, 1935."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 114) entitled "An act to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation pumping or other uses, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. POPE, Mr. HATCH, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCCARRAN, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEPORTATION OF CRIMINALS AND CERTAIN OTHER ALIENS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6391, with Mr. UMSTEAD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 1 hour and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, this is the same demonstration we get every time an immigration bill is brought up—either a roll call, or the charge that we are going to do something wrong to this country. Every time they want us to do something for the poor immigrant who has not committed any crime, when we bring the matter up, it is wrong, and there is the cry for deportation; and when we bring that up then there is the cry that it is too strict. It is the same story—the old difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. You do not know where you are or where you stand.

What is all this noise about? I know that if I brought a bill here for the relief of one single alien there would be objections to it. I do not think that I could get a unanimous-consent request to relieve one decent alien in this country. There is always some hidden influence that brings about a fight in some spot in this Chamber. What does this bill do? Under this bill we are going to deport about 20,000 criminal racketeers. If you vote against this bill, you would give the criminal element a license to stay here, while at the same time you would separate thousands of noncriminal aliens from their American wives and American-born children. If you vote for the bill you are going to save some 8,000 wives and American children who have committed no wrong, who have committed no crime. What do you want to do? Do you want to shoot these people? Very well, take them out and shoot them, and do it openly, even though they are here in this country. What is the use of pussyfooting? I am not in favor wholeheartedly of this bill, the bill does not go far enough, but we have to accept some compromise and we must stop using the matter as a political football.

I say to you that this bill has nothing to do with immigration. It does not bring anybody in. It is to clear up our internal troubles in this country. In every section and district in the United States we see some man and woman with four or five children whose record of entry we cannot find. That is the type that you will deport; while the criminal, the man who commits a crime, you do not touch. The criminals are too smart for all of us. They never convict themselves of a felony; they always convict themselves of a misdemeanor; and we have cases of criminals who have committed as many as 15 or 20 crimes, who have pleaded to misdemeanors, whom under the present law you cannot deport; but the little fellow that crossed the border 10 years ago without paying an $8 head tax, the man who is married to your sister or to mine, honestly married, who has brought up a decent family, under this law will be deported. In June of this year these people have got to be deported. This is the last stand in behalf of the innocent people; and I beg of you, I beg of you gentlemen of the Congress, stop these roll calls, stop this filibuster, and all of these points of order and amendments. I see what is in the mind of my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. He served notice upon you that he wants you to take the cream off the top of the can, deportation, and forget about the rest of the bill. We have cases in his district and in your district and in all of the districts. Why not extend the hand of mercy to 8,000 citizens who have committed no crime, no wrong? How long are we going to kick this proposition about? We have been playing football here with it now for 6 years. For 6 years these people have been on the edge of deportation. I appeal to you, ladies and gentlemen, in the name of American justice, pass this bill and give these people a happy home, give them peace of mind, let them stay here and become respectable citizens, and let these children keep their fathers, who would be deported if you reject the second section of this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I sometimes despair that the Congress will carry out the wishes of the people back home. If there is one thing that the people in this country want done it is for the Congress to enact a drastic deportation law, to deport alien Communists, Fascists, and Nazis, and other alien and revolutionary agitators back to their native lands. There is not a word in this bill about it. Who wrote this bill? Who is the author of it? I am not a member of the committee, but one member of the committee said that Mr. DIES did not write this bill. If he did not write it, then who did write it; where did it come from?

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman will yield, I shall answer him.

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The bill contains word for word many of the provisions of my original bill. It is a contribution from the labor organizations, from different factions, different groups, gotten up in the hope that we could find some common meeting ground.

Mr. FISH. Did this come from the Department of Labor?

Mr. DIES. No; it was not written by the Department of Labor.

Mr. FISH. Where did it come from?

Mr. DIES. I have just told you.

Mr. FISH. A member of the gentleman's committee said it came from some individual.

Mr. DIES. I comes from different groups of people.

Mr. FISH. It is quite different from the bill the gentleman introduced in the first instance.

Mr. DIES. I heartily approve.

Mr. FISH. A great patriotic organization interested in this kind of legislation, the Coalition, is against the Dies bill as now written. They have made a thorough study of it and have submitted a report against many of its provisions.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. STARNES. That same organization testified in favor of the original Dies bill?

Mr. FISH. Certainly. They went on record all over the country for the original Dies bill. I came here today expecting to support this bill, but as I read it over and then read what the Coalition had to say about it, I feel it should be amended in many particulars. I know they are a nonpartisan organization and an American organization and have no ax to grind except the general welfare of the United States. The reason I took this time today was simply to plead with this House to legislate, to function as a legislative body, to write legislation yourself. There is much that is good in this bill. There is much that is rotten in it. All you have to do to make a reasonable bill is to legislate yourselves. Accept the amendments that are good and vote down the ones that are bad.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I wonder if the gentleman agrees with me that under section 2 of this bill and the loopholes that may be found in it, it is going to be possible for the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, to nullify all of the mandatory provisions in section 1?

Mr. FISH. I do not know whether I go that far, but I believe section 1, as explained by the gentleman from Ohio, should be amended. I do not want to take the time to explain it again. I substantiate everything the gentleman from Ohio said about the different sections of the bill. Some are good and some are bad, but I do not know as I go as far as the gentleman from Kentucky that section 2 destroys the bill. I do not, however, believe in delegating our constitutional power to Miss Perkins, the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. MAY. I do not know whether I go that far myself or not, but I wanted to get the gentleman's idea.

Mr. FISH. It is intimated that this bill has the blessings of Mme. Perkins and the Department of Labor. If that is so, it certainly does not help the bill as far as I am concerned. [Applause.] I recollect that one of the reasons given when we recognized Soviet Russia was the fact that then we could deport back to that country some of these alien Communists. What does the record disclose? It discloses that Mme. Perkins had not deported, in the 4 years she has been in office as head of the Department of Labor, one single alien Communist back to Soviet Russia. Naturally I do not have any great confidence in any legislation that she recommends for the deportation of aliens. When I find that a nonpartisan patriotic organization, such as the Coalition, is emphatically against this bill, then I say, "stop, look, and listen." Then I say to the Democrats now in control of legislation, because I should like to vote for this bill, let us amend it and not delegate away our authority to Miss Perkins. Let us take up the amendments that are presented and discuss them and adopt the good ones. I will say to the House that this is the first deportation bill that has come up in Congress in the last 15 years. There is no issue in America that the people are more interested in, I do not care whether they are Democrats or Republicans, whether they come from Tennessee or New York. The people in America are interested in deporting these alien criminals and alien agitators, and we ought to legislate here and present a workable bill to carry out the wishes of the American people back home to deport alien agitators and alien gangsters.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is the gentleman in sympathy with granting some relief to these hardship cases that are noncriminal cases which we have before this Congress today?

Mr. FISH. Oh, I do not object to that. What I do object to is the fact that this bill is not a comprehensive deportation bill. It is an amnesty bill more than a deportation bill. I do not mind amnesty for worthy cases where there has been real hardship; but when you grant amnesty, let us likewise write a bill to deport alien agitators and revolutionists who seek to destroy our free institutions and republican form of government and give their jobs to loyal American citizens who believe in our American system.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to assure the gentleman that this provision in the Dies bill with regard to deportation is more constructive than any bill that has been presented by any Member of Congress in the last 10 years.

Mr. FISH. I do not agree with the gentleman. I am not objecting to the amnesty part, but I object to turning over our power to the Department of Labor and Mme. Perkins, and we cannot expect any effective action from her on her past record.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman admits there are parts of this bill that are meritorious?

Mr. FISH. Highly meritorious.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. And there are probably parts that are objectionable and should be stricken from the bill?

Mr. FISH. Exactly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I intimated in my remarks that I did not consider the bill perfect. Why not today set up a perfect bill, because this is perhaps the last chance we will have to pass a deportation bill at this session of Congress?

That is the only reason I took the floor today, to appeal to all Members, Republicans and Democrats alike, to put aside their partisanship and to legislate and to use their own judgment to perfect this bill, no matter where the amendments come from, whether they come from Democrats or Republicans. If we do this then we shall be exercising our legislative functions and carrying out the wishes of the American people.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, the present law under which immigration matters are handled in the United States is, in my judgment, farcical, tragic, and a monstrosity. I say this for the reason that it permits a great Nation like the United States to divide a family, send one member, perhaps the mother, to Canada, the father to Europe, and it might possibly permit the sending of the children to South America. If an intelligent body like the Congress of the United States is willing to permit such a law to remain on the statute books without any attempt to mitigate it, then that body is not exercising intelligent legislative functions.

The subject under discussion, we will all admit, is a very complicated one. Its implications, its ramifications, and its repercussions are many, wide, and varied. They embrace the delicate and important fields of economics, of international comity, and of human relations. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, the bill should be considered very carefully, very fully, and very prayerfully. There are provisions in this bill that to some will appear to harsh; there are other provisions that will appear too lenient. This is natural, as every Member will judge the measure in the light of his or her experience, and say that it is just or unjust, according to his or her lights. But here is what we are trying to do in this great Nation dealing with other peoples and other lands: These people come to our shores. For what purpose? For the very natural and humane impulse of bettering their own economic and social condition. For a great many years we have had the bars down.

The thing about this bill that I like is that it does away with that awful provision that will, if it goes into effect, eliminate the possibility of dividing families. Many of those children are American citizens. Maybe the father or the mother came in here under conditions that were not altogether legal. They are not criminals. The only crime they have committed is that of trying to better their conditions by coming to these hospitable shores. For over 100 years we have held out our hands to the people of Europe and other nations asking them to come and enjoy the freedom which the United States is supposed to accord to those who come under the sheltering folds of its flag.

I can conceive of no more cruel procedure than that, and this bill is entitled to support for this provision alone.

But the bill has many other distinct advantages over existing law, as pointed out by the distinguished author of the bill, Mr. DIES, of Texas, who has labored long and wrought intelligently in the working out of the many sane and humane provisions of this bill.

For these reasons I am giving to this bill my unqualified support.

Recently some plupatriotic organizations—and I say this advisedly—have been agitating this question. They would turn out everybody who was not born in America. This is not in accord with democracy; this is not in accord with the philosophy on which this Nation was founded, nor is it in accord with the philosophy of the American people. It is insane, unsafe, and un-Christian from the standpoint of social procedure. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, we have before us today what I regard as one of the most important matters that could come before the House, H. R. 6391, a bill introduced by Mr. DIES, to authorize the deportation of criminal aliens and certain other aliens, and for other purposes. It is claimed by the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and by the author of this bill, Mr. DIES, that it would mean the deportation of approximately 23,000 criminal aliens. This proposal is most desirable, indeed. I do and will give such provisions in this bill my hearty support. It is claimed that this is a compromise bill. I am afraid that in order to report the bill there has been too much compromise, and I shall favor some amendments to be offered by my colleagues—Mr. STARNES, of Alabama, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. FISH, of New York, and others. These amendments, in my opinion, will greatly strengthen this bill and the adoption of these amendments is strongly urged by a great many of the patriotic organizations of our country.

For instance, I do not think we should limit the deportation of criminal aliens to those who have been convicted within 5 years before deportation proceedings are instituted. We have many thousands of aliens who have been convicted in the courts of the United States for kidnaping, murder, robbery, rape, and other infamous crimes more than 5 years ago, and they should have been deported. Many of these are now in prison, and when their terms expire they should be promptly deported. I am afraid that this bill would prevent their deportation.

Subsection 4 of section 1 provides that an alien can be deported who knowingly and for gain encourages, induces, assists, or aids another alien to enter the United States in violation of the law. It seems to me the words "for gain" should be eliminated. It might be an easy matter to prove that one alien aided another alien to enter the United States illegally, but it would be a difficult matter to prove what gain, pay, or reward the alien received for this service.

Section 2 as a whole should be stricken out and perfecting amendments should be offered, and, I understand, will be offered. I am unwilling to give the Secretary of Labor the wide discretion of permitting aliens who, under the law, should be deported to remain in this country. Congress should lay down the rules governing the deportation of aliens. It is up to Congress to fix the deportation policies of this country, and it is the duty of the Department of Labor to carry out the policies and the laws passed by Congress on this matter. This is especially true at this time, because it is generally agreed that the present Secretary of Labor is not in harmony with the attitude of Congress and the American people on the question of deportation of criminal aliens. Several thousands of aliens have been apprehended and are subject to deportation, and the Secretary of Labor has held up these deportations for 1 or more years, and unless section 2 is stricken out or modified it will enable the Secretary of Labor to keep these aliens in this country.

ALIEN INFLUENCES

During my several years of service in the House and Senate, I have found that it is always a difficult matter to pass laws to restrict immigration and deport aliens. The influence of aliens and their friends in this country is powerful. I remember as a Member of the House after the World War in 1921, when the wealth and wonderful opportunities in our country had become known throughout the earth, millions of people from various countries were preparing to come to America. Our Government had confidential advices from one country that more than 10,000,000 people were preparing to come to America. Congress in 1921, in order to protect our country, passed the first real restrictive and selective immigration law. In 1924 we greatly strengthened that act and practically cut out foreign immigration. That act is called the second Declaration of American Independence. Nearly all of the foreign nations took an active hand to prevent the passage of the immigration acts of 1921 and 1924. On the day that we voted in the House on the act of 1924 the ambassador of a certain great nation had the report circulated that if the Congress voted to pass that bill, it meant war between the United States and that particular country. However, we passed it. We stopped foreign immigration to a large extent. We made it most restrictive and selective. Our country is so attractive in comparison to many other countries that millions of people have been and are still seeking homes in America. Because of the 10,000 or more miles of border and shore lines of this country more people have entered in violation of our immigration laws than many of us have any idea. It has been asserted by those who claim to know that in the last 10 years more than 500,000 foreign sailors have deserted their ships in American ports and remained in our country. They are here in violation of our laws. Hordes of aliens are coming into the United States over the Mexican and Canadian borders. Other hordes are coming in by motorboats and airplanes from other lands and from adjacent countries, landing at unguarded points on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, the Great Lakes, and the Gulf of Mexico. Our borders are not properly patrolled, and it has been asserted time and again by those who ought to know on the floor of the House and Senate, and elsewhere, that we now have in this country 3,500,000 aliens who came into this country illegally. They violated our laws and each and every one of them under the law is subject to deportation unless some provision of this bill should prevent it. It is also admitted that there are now 4,000,000 other aliens who came into this country legally. No one knows how many aliens are here who came in violation of our laws and the Government should take steps to ascertain the number.

All aliens should be required to register. I have no prejudice in my heart or mind toward the people of other countries of the world. We have a great many wonderful people who came to us from every nation and every section of the globe. They have shown their appreciation by becoming American citizens, and thousands of them have offered their lives and many of them have given their lives in the defense of this country. For all of these I have the highest respect.

I wish that it were possible for every man, woman, and child living on this globe to have a country like yours and mine, but this is impossible. If we should permit all the people who desire to enter the United States, it would fill the country up. They would benefit very little and at the same time destroy our own country. Holy Writ says:

He that provideth not first for his own house hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.

Under our oath of office it is our duty to provide first for the household of America, and so long as I remain a Member of the American Congress, I shall consider it my duty, as well as my privilege, to raise my voice and cast my vote in favor of those measures that will provide for and protect the household of America.

On this matter of deportation Congress has failed to meet the issue squarely. The Congress is not in possession of facts sufficient to pass the sort of bill that should be passed, and the Department of Labor, even though it were sympathetic with our deportation laws, is not in possession of sufficient facts to act intelligently and fairly. We will never be in a position to act as we should until Congress passes an act requiring all aliens to register as provided in a number of bills that are now before Congress, but because of certain influences have not been acted upon by the committees and reported to the House and Senate. The Starnes bill introduced in the House and the Reynolds bill introduced in the Senate provide for such registration. Let us find out how many aliens we have in this country, from whence they came, when they came in, and if they were admitted legally or slipped in in violation of our laws, and then let us have the courage, excepting for some special hardship cases, to deport those who came in defiance of our laws. When such registration is held and an investigation is made, it will be found that many of the worst gangsters and criminals of some of the other countries have slipped into the United States.

I know it is urged that some of these aliens have come here and married. That is part of the game that is being played. They come to the United States in violation of the law, and in order to create sympathy they set about to marry some American girl and then plead the sympathy act. I realize that there are some meritorious and real hardship cases, but we shall also find that many of these foreign aliens come here and go through some sort of marriage and attempt to use that to create sympathy to save them from deportation. Then there is another group who always urges us to unite families, but this group wants to do all of the uniting in the United States. The fact is we did not divide the families. They did the dividing. It is just as near to go back to Japan, China, Italy, Germany, or to some other country as it is to bring the folks from those countries to the United States. As a general rule I would say, let these folks unite over there and not over here. It is a mockery to pass the Immigration Acts of 1921 and 1924 practically to exclude foreign immigration of honest, industrious, and law-abiding people, and then to permit all classes of criminals to slip into this country in violation of our laws. Let us repeal our immigration laws or amend them so that only honest, law-abiding, industrious people can come in, and deport criminals and others who defy our laws.

Of course, this does not include persons who have come to this country and become American citizens. Such persons have all the rights of the native-born citizen, except that they cannot become President of the United States. We have a number of very capable men in both the House and Senate who were born in foreign lands, but years ago became American citizens. It is urged that it would be oppressive to require aliens to register. The truth is these aliens in nearly all of the countries from which they came must register in their own country if they go from one city to another, and certainly must register when they go from one country to another. In the District of Columbia and in practically every State of the Union, so far as I know, we require all of our American citizens to have an automobile driver's license which they must carry with them when driving, and if caught without it they are punished; and if an American citizen goes from one State to another he must take out a new driver's license.

CITIZEN OR ALIEN

In listening to some of the speeches made on the floor of the House today and to other speeches I have heard in the House and Senate on other occasions when immigration and deportation bills were being discussed, these speakers make the alien not only equal to but claim for him superior rights over the citizen. When an American citizen commits a felony we do not hesitate to indict him, convict him, hang him, electrocute him, or send him to the penitentiary, even though he is married and has children. We divide families among our citizens for violating the laws of this country. The alien who slips into this country and commits a felony—why should he not, as a general rule, likewise be required to take the consequences of his unlawful act? This Nation has a right to say what alien or aliens may or may not come into this country. We make the selection. We may exclude them entirely. Hauptmann, who was electrocuted for the kidnaping and murder of the Lindbergh baby, was one of those aliens who slipped into the country. He was a criminal and had a criminal record in Germany. If we had had an alien registration law and enforced it, Hauptmann, no doubt, would have been discovered and deported. We did not know he had slipped into our country until he committed this crime. There are thousands and thousands of Hauptmanns in this country. Let us find out who they are, where they are, where they come from, and their records, and when a law of this kind is enforced there will be less racketeering, less gangsters, and less disorder, also less assaults on American institutions. The citizens of every country of the world have preference over aliens, except in the United States.

JOBS AND RELIEF

Every alien who has been admitted to this country legally comes here with the understanding that he will not become a public charge on the American people. Any alien who becomes a public charge violates the agreements under which he entered and is subject to deportation. We have hundreds of thousands of aliens being supported and cared for at the expense of the taxpayers of this country in hospitals and other eleemosynary institutions. We have somewhere between 2,000,000 and 4,000,000 aliens recipients of relief in some form or other from the Federal, State, or local governments. We have some two to four million aliens who are employed by private industry or by the United States Government and being supported at the expense of the taxpayers of this Nation. They are enjoying all of the privileges of our American citizens. Recently President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, announced that we had 10,000,000 workers unemployed in this country. Harry Hopkins, the Relief Administrator, stated that we had approximately 7,000,000 unemployed and this unemployment problem was permanent. A Democratic Member of the House the other day read a list of aliens who had good jobs in Washington and elsewhere with good salaries under the Federal Government. France, England, Italy, Germany, and other countries have laws giving preference of employment to the citizens of their country. An American worker, however skilled, cannot secure employment in those countries if there is a citizen of that country who desires and can do the work. American citizens are not accepted and cared for on relief in foreign countries. They are promptly sent home. Ours is the only country on earth that gives the alien the same opportunities for work and the same relief as American citizens. No other country on earth tolerates any such condition as we have. I am in favor of the Starnes bill to send those on relief back to their own countries. These nations whose citizens we are caring for are spending this year $14,000,000,000 to increase their armies and navies to threaten the peace of the world and the peace of our own country, forcing us to spend this year more than $1,000,000,000 for the support of our Army and Navy. Do you not think that it would be fair and just to send these needy people back to their own countries and let their government spend their money providing for these citizens instead of armies and navies to destroy the people there and to destroy us, if possible.

THERE IS A DIFFERENCE

During the World War, it was claimed that there were 1,000,000 able-bodied young men from alien countries living in the United States within the draft age who did not enter our Army or Navy on the ground that they were aliens. The allied countries could not put them in their armies or navies because they were not over there. These young men remained in the United States and made all the way from $10 to $30 per day, while our American boys were fighting in foreign lands or training in camps and serving for $1 per day in America and $1.10 overseas to help preserve the countries of these aliens. And when those of them who were not killed, or had not died of disease, came home they found that their jobs were taken by these aliens, and many of them still have these jobs. There are now more than a million veterans and their sons and daughters looking for work that they cannot find, while our Government is employing aliens and paying them fat salaries.

In every relief bill that has come up in the last 4 years efforts have been made by Republicans and a few Democrats to give preference to American citizens and to American veterans, but in each case these amendments have been defeated by this administration. This action on the part of our Government is indefensible. [Applause.] If a man entered this country legally and is still an alien, it is his own fault. He prefers to be an alien, or is he an alien because he knows that he can enjoy the same benefits as American citizens and will not have to fight and defend this country in time of war? Or is it because he believes from our conduct of the past that if there is any preference shown it is to the alien and not to the American citizen or to the defender of our country and our flag? I wish to repeat that I cannot speak too highly of those aliens who joined our Army and Navy and helped to defend this country, and as a reward to them the Congress passed an act that enabled them to become citizens, and most of them did become citizens.

I trust that one of these days the Immigration Committee will bring out a real deportation bill and coupled with a provision requiring all aliens to register and requiring all aliens in this country who depend upon charity to be returned to their own country. I hope that this bill will be amended so that it may be helpful and not hurtful to the cause of restricted immigration and to honest and effective deportation. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 3 minutes.

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the Dies bill that will authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and other convicted aliens engaged in obnoxious, offensive, and criminal activities.

On the other hand, this bill contains certain provisions that will help to humanize the immigration law by legalizing the permanent residence of a class of aliens now residing in the United States, eligible for citizenship but who otherwise could never qualify on account of the obstacle of illegal entry.

The aliens this bill would relieve are aliens who have lived here as law-abiding citizens, heads of families, taxpayers, and employers in many instances. These aliens who have lived here from 10 to 20 and 30 years have already proved their probationary period of good citizenship by living within the law, and doing all they can to promote the best interests of the Nation. These aliens covered by this bill have been on probation from the time they came here and have proved their worth by their character, their reputation, their honesty, their integrity, and their fidelity to our laws and institutions. The entries legalized will be deducted from the regular quota of their respective countries, so that it will be known in advance the type of citizens they will be.

Mr. Chairman, my distinguished and good friend from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], who just preceded me, challenged the patriotism of the aliens in our country during the World War.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. I regret exceedingly that I cannot yield because of the limitation of my time. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Kentucky contended that the aliens claimed exemption and refused to fight for our flag. Let me call to his attention that in the lower end of the Fifth Avenue-Washington Square-Greenwich Village district, which I have the honor to represent in the Congress of the United States, there was assembled one of the greatest organizations of aliens who went abroad to fight for our Republic. They were known as the lost battalion.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And you made them citizens, too.

Mr. SIROVICH. It was a most distinguished group of men representing every walk of human endeavor. They made the supreme sacrifice upon the battlefields of France. They bared their breasts to shot and shell. Their mortal remains hallow the soil of France in giving up everything they held near and dear in life that our Republic might endure. The lost battalion and its great record is a refutation of the statement of my friend from Kentucky. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, this bill humanizes the immigration law. It eliminates the criminal, the chronic offender, from our body politic. On the other hand, it retains the best that have come from Europe in order to be assimilated in our midst. It will eliminate the evils, the tragedy, the hardship of the disintegration of the American home. The home is the foundation upon which the superstructure of our civilization and Government must rest. My good friend from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] quoted the Bible regarding immigration. Let me answer him by referring to the Biblical dogma that whom God has united in marriage, let no Congressman tear asunder to destroy their home. [Applause.] We are all immigrants. Only the Indians are native Americans. Immigrants and descendants of immigrants have built this country to be the greatest, the most prosperous, and the most wonderful Nation on the face of the globe. We all love our Republic. We are willing to work for it in peacetime and ready to die for it in times of war to preserve our institutions.

Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to the fact that in the Fourteenth Congressional District, which I have the honor to represent in Congress, there was established over a hundred years ago the distinguished La Salle Academy, one of the greatest institutions of Catholic learning in the United States.

Old La Salle Academy at Second Street and Second Avenue, in New York, is named after Jean Baptiste de la Salle, who was born in Rheims, France, in 1651. Jean Baptiste de la Salle chose the Catholic Church as his field of endeavor and was the founder of free instruction and education to the poor children of France. During the nineteenth century the Brothers of the Christian Schools, who were disciples of Jean Baptiste de la Salle, established schools throughout Europe and found a hearty welcome and support in the United States, where they found a fertile field among those who had left the shackles of European life behind to find the freedom of thought, speech, and action guaranteed in the United States. In this splendid college of learning many of our leading citizens received their education at old La Salle, among them His Eminence Patrick Cardinal Hayes, of New York, and His Eminence George Cardinal Mundelein. Another alumnus is Monsignor Lavelle, vicar general of the Archdiocese of New York. Former Gov. Alfred Emanuel Smith, of New York, one-time candidate for the Presidency of the United States, just 53 years ago was presented by old La Salle with a medal for oratory—the first medal for that accomplishment that he ever received and now among his dearest treasures. In my congressional district these four eminent men were born.

As a Representative of this district, I deem it my duty to come to the defense of Cardinal Mundelein, whose honor and reputation have been attacked by the scurrilous, club-footed, blood-purging German mountebank and demagogue, Dr. Goebbels, whom a clever Dutch artist has rightly described as the greatest well-poisoner propagandist of all times.

Cardinal Mundelein's ancestors emigrated to this country from Germany 130 years ago and lived in our district. They were honored and respected in our community, where they reared their families and fought in all the wars in our republic. Cardinal Mundelein is as patriotic an American as any of our great American forebears. His patriotism has been a constant source of inspiration and piety to millions of his coreligionists. As a distinguished dignitary of the church and as an American he believes in religious tolerance and has come to the aid and defense of the cruelly persecuted Catholics in Germany. The present persecution of Catholics in Germany has assumed the forms of sadism. Influential Catholic laymen and Catholic priests are framed and tried in courts on trumped-up charges, with a view to discrediting the Catholic Church, and with the clear object in mind to compromise Christianity and make the introduction of paganism less difficult. Cardinal Mundelein is in possession of the facts concerning the persecution of the Catholics in the Fatherland, and knows all the details of the persecuted priests. He has called the attention of the world to this orgy of persecutions and uttered some blatant truths about the alien paranoiac Fuehrer, Adolph Hitler, and his official propagandist, the club-footed demagogue, Dr. Goebbels. As a result of this courageous and fully justified statement of the prince of the Catholic church, Dr. Goebbels has delivered a long tirade against Christianity and particularly against Catholicism, in which he not only undertook to assassinate the character of Cardinal Mundelein, but also to threaten to purge the representatives of two great Christian churches—Protestantism and Catholicism—with more persecutions.

Mr. Chairman, this bill calling for the deportation of alien criminals should be adopted as a model by the great German nation. They should deport their own alien foreign leaders who have grabbed the control of their country.

To understand the infamy involved in the attempt to assassinate the character of Cardinal Mundelein, one has to bear in mind that the leaders of the Third Reich are anything but pure Germans. They are mostly foreigners. Behold Adolf Hitler himself, the Al Capone racketeer of Germany, dark skinned, black eyes, swarthy, and excitable, does not represent the ideal of the blond, blue-eyed, slow, and calm German. He is an Austrian Slav who became a German citizen shortly before he seized power. His first deputy, Rudolf Hess, the intellectual sadist and sycophant of Hitler, head of the brown storm-troopers, was born and raised in Egypt, and his habits are those of an Oriental. The Nazi Minister of Agriculture, Herr Darree, the boll weevil, corn borer, and agrarian parasite of Germany, was born and raised in the Argentine. The spiritual leader of the Third Reich, Alfred Rosenberg, is a Latvian Slav. Not one drop of German blood flows in his veins. But he is the most fanatical religious racketeering preacher of pure Germanism. The former playboy of Adolf Hitler, Mr. Haefenstengel, is half American and a Harvard graduate. Any number of lesser Nazi lights are of French, Italian, Dutch, and Czech origin. They should all be deported from Germany as foreigners and crooked aliens. No government of any European nation consists of as many foreigners as the present Nazi Government.

You will probably be surprised to learn that all the anti-Semetic doctrines of Adolph Hitler, as he has formulated them in his badly written book, My Struggle, for which he collected millions of dollars in royalties and which he salted away in Switzerland for a rainy day when his crown will fall, are copied literally from the book of a Jewish renegade called Triebitsch, whose book of hate, Germandom and Judaism, served Hitler as his source of inspiration. Triebitsch was an insane pathological individual and committed suicide when Hitler, whose teacher he was, threw him out of the Nazi Party upon attaining power.

If, in addition to these intellectual monstrosities, you take into consideration the fact that the actual ruler of the Third Reich, General Goering, Minister of Police, Minister of Aviation, Minister of the Theaters and Operas, and Director of the Four-Year Plan, is the former inmate of the Etna Lunatic Asylum in Stockholm, that he is an incorrigible opium fiend and sadist and suffers from "uniformitis", having 150 different uniforms to wear, you have a clear picture of the Nazi saints who are now trying to assassinate the character of Cardinal Mundelein, who is, no doubt, one of the most beloved and respected dignitaries of the Catholic Church and who is famous for his piety and courage.

These foreigners and alien political racketeers of Germany who are tyrannizing and enslaving the German people are today blackening the reputation of Cardinal Mundelein, when they are not fit to blacken his shoes.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope this immigration bill, so humanely written to preserve the home, will receive the approbation and approval of the membership of this House.

This immigration bill has the endorsement of Mr. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, of Mr. Lewis, president of the C. I. O., and of the American Legion. After all, it is a compromise bill that will exclude criminals from our land and make our country a haven of refuge for the oppressed, the persecuted, and those who are looking for a happier day to live. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I am a new Member of Congress. I am on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and know a little about these bills. I have sat in on the hearings.

This bill, as I understand it, was not originated by the Department of Labor or Madam Perkins. It has not even been submitted to Madam Perkins for approval. Therefore, if the Perkins name is anathema to us, let us not apply that feeling to the bill. If there are Members on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization whom we do not like, let us not apply our prejudice to this bill. Let us rather consider the bill on its own merits. As the gentleman who preceded me has stated, there are only two parts to this bill. Section 1 provides for mandatory deportation of alien criminals.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman know that under section 2 every person admitted under section 1 can be paroled by Madam Perkins if she wishes to do so?

Mr. MASON. No. The gentleman does not know that and does not acknowledge it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is a fact.

Mr. MASON. It is provided under section 1 that criminal aliens shall be deported. However, I want to read the words which precede it, because the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] stated he could not find these words in the bill. I am reading on line 5 of page 1, which is as follows:

> Shall be promptly deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, * * * as amended, regardless of when he entered if he * * *.

Then there are several provisions which cover these cases.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Read one of them.

Mr. MASON. They are right there in the bill.

Section 2 of the bill treats with a different matter entirely. This section treats with granting amnesty to aliens who are now here, who secured entrance into the country at least 10 or more years ago, who were smuggled in, or who came in illegally, who are under the present law subject to deportation, but who have not been deported because they are hardship cases. Every one of these has entered into a family relationship here, which means that if these people are deported we are breaking up families, and in all probability we are removing the breadwinners and will have the rest on our hands.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Not now; my time is too limited.

It seems to me that common sense requires that both of these problems be solved and be solved by this Congress, and this is the only opportunity to solve them.

Deportation for alien criminals is one problem that should be solved, and taking care of these hardship cases that are now here is a fact and must be faced, and we must solve that problem. This bill provides the only possible way of solving the problem that is now before Congress.

I have listened to discussions of the four Starnes bills in committee, and I say that according to my judgment they are impossible and altogether too drastic, and for one I would not vote to favorably report those bills. I doubt if they will be reported at all at this Congress. This is our opportunity; let us take advantage of it. If there are some things in this measure that you want to improve, and they could possibly be improved, offer amendments to improve, but let us act upon the bill, and act favorably, as the only method of solving these two problems that have been confronting the country for many years. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I served on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization for 2 years, and I am not sure that even as a member of that committee approaching the job with proper diligence and devotion, I was not afflicted with considerable confused thinking about this whole subject of immigration and naturalization and deportation.

I wonder if it would not be a good idea, in connection with the consideration of this bill, to present a broad concept of the philosophy and the jurisdiction over which that committee operates.

It deals, first of all, with immigration. This means the application of standards under which people can come from foreign shores into this country. Prior to 1917 our law was in a condition of chaos and it was codified in 1917, so that today, for all practical purposes, we have a fairly good basic law dealing with the subject of immigration and applying to those who come into the United States of America.

The second aspect of the jurisdiction of this committee deals with naturalization. It applies certain standards under which those who have come from foreign shores may become citizens of the United States. With respect to the observations that my friend from Ohio made earlier in the afternoon that when you talk about the un-American aspect of the attitude of anybody coming from a foreign shore into this country who has been here for 10 years without taking out citizenship papers, I may say to this House that there are two sides to that story. We are in the habit of saying to an alien, "Go and get yourself naturalized." We place the entire responsibility upon him. We had a reasonably high level of fees. We made no open-handed invitation to prepare for citizenship. I do not know that in general we properly approached that problem and said, "Come, we will take you by the hand and take you through the processes whereby you can become a citizen of the United States."

When we get ready to level the finger of reproach and fasten the fault upon one group or another, let me say that the fault is in some measure ours as much as it is the fault of the alien that we have today in this country 3,000,000 aliens who have not yet made application for their naturalization papers. Whenever we can infuse our people with the kind of spirit that will bid them say: "We will take you by the hand and make citizens of you; we will welcome you into the fold of this great family; we will do everything possible that you may assimilate the ideals and traditions of the country", I fancy then that the number of aliens in this country who are eligible for citizenship will certainly diminish even as the number has diminished in years gone by. This is the second aspect of the work of this committee.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield now.

The third aspect deals with deportations. In other words, immigration involves those who come over and the standards under which they enter our country; naturalization deals with citizenship after they get here; and deportation deals with removal from our land when they have violated the tolerances and the good graces of the American people, when they have violated our laws or when they have done those things that, in our judgment, should not admit them into citizenship in this country.

The bill that is pending before the House this afternoon deals with the third aspect of this matter; namely, deportation.

When you think of deportation you must put aliens into two general classes.

First, those who have come into the country legally. Unless they have violated the law in some respect or unless they have projected themselves into a position where they can be deported under existing law, we can do nothing about them. They have been legally admitted in the first instance. They came here under existing law, and so long as their conduct is proper we should be kindly disposed toward them.

The other classification of aliens is composed of those who illegally came into the country. Everybody knows that under existing law it is a crime to enter this country illegally, and they can be deported if they are found out, their whereabouts ascertained, and they can be apprehended by the immigration authorities. Now, look at the anomalies you have in the law with respect to those who have been legally admitted into the country. You can deport an alien under existing law who is legally here, for stealing a loaf of bread. You cannot deport a man for having been convicted of carrying a concealed weapon.

The reason is that, under the laws of the various States, carrying a concealed weapon does not involve moral turpitude. Fancy a law of that kind, where you can deport a man for stealing a loaf of bread to ward off starvation or feed a hungry family but you cannot deport a gangster for having carried concealed weapons. It is only an instance of the oddities that we have in the law at the present time. Here is a bill that in some measure at least will for the first time in my judgment correct that strange situation. Another oddity under existing law is that you can deport a man who violates the Federal narcotic law but you cannot deport him if he violates a State narcotic law. If somebody in Chicago has obtained various kinds of narcotics and peddles them inside the city, you cannot deport him, under existing law, as long as he does not cross the State line and get into interstate commerce. So long as he does not lend himself to the jurisdiction of the Federal law, he cannot be deported. That is an oddity in existing law that this bill purports to correct, so that anybody who violates a State narcotic law as well as a Federal law can be deported.

A word now about the discretionary or permissive authority vested in the Secretary of Labor. I have attempted to see this whole proposition from the standpoint of the ardent restrictionist as well as from the standpoint of those who would liberalize the law. I think there is a pathway somewhere in the middle that we can pursue, and that, I believe, is embraced within the provisions of this bill. We have about 2,500 to 2,800 hardship cases pending at the present time. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] has said, some of these people are afflicted with social diseases.

Some of them are afflicted with tuberculosis, and others, for other reasons, might be deported under the 1917 act. But I examined the files of those cases to which he referred, and while there are some instances of that kind, let me say to the members of this Committee this afternoon—and I say it on the basis of factual information, gleaned from the same files that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] examined—that he and his colleague over in the Senate, who were sponsors of these restrictionist bills, picked out only the headline cases and the limited number of flagrant cases and sent those out to the attention of the country, and they appeared in the newspapers. It would appear that if we vested some power in the Secretary of Labor perhaps we would let some people remain in this country who were abusers of the privileges of the country. But it should be pointed out at the same time that in the 2,800 cases alluded to there were a great many very essentially hardship cases, for which we could make no provision except as we reposed discretionary power in the Secretary of Labor. If you will examine those hardship cases as I examined them you will find that probably 60 percent of all those cases were cases where the persons involved were not law violators, they were not on relief, or were not law violators in a very substantial sense. Perhaps they were guilty of some minor infraction of the law, but I doubt very much whether that justifies such drastic action as sending them out of the country. There must be some place where you repose an element of discretion, even as we repose discretion in the President of the United States or some officer of the Government relative to other legislation, and here it must be necessarily reposed in the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman's statement sounds very beautiful, but does he not know that the Immigration Committee picked out 15 presumably of the best of these cases and brought them on the floor of Congress and that not a single one was accepted?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, we considered those in committee 2 years ago, and we went from the top to the bottom of them, and we had people come in from the 48 States of the Union, fathers and mothers, with children, fathers who had come from foreign countries, who had married American women, whose children were born in this country, many of whom are in business at the present time and who have been here for 10 or 12 years, and yet under the provisions of existing law you have to send them out of the country. When you talk about these people on relief rolls, there is another side. I remember one gentleman who came to the committee from New York. I asked him what he did and he said he was in business. He had a business of his own. I asked him whether he employed anybody and he said that he employed 50 people. There was an alien, his wife an American citizen, his two children American citizens, who employed 50 of our own citizens in his own business. Do you think that he ought to be deported? [Applause.]

Ever since I became a member of the Immigration Committee in 1933, every bill that emanated from that committee has been a storm center of controversy. Either it did not satisfy those who were liberal in their views or it did not satisfy those who had extreme restrictionist tendencies. Since that time, Congress has wrestled with this alien problem, a problem that has been aggravated by the ravages of the depression. It is high time that we approach this matter with even tempers in the spirit of compromise and remain in session today until this bill in original form or amended form is passed.

Existing law contains too many anomalies. It must be refined and perfected. It contains loopholes which permit criminals to remain in our land and it contains provisions that would impose hardships upon deserving people. This bill is a step in the right direction and I trust that with patience and tolerance, the committee will devote itself to the task until it has been completed.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, this is a very serious and important bill that we are considering this afternoon. This bill is the outgrowth of a great many bills that were presented to satisfy a majority of the members of the committee and the House.

The first four sections of the bill contain provisions that I believe we are all in accord with; that is, providing for the deportation of alien criminals. According to the late Commissioner of Immigration, Mr. McCormack, there are 23,000 alien criminals in the United States. We have his figures, we had his word for this.

The second part of this bill deals with hardship cases. The gentleman from Alabama cited several isolated cases, and the Department of Labor will deal with them. They will be deported. That has nothing whatsoever to do with this bill.

It has also been stated on the floor that the floodgates would be opened. This bill does not attempt to do that at all, this bill has nothing to do with that.

Mr. Chairman, 23,000 alien criminals will be deported—this is mandatory upon the Department of Labor—if this bill is passed. If the bill is defeated, of course, it means that they will stay here only the Lord knows how long.

Involved also are 2,900 hardship cases. Some question has been raised as to just where we are going to place this power, some members of the committee insisting that it be given to the Members of Congress, that these cases be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Twenty-nine hundred hardship cases have been placed in the laps of this committee. We reported out an omnibus bill carrying 12 so-called hardship cases and I think we got by with 6 or 7. The rest are still awaiting action. These are the tactics that are now being used, and if this is the way we are going to deal with the problem, you can figure out how long it will take the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to deal with what by now probably amount to 3,000 hardship cases. I dare say that 60 percent of the Members of this House have introduced bills to save from deportation some person in their district. They are hardship cases. We are familiar with the facts in a great many of the cases. In many instances the individuals involved have been here a great number of years, 10, 15, or 20 years. Just because they have committed the unpardonable, the unforgivable crime of coming into the country they loved, to stay here, now we are going to deport them, now we are going to send them out in spite of the hardships that we are creating. Ninety-five percent of them are married, 95 percent of them have families in this country, they own their own property, they send their children to our schools, they are paying their proportionate share of the taxes; yet we are going to send them out of the country, deport them as undesirables, because they came into the country illegally. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, the doors of the penitentiaries of the United States will open to let out a murderer, a man who has committed murder in the country, and society opens its arms and says, "Welcome." That is the paradox of the story.

The statement had been made that 500,000 sailors have deserted ships in the last 10 years. That is a far-stretchd statement. The gentleman who made that statement had no basis for it. No one knows just how many are in the country; there is no way of telling.

It is also said that the aliens refuse to shoulder a gun. Again I take issue with the author of the statement. There appeared before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a boy born in Poland. He was here in 1917 but was too young to enlist in the American Army and his father was too old; but, Mr. Chairman, they both enlisted in the Polish Legion, were sent over and fought on the side of the Allies and for us. Then they came back here and the chances are that under this law they will be deported if it is found that one of them came in here illegally.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia there is no foreign problem, racial, social, or economic. Less than one-half of 1 percent of the people of that area are of foreign birth. If there is a single unnaturalized alien in my district, I do not know it. But I served for 2 years as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and through this service became interested in the immigration problem. Last summer in my spare time I did some collateral reading touching the subject of racial and social problems growing out of our alien population.

There is no doubt in my mind of the fact that we have a problem growing out of immigration. In the 130 years since 1800 there have been 62,000,000 emigrants in the entire world, of which 90 percent have come to America. They came for various purposes, but primarily to get land and to enjoy more freedom than they had at home.

Whenever there has been a period of economic stress, racial and group prejudices have developed. Germany of today is a good example. We have had the problem, but less acutely. We also have group movements that may properly be called subversive of our form of government. We have reached a period in our history when this also should give us concern.

Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is a step in the right direction, but it does not go far enough. I was interested in the suggested amendments mentioned this morning by our colleague from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. I hope all Members of the House will feel as I do; that is, we should approach the problem in a spirit of fairness toward the alien, but in a spirit of real concern, not only for the unemployed Americans but for the perpetuity of our form of government, and that we will today attempt to unite on amendments which will make this bill as good and as strong as we can make it, because in all probability this will be the only bill we will have a chance to act on at the present session.

In connection with any legislation to restrict immigration and to deport criminal aliens, it is pertinent to consider our racial problem.

Our racial problem, of course, comes from immigration. Immigration is an age-long tendency of men to migrate in order to improve their conditions of life. The intermingling of races through the centuries has been accomplished by four major processes, namely, invasion, conquest, colonization, and immigration. Invasion is the process whereby an inferior race, such as the Huns and Vandals, conquer and overthrow a superior civilization. Conquest, on the contrary, is the military subjugation, as witnessed under the Roman Empire, of an inferior race or civilization by a superior one. Colonization occurs when a country acquires new territory and sends native sons to develop it under the supervision of the mother country. Immigration, which has been the latest phase of race intermingling, is when people of one nation migrate from that nation to another nation with the view and purpose of establishing a permanent home in the new nation and ultimately of acquiring citizenship in the nation of adoption. As such it must, of course, be differentiated from migration where a transient status only is involved. The North American Indians migrated for reasons of climate, a food supply, and so forth; some 2,000,000 Negroes during the boom days migrated from the South to the North, and during the 5 years of the depression many of them migrated home again. There are some 25,000,000 native whites of the United States now living in places other than that of their birth. The old dominion has been a heavy loser from migration, many of our brightest sons and daughters, after receiving their education, migrating to other States for permanent residence. Even animals and birds, such as ducks and geese, migrate. But an immigrant is one who is not moving back and forth but moving from an old home to a new one that he thinks is going to be better. It is essential, therefore, for us to recognize the difference between a migrant and an immigrant.

In studying the history of immigration, it is interesting to note that practically all immigration in the true sense of the word has been between countries in the Temperate Zone. Neither the Tropics nor the polar regions have ever attracted immigrants for apparent reasons. And the flow has been from old countries to newer ones where the ratio between population and land has been low. There is something in human nature that makes the average man want to acquire land, and that instinct is not confined to any race or any particular time. In fact, all of us have noted the tendency not to regard a man as a substantial citizen until he has acquired land, and the most popular way in America of evidencing bigness is not only to acquire land but to build the finest home in the community.

Considering, therefore, this desire to acquire land, it is not surprising that countries suffering from overproduction early turned to the vast areas to be found in this new country of ours. Even at the present time our population is only 41.3 to the square mile, while most of Europe has a density ranging from 100 to 700; British-India, 225.7; and Japan, 346.8. Consequently, the greatest migration of all times occurred between 1800 and 1830 from the countries of Europe to America. While later in this paper we will take note of certain racial characteristics of the early settlers, it must be remembered, as mentioned above, that there is a difference between colonization and immigration, and hence our first settlers were colonizers and not immigrants.

In the first half of the nineteenth century, the largest immigration to this country, and the best class of immigrants, was from Great Britain and Germany. That type of immigration reached its peak about 1880. Then commenced the movement of the agricultural proletaria of southern and eastern European countries, especially Italy, Austria-Hungary, and the southern nations that once were a part of Russia. This flow of immigration, and of a type that has made for us a serious racial problem, was first stimulated by the steamship companies. At one time oceans were barriers but the invention of Robert Fulton made of them international highways. The transportation of immigrants from Europe to America was a profitable business for the steamship companies the latter part of the nineteenth century. The immigration movement of the twentieth century was stimulated by industrial leaders of the North, who were in the market for an abundance of cheap labor. It may be true that without such cheap labor we could not have developed our great natural resources as rapidly as we did, nor have built up with equal rapidity some of the great American fortunes of the present day. But anyone with a spark of humor must smile as he hears the Northern capitalist prate about protecting the American laborer and the American standard of living from the competition of cheap foreign goods by means of higher protective tariffs, and then watches the same group as it brings in millions of "Hunks" and "Wops" to take the jobs of these same American workers at a lower pay and a lower standard of living. And in passing it might be noted that the argument of the same protectionists that high tariffs help American agriculture because of better domestic markets is just about as consistent.

In the whole world between the years 1800 and 1930 there have been a total of 62,000,000 immigrants, of which 90 percent have come to the Americas, mostly to the United States. Of those coming to the United States, approximately 33 percent, for one reason or another, have ultimately gone home. Our Nation did not commence keeping accurate records on immigration and emigration until 1820, but between that date and 1930 those records show that our net gain in population from immigration, excluding, of course, children born of foreign parents, has been 26,180,000.

In the first decade of the twentieth century the number of immigrants was 8,795,386; in the second, 5,735,811; and in the third, 4,107,209. In 1930 our population was divided as follows: White, including immigrants, 112,775,046; Negro, 11,891,193; mixed, 1,422,533; and the balance was made up of Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos, Hindus, and so forth. Of that total, the native born was only 95,497,800. It has been said:

> The history of the United States could largely be written around immigration, which has hastened the growth of population and greatly influenced its character, affected political and social conditions, and been a main cause for the rapid exploitation of natural resources, the impetuous industrial expansion, and the tremendous increase in national wealth.

Since 1820 the countries furnishing to us over 1,000,000 immigrants each follows:

Germany	6,873,103
Italy	4,546,877
Poland	3,342,198
Irish Free State	3,086,522
Russia	2,669,838
England	2,522,261
Canada—other	2,231,186
Sweden	1,562,703
Czechoslovakia	1,382,079
Canada—French	1,106,159
Norway	1,100,098

The first settlers in Virginia, of course, came from England, and most of the early settlers from some section of the British Isles. There was a Dutch settlement in New York; a French settlement of Huguenots in New York, South Carolina, Virginia, and Massachusetts; and Swedish settlements along the Delaware that later moved into what was once the northwest territory of Virginia. There was an influx of Jews from many nations to our larger cities, a large settlement of Irish in New York and Massachusetts, a settlement of Germans from the old Roman Palatinate—now a part of Bavaria—and from German Switzerland that settled in Pennsylvania and then migrated to the valley of Virginia, and last, but not least by any means, the movement of Scotch-Irish who settled this immediate section.

Many have recently seen the picture of Katherine Hepburn as Mary Queen of Scots, depicting the bitter conflict between her and Elizabeth. Mary's son succeeded Elizabeth in 1603 as James I. He was also James VI of Scotland, and the two kingdoms remained separate for another hundred years, during which period Englishmen looked upon the Scots as foreigners. However, the two kingdoms were united before the Scotch-Irish settled this valley, as that immigration occurred after Governor Spotswood had discovered the valley in the early part of the nineteenth century.

Those with Scotch or Scotch-Irish blood should be pardoned for believing that their ancestry was the most virile and aggressive of any that came to the new country. However, it must be recalled that Gibbon said that the Holy Roman Empire was neither holy, Roman, nor an empire. And anthropologists tell us that the Scotch-Irish were very little Scotch and still less Irish. They were a mixture of Celts, Irish, Britons, Norwegians, Scandinavians, Angles, and Saxons, and the blood of those various races had been comingled for more than a thousand years before it reached the veins of the Scotch-Irish that settled this section. Yet, those who take pride in Nordic blood and subscribe to the theory of biological superiority have the satisfaction of knowing that all of the races that united to produce what we know as the Scotch-Irish were Nordics, and it is undeniably true that the settlers we call Scotch-Irish produced a long list of remarkable men, especially in the fields of war, politics, and industry. In literature the two outstanding Scotch-Irish were Washington Irving and Edgar Allan Poe; but in other fields of activity we find, among others, Thomas Benton, James G. Blaine, John C. Calhoun, John G. Carlisle, Andrew Carnegie, George Rogers Clark, Jefferson Davis, Ulysses S. Grant, Horace Greeley, Alexander Hamilton, Mark Hanna, Samuel Houston, Andrew Jackson, Stonewall Jackson, John Paul Jones, George B. McClellan, William McKinley, Oliver Perry, John D. Rockefeller, Edward Rutledge, Winfield Scott, Zachary Taylor, Matthew Thornton, Anthony Wayne, Woodrow Wilson. The people of Rockbridge can well take pride in the production of a man like Samuel Houston.

One writer on racial problems gives this explanation of the remarkable achievements of the Scotch-Irish:

> At the time of the Revolution there were above 500 Scotch-Irish settlements scattered over practically all of the American colonies. They alone of all the people had one uniform religion; had experienced together the persecutions by state and church which had deprived them at home of their civil and religious liberties; and were the common heirs to those principles of freedom and democracy which had been developed in Scotland as nowhere else. They took the lead in developing that Western type which in politics and industry became ultimately the American type.

While in colonial times there were numerous different religious groups, the English belonging to the Church of England; the Pennsylvania settlers being Quakers; the New England settlers, Puritans; the Scotch-Irish, Presbyterians; the Irish, Catholics; the Germans, Lutherans or Moravians; the Dutch affiliating with the Dutch Reform Church; the Swedes with the Swedish-Lutheran; the Jews with the Jewish; and the Englishmen under Lord Baltimore and the Irish generally with the Catholic Church. We had no outstanding social problem growing out of religious differences and group actions based upon religious views until we received, during the twentieth century, the hordes of undesirable classes from southern Europe, mentioned above, all of whom were either Roman Catholics or of the Eastern Orthodox Church.

Both Washington and Jefferson had warned us against the undesirable effects of immigration of that type. Washington had said in a letter to John Adams in 1794:

> My opinion, with respect to immigration, is that except of useful mechanics and some particular descriptions of men or professions, there is no need of encouragement, while the policy or advantage of its taking place in a body (I mean the settling of them in a body) may be much questioned; for, by so doing, they retain the language, habits, and principles (good or bad) which they bring with them.

Jefferson, a few years later, wrote:

The present desire of America is to produce rapid population by as great an importation of foreigners as possible. But is this founded in good policy?

It is for the happiness of those united in society—to harmonize as much as possible in matters which they must of necessity transact together. Civil government being the sole object of forming societies, its administration must be conducted by common consent. Every species of government has its specific principles. Ours perhaps are more peculiar than those of any other in the universe. It is a composition of the freest part of the English Constitution, with others derived from natural right and natural reason. To these nothing can be more opposed than the maxims of absolute monarchies. Yet from such we are to expect the greatest number of immigrants. They will bring with them the principles of the government they leave, imbibed in their early youth; or, if able to throw them off, it will be in exchange for an unbounded licentiousness, passing, as is usual, from one extreme to another. It would be a miracle were they to stop precisely at the point of temperate liberty. These principles, with their language, they will transmit to their children. In proportion to their numbers, they will share with us the legislation. * * * Is it not safer to wait with patience 27 years and 3 months longer for the attainment of any degree of population desired or expected? May not our Government be more homogeneous, more peaceable, more durable?

In 1790, 77 percent of the new Nation was English, and the second largest group was the Scotch-Irish. It would have been fortunate for us had we followed the advice of Washington and Jefferson with respect to immigration, for in the period under immediate consideration, namely, 1900 to 1930, nearly 12,000,000 immigrants came to us from southern Europe, bringing the total since 1820 to the enormous figure of 13,944,454. During that time Austria-Hungary sent the most and Italy the next largest number; and we were expected to absorb and assimilate that horde of 14,000,000 southern European peasants, and including no few criminals, teach them our language, our customs, our institutions, and imbue them with a love for the principles of democracy. Protestant groups, as we have shown, were to assimilate this group of nearly 14,000,000, in which there was not one single Protestant. The bare mention of that situation is enough to indicate that a racial problem of necessity existed, when it came to the task of producing a unified and solidified nation and a national spirit in the United States.

It has been said that the direct factors in nationality are race, language, religion, the homeland, tradition, literature, and the will to live together. Italians from southern Italy were of the illiterate peasant class. They came from an area with a population density of 349 per square mile—greater than China or India. They were all Catholics. Prewar Austria-Hungary included nine different nationalities, and we got some of the dregs of each. A large percentage, however, were Slovak, mostly Catholic. Others of the Slavic race were Poles, Wends, Czechs, Slovenians, Croatians, Serbs, and Bulgarians. None of them ever had any independent political existence. Those from the east were Eastern Orthodox and from the west Roman Catholics. For the most part, they were peasants not long from serfdom. Fortunately for us, these immigrants did not come to the South but furnished cheap labor for the coal and iron industries.

Our third largest quota of undesirable immigrants came from Russia, a total of 3,341,991. Of those from Russia, many were Jews—Russia after the dismemberment of Poland having the largest Jewish population of any nation in the world. Now the United States has that distinction, as we have received Jews from nearly every country, until today of the 16,000,000 Jews in the world, nearly one-third of them are in the United States, and they constitute 3½ percent of our entire population.

However, those with anti-Semitic prejudices should not overlook the fact that there is good reason to believe that Columbus was a Spanish Jew, and that it was Jews, and not jewels, who financed his expedition to this country, the interesting romance about Isabella to the contrary notwithstanding. The first member of Columbus' crew to set foot on the new soil was a Jew by the name of Luis de Torres, founder of the famous Cuban family of that name. Then we had our Robert Morris, who financed Washington's army; and Juda P. Benjamin, Attorney General, Secretary of War, and Secretary of State of the Confederacy. In present-day times we have as descendants of Spanish Jews Bernard M. Baruch; Justice Benjamin N. Cardozo, of the Supreme Court; and the Guggenheim family of New York. Great Britain had her Disraeli, and Spain her Spinoza, to mention just a few who have attained great distinction.

The section of the country lying below the Mason and Dixon line, if we exclude the Negro problem, has less of a racial problem than any other section of the country. The highest ratio of foreigners in the South is 2.2 percent and the lowest is one-half of 1 percent, the latter being about the ratio of the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. What foreign element we have in Virginia is largely to be found in our big cities. Fortunately for us, the South offered few attractions to the peasant immigrant, as we had few large industries, no free land, few large cities, relatively low wages, and cheap labor competition in the form of the Negro. The racial problem of our Nation of the most serious consequences is in those sections in which the hordes from southern Europe settled—men who were illiterate, with no previous training in free citizenship, and quick to resort to violence and disorders. From their ranks were recruited socialists and anarchists, including one who assassinated President McKinley, and then there have been deliberate importations of foreign agitators, who have continued here their struggle against organized society that they had been carrying on at home.

These anti-American and subversive activities reached such a proportion that on March 20, 1934, the United States House of Representatives authorized the establishment of a congressional committee to investigate the subject and report to the Congress. A very full investigation was made and voluminous testimony taken, and the committee submitted its report to the Congress on February 15, 1935. We advise all who are interested in knowing whether or not we have a racial problem to read the hearings of that committee and its report. The report mentions with respect to Nazi activity and propaganda that—

Orders were issued in Germany and transmitted to the United States ordering certain lines of conduct in connection with this movement. * * * German steamship lines not only brought over propaganda but transported back and forth certain American citizens without cost for the purpose of having them write and speak favorably of the German Nation * * *.

The organization known as The Friends of New Germany, through a subsidiary organization, in July 1934, conducted so-called youth summer camps at different localities, at which camps nothing of American history or of American principles of government were taught, even to the children of American citizens of German extraction, to say nothing of the children of aliens.

On the contrary, the children were taught to recognize Chancellor Hitler as their leader, to salute him on all occasions, and to believe that the principles of government taught by him were superior to the principles of our Government.

With respect to fascism, the committee reported:

There have been isolated cases of activity by organizations which seemed to be guided by the Fascisti principle, which the committee investigated and found that they had made no progress.

With respect to communism, the committee reported:

The Communist Party of the United States is not a national political party concerned primarily and legitimately with conditions in this country. Neither does it operate on American principles for the maintenance and improvement of the form of government established by the organic law of the land.

The nature and extent of organized communist activity in the United States have been established by testimony and the objectives of such activities clearly defined. Both from documentary evidence submitted to the committee and from the frank admission of Communist leaders these objectives include:

1. The overthrow by force and violence of the republican form of government guaranteed by article IV, section 4, of the Federal Constitution.

2. The substitution of a soviet form of government based on class domination to be achieved by abolition of elected representatives both to the legislative and executive branches, as provided by article I, by the several sections of article II of the same Constitution, and by the fourteenth amendment.

3. The confiscation of private property by governmental decree, without the due process of law and compensation guaranteed by the fifth amendment.

4. Restriction of the rights of religious freedom, of speech, and of the press as guaranteed by the first amendment.

These specific purposes by Communist admission are to be achieved not by peaceful exercise of the ballot under constitutional right but by revolutionary upheavals, by fomenting class hatred, by incitement of class warfare, and by other illegal, as well as by legal, methods. The tactics and specific stages to be followed for the accomplishment of this end are set forth in circumstantial detail in the official program of the American Communist Party adopted at the convention held at Cleveland on April 2 to 8, 1934.

The manifesto and the resolutions incite to civil war by requiring one class "to take power" by direct revolutionary process and then assume dictatorship over the country in the manner followed by the Communists in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics which is frequently mentioned as a guiding example.

In pursuance of the revolutionary way to power, the program instructs members of the party to obtain a foothold in the Army and the Navy, and develop "revolutionary mass organizations in the decisive war industries and in the harbors." The trade unions should be undermined and utilized as recruiting grounds for revolutionary workers. How faithfully these particular injunctions have been executed was demonstrated by Navy officers appearing before the committee and by officials of the American Federation of Labor.

Racial, religious, and economic forces are frequently interlocked. The root of racial or religious persecution is frequently economic. When there is economic tension, discrimination usually begins with different minority groups. It is hard to find any community which has at one time or another not had its major and minority groups, with group actions induced by the interlocking forces of race, religion, and economics.

Economic strain always accentuates group differences and group prejudices, and hence the rapid development of our group problems during the past 5 years—the problem between capital and labor, between oriental and occidental, between Christian and Jew, between Catholic and Protestant. Dean Wicks, of Princeton, recently said that interdependence has arrived in the world before the preparation of brotherliness has made men anywhere near ready. And that is one explanation of the present armament race among the major nations of the world.

We find the Nazi under Hitler persecuting all Semetics, especially Jews, and boasting of the biological superiority of the Aryan race, especially the Nordics of northern Europe. As a matter of fact, the word Aryan is an adjective derived from a Sanskrit word meaning "one of noble birth." No one has ever known an original Aryan race or an Aryan language, and our conception of an Anglo-Saxon race is almost as vague. In reality, through countless years it has carried the blood of Celts, Angles, Saxons, Jutes, Vikings, and pre-Nordic stocks, tied together by cultural bonds. Anthropologists report that no racial group has functional unity and that social groupings and not race furnish the basis for functional unity. Race is a biological concept and cuts across all types of social groupings. It is culture, not race, that draws people together. It is culture, therefore, and not Scotch-Irish blood that makes the present unity of our community. The idea of democracy is necessarily a controlling idea in a culture where democracy is also a master idea.

Therefore, to have the best form of democracy, we must guard against the tendency to merely identify ourselves with a group—church, labor, political, sports, and so forth. For if we do not, we will get what Walter Lippmann calls "pictures in our heads", which makes us dogmatic about things we know little about, and especially about people who do not belong to our group. To classify a man as a Jew, Bolshevik, or hillbilly saves mental effort, but such "pictures in our heads" are never accurate. Our tendency is to put a man in a group and then ascribe to him all the objectionable qualities of that group. It may help us to win wars to ascribe brutality and inhumanity to our enemies but it does not help to win the battle of peace. In peace, they lead to group conflicts.

We must likewise guard against the tendency to regard the culture of our group as being superior to any other. Dr. Donald Young, of the University of Pennsylvania, says:

There is no truth in biological superiority that Egypt, Persia, Babylon, Rome, Spain, and other illustrious empires were tangled mixtures of races at the height of their glory. Their glory and hybrid qualities were consequences of the same conditions, conditions that put them at world cross roads with natural advantages, enabling them to grasp the opportunities offered. They went to seed when the cross roads moved with changed demand for natural resources, with improvement in communication, and with advances in the economic world.

It is not enough for us to have twentieth century weapons if we still cling to primitive minds and prejudices. Those weapons will but lead us to a war that will destroy civilization. And it is not enough for us to boast of the achievements of our Washingtons, Lees, Houstons, and other empire builders if group prejudices and assumed superiorities close our eyes to domestic problems that lie close at hand.

There are two domestic problems requiring our present consideration. One is the problem of unemployment. We should restrict the entry of foreigners, because our first duty is to our own unemployed. The second problem is the preservation of our democracy. Criminal aliens and aliens who seek to overthrow our form of government should be deported.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I think a great deal has been said, and perhaps the subject has been overstated, that we have not taken care of the situation in the past as we should have done. I think we have made a lot of mistakes with reference to the question of deportation, as well as the question of immigration; but if there have been mistakes made in permitting individuals to come to this country from foreign countries that fault is ours.

I am going to repeat something that has been mentioned several times this afternoon, namely, we have before us today a measure that has to do with the deportation of criminals, the first bill of its kind presented in the last 12 or 15 years. Let us not rush this bill. Let us go to work on it and construct a deportation bill that will be a credit to this Congress. If you do not like the bill as it is written, let us amend it but not kill it. Somebody said once upon a time "a fine thing to remember and a better thing to do is to work with the construction gang and not with the wrecking crew." In this particular case let us work with the construction gang.

We appreciate the fact that we have thousands of aliens on relief. A great many of these aliens who are on relief are there largely by reason of circumstances and conditions over which they had no control. We are told by those who are familiar with this question that, even under the bill as written and in view of the laxity that seems to have obtained in the past, the bill will result in the deportation of some 20,000 individuals who are in this country wrongfully. That alone should be worth working for if as a matter of right and justice such persons should be deported. If we would have a chance to consider some other measure during the present term of Congress, there might be a different situation; but, in my opinion, from present appearances, this is the only measure of its kind that may be reported by the committee. In any event, such action will not preclude this Congress from enacting additional legislation on the subject if it sees fit to do so.

You are legislators. It is within your power and it is your duty to make the best bill that you can out of this measure. A good deal has been said with reference to the question of labor. I believe like many others that we ought to protect the American labor market and keep it for the American people. But do you know we are not doing as well as we should? We are permitting too many imports to come into this country that are made by foreign labor, and in this respect we should begin to protect our own labor market. Just the other day the gentlewoman from Massachusetts stated that right now we are importing shoes and boots from Czechoslovakia that should be manufactured in this country.

Let us go to work on this bill. Let us, so far as we can, protect the American market for the American laborer. Let us treat these people as you would like to be treated yourselves. We are not talking about foreign-born people in this bill. We are not talking about foreigners generally.

We are talking now about the deportation of individuals who have violated the law and are here illegally. Therefore, let us make the best measure we can out of the bill before us and not kill it, even though we do not agree with it in its entirety.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I believe most of the Members of the delegation from New York feel likewise, at least, those on the Democratic side. We feel that half a loaf may be better than no loaf at all. The bill is faulty in some respects but is salutary in many other respects.

We are particularly eager to save from further hardship those members of families who might be subject to deportation if this bill were not passed. In the interest of common humanity we must indeed be moved to prevent the intense hardships, the harsh cruelties which would result from the separation of families resulting from deportation of a father or husband. However, I do not know why members of the committee limited the number of those who would thus be aided to 8,000. If you will read carefully section 2, you will observe on page 3 of the bill, subdivision (b), line 20, that 4 years are allotted for the exercise of limited discretion by the Department of Labor with reference to granting exemptions to these types of immigrants to prevent hardship and cruel separation of families. During the first year 3,500 would be aided, and during the 3 ensuing years 1,500 each year, making a total of 8,000 to be thus liberated, as it were, from the erstwhile hardships and intense cruelty which would result from deportation.

The gentleman who wrote the majority report very wisely incorporated in his report an extract from the report of the Wickersham Commission on law enforcement and observance, which reads as follows:

> In deportation cases, even when the judgment is just and necessary, the hardships are extreme both upon those deported and their families who are permitted to remain, and in the opinion of the Commission the limited discretion to permit in cases of exceptional hardships a relaxation of the rigid requirements of the present statutes would be consistent with the dignity of a great and human nation.

There are many more cases than 8,000. I do not know why the limit of 8,000 was placed in the bill, because, mind you, just as soon as you pass this bill—and I hope you will—there will be many families coming forward to claim exemption under the humanitarian provisions of section 2. I venture the assertion there will be many, many more than 8,000. Thousands of heads of families will come forward to claim exemption. If there are 8,001, you are going to save 8,000 but let the one be deported regardless of circumstances; or if there are 1,000 more than 8,000, why discriminate in that fashion and withhold this privilege from any one of these poor devils who came here, sometimes unwittingly, oftentimes to escape oppression, many of whom are refugees endeavoring to escape the pogroms of Russia and Rumania, the hideous cruelties of a Hitler, or the harsh treatment to which they may be subjected in Fascist Italy. It seems cruel, indeed, that the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization should stop abruptly at 8,000. It is difficult to comprehend, in the spirit of the statement I have just read from the report of the Wickersham Commission, how this is in conformity with the dignity of a great and humane nation. I implore the Members to extend the blessings of this bill to others than the mere 8,000.

Furthermore, these blessings cannot be extended to anyone who is technically guilty of moral turpitude. There are expressly exempted in line 4 on page 3 of the bill those guilty of the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917. Let us pause for just a brief spell on that score.

You will find mentioned, upon reading the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, on line 4, page 3 of the bill, that anyone who is guilty of a crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude would be mandatorily deportable. There are many cases where persons came to this country on faulty papers. They were inveigled innocently, or trapped without actual knowledge of the facts into payment of moneys to highbinders and self-seeking racketeers of a type that often infests Europe, and to sign illegal applications and accept bogus passports and immigration visas. Many of these poor devils, anxious to escape the terrorisms and cruelties and economic ostracism of dictators like Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin, easily fell into the trap. Their desire to escape these terrors outweighed their judgment. The acceptance and use of such documents places upon them the blot of moral turpitude. That, at least, is the interpretation of the act of February 5, 1917. Such persons, therefore, regardless of all other circumstances, could not come under the charitable provisions of the act even if they were here more than 10 years; and regardless of the fact that they may have a parent, a spouse, or a child in this country, they would be deportable mandatorily. Whereas, persons who came into this country with no papers, who simply entered this country without any formalities, would be far better off. Their entrance, although illegal, would not be deemed an involvement of moral turpitude. See how anomalous such a situation is! If there is any guilt, one is as guilty as the other!

Furthermore, if a person came in as a visitor, and outstayed his leave and remained here permanently, the latter would not be involved with the taint of moral turpitude, and such person could remain in this country under the exercise of the discretion of the Secretary of Labor. The provision, therefore, is unduly harsh to those persons who were tricked into the purchase of forged or illegal passports.

I serve warning that if section 2 is stricken out of the bill, I shall vote against it. The witch-burners and alien-baiters, of which, unfortunately, there are many in this House, will seek to eliminate section 2. They probably are the type who always turn up their noses at aliens. They forget that hundreds of thousands of aliens were part and parcel of the American Expeditionary Forces.

America was discovered by one who was endeavoring to find a new passage to the east. Columbus never realized that he had failed to reach the Orient. If he had known the truth, he would have died a dreadfully disappointed man. Nevertheless history rates him as one of the greatest men, because he committed this cardinal blunder. Under this mistake he and the explorers who followed him, however, opened up to the mass populations of Europe avenues of escape from oppression—economic, religious, and political—for many years to come. Many have been the brave souls who came here from Germany, England, France, Russia, Italy, all actuated by the same motives as our immigrants of today. All were determined to escape religious and political torture and to improve their economic and living conditions. To me it seems anomalous when the descendants of the first settlers "turn up their noses" at recently arrived immigrants. These proud and haughty ones, if they were to trace their ancestry back far enough, might find that, although some call themselves Colonial Dames or Daughters of the American Revolution, they may be descendants of those who came from European almshouses and jails. During Colonial times "assisted immigration" was the vogue, if not the accepted practice, in many European nations, which drained their poorhouses and prisons into the Colonies. Over 50,000 criminals were sent to the Thirteen Colonies by Great Britain alone. I often grow impatient when I hear aspersions cast by the descendants of such "indentured" immigrants—particularly upon the recent refugees who come fleeing religious and political persecution, who come here to escape the concentration camps of a Hitlerized Germany, the pillaging and plundering of Polish potentates, the political cruelties of the Italian Fascisti, and the pogroms of Rumania.

I would remind the Members always of the words at the base of our glorious monument, the Statue of Liberty, in New York Harbor, the words of Emma Lazarus:

> Give me your tired, your poor,
> Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
> The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
> Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed, to me;
> I lift my lamp beside the golden door.

[Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the House on the very fair manner in which this bill has been handled so far today. Those of you who have had experience in Congress know that the flag of action, and sometimes acrimony, is flung freely when we come to the consideration of any sort of an immigration bill. Today we have gone along very nicely. Heretofore we have generally sunk ourselves into a bitter controversy on the fact that each man has taken unto himself some individual case and has allowed that case to guide his course in the consideration of this great question.

Immigration is one of the really great national questions. There has not been a platform, Democratic or Republican, for 30 years that has not had a plank in it concerning immigration. The political parties have taken their positions because of the importance of this great question. Just before the World War there came into this country 1,285,000 aliens legally in 1 year, and no doubt that many more came in illegally. Even after the World War, in 1920 and 1921, there came into this country legally 900,000 aliens, nearly a million, and no doubt that many more came in illegally. Immigration was a great question then and it is now. We cannot afford to decide our course on just one individual case.

The gentleman from Alabama read some very outstanding nasty cases on the list of those cases which may be stayed. We all agree that all such cases should be deported. On the other hand, you, yourselves, know of some cases which, in your opinion, should be stayed. These individual cases should not sway us to a course that is inimical to the best interests of the country.

One thing we must remember is that an alien has no rights whatever in this country until he gets here, and then he only has those rights which we grant him. All he has is privileges. We give him the privilege of coming here, and we give him the privilege after he gets here of owning property and having the protection of all our laws, and we give him the privilege of obtaining the choicest of all American blessings, American citizenship. We have always shown due respect toward law-abiding aliens, and we ought to continue to do so, because the forefathers of most of us two or three generations ago were aliens. Certainly, we are a nation made up primarily of the children, the grandchildren, and the great grandchildren of aliens.

But we must not today as Congressmen surrender to the woman down in the Department of Labor or the man who may succeed her, or anybody else, our right to determine who should stay here. We ought to lay down a yardstick to guide that individual. [Applause.] We should lay down in exact language just who is entitled to consideration from being deported.

Now, we ought not to be misled by the statement that the American Federation of Labor thinks this way or that way about this measure. I speak after having consulted the representatives of the American Federation of Labor, and I am sure this group will be satisfied with what we do if we appreciate the fact they are primarily interested in giving a job to an American as against someone from some other country. This is their primary interest. They have been of most valuable assistance to me on the occasion of all the contests that I have made on this floor seeking to guard the gates.

The American coalition represents the American Legion and about 100 other organizations and they have come out absolutely against some provisions of this bill. They do not say that the bill should be defeated in its entirety, but they say that if certain provisions remain in the bill, then the entire bill should be defeated. We ought to be wise enough and we ought to be surgeons enough, like the distinguished surgeon from New York, who spoke a few moments ago, to cut out the cancer in this measure. Now, where is the cancer? I will show you. Take, for instance, the first four provisions of the Dies bill. They provide that certain people shall be mandatorily deported, but on page 3 of the bill you will see a little "3" in parenthesis, in line 8, where the bill provides that nobody will be excluded except those included in "(3)" of his bill, and that only applies to those who are deportable for unlawful use of narcotics. I appeal to you that the gunman, under one provision of his bill, or a man who has committed a felony, can, under this bill, come up before Miss Perkins for clemency. It is foolish for us to write in a bill that such-and-such a class should be mandatorily deported and then have a provision of that sort that nullifies the whole thing. It is just like Dr. SIROVICH said, any vicious alien criminal in this country ought not to be allowed to beg for amnesty, should not be put in position to claim it. He ought not to be allowed amnesty.

Now, let us go over to the last page, if you have any doubt as to who is the father of this bill. If you have any doubt as to whose hand is in the writing of this bill, to some extent at least, read section 9. Section 9 gives to Miss Perkins the right to save from deportation 100 people whom she may select. Why give her the right to save 100? Why not save 1,000, or why give her any right at all? Why should we do that? I say to you that this shows the result of too extravagant compromise in this bill. Gentlemen, if you pass this provision allowing her full discretion on thousands of aliens who are desperate, you will have to give an account of your action to the American people.

We should hold this privilege of exercising discretion down to a narrow, well-defined course. There are in this country many aliens who should be deported. There are many who are being deported every year, but there are some we cannot deport, because we have no legislation that will warrant it. Of all the people who should be deported, the first is the gunman. I have heard for years the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] speak about this class. The gentleman from Illinois and myself may not agree generally on these propositions. We have generally been on opposite sides, but I have heard him for years speak in committee about sending the gunman out of the country. Certainly this ought to be done, but we cannot send the gunman out now. Under the terms of section 1 of this bill we can send him out. Why then spoil it all by adopting another section under the terms of which he is not mandatorily deportable but he can ask amnesty or clemency from Miss Perkins? This provision should be stricken out of the bill and the last paragraph on the last page of the bill should go out also. She ought to be ashamed to come here and ask the Congress to grant her authority to allow anybody under such circumstances to remain in this country. We know how to legislate on immigration. We have been doing this for years, and I want to say to you that the history of the activities of Congress over the last 15 or 20 years in their handling of these important immigration matters is a history replete with a show of fine legislative acumen and fine legislative accomplishments.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Section 9, that the gentleman refers to, states that the Secretary of Labor is only to permit people to remain here whose presence in the United States will promote the cultural, educational, and industrial interests of the people of the United States. Are they gangsters or racketeers?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not yield further. I may say in reply to that statement that the same people that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] read the history of are on the list to be considered worthy to be kept in this country and to be granted amnesty. Do you think we ought to pay any attention to any bureaucratic organization that would recommend cases like the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] read about and say that they should come within this class that the gentleman refers to? They have held that this class of people come under the class of people needed in this country. I refuse to accept this appraisal as to who should be permitted to stay and as to who should be deported.

Certainly we ought not to grant such power to any department. It would open up the question to the greatest political activity we ever saw; but just as soon as we put our foot down on this proposition and say that we will not have any more of these individual bills, then you gentlemen who represent municipalities that have a large number of foreigners will not be bothered about introducing such bills for them. Let us lay down a formula. What should it be? Let us not be mealymouthed about it. What are you going to allow this amnesty for? Not because of this provision in the bill a man may have been a resident here 10 years. I repeat that any man who has been here 10 years who has not made any effort to become a citizen of the United States has nothing to recommend him as a candidate for amnesty or for citizenship.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I cannot yield now. He has nothing to recommend him unless he has what we all recognize—a family, a wife, or a child who is an American citizen.

Mr. LANZETTA rose.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot yield. The gentleman should not interrupt me.

Mr. LANZETTA. For the purpose of correcting the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio refuses to yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman has no right to interrupt me. I want to be fair, as fair as I can be. Getting back to my original proposition, what should we do? If you agree we ought not to give a man amnesty simply because he has been here a certain length of time, let us get down to the real reason why he should be granted amnesty. It is because he has a wife, and a wife who is an American citizen. It is because he has a child, born in the United States. It must be a child born on American soil. Any child, it makes no difference who its parents are, who is born on American soil has the right to American citizenship. Certainly we would not send such a child out of the country today. But if that child should be unfortunate in its parentage we cannot because of the child permit the parents to violate the law. When a family is so unfortunate as to have as its head a criminal our law-enforcing officers come and take him away from his family and incarcerate him in a State's prison at hard labor for life, and sometimes they take him to the electric chair. We pity the child but the majesty of the law must be upheld. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call the attention of the House and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] to the fact that section 2 begins with the word "except", and that word "except", as I interpret it, means that all of that section down to line 9, on page 3, are out of the purview of the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and aliens coming within those provisions must be deported.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MASON. And then the Secretary of Labor may permit to remain in the United States any alien if not subject to deportation, if the balance—and the discretion is in respect to the balance. The discretionary power is not in all of those following that word "except" down to line 9 on page 3.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely right. The things excepted, all down to line 8 on page 3, you will find in section 1 of this act. Why did not he say section 1? He says section 1, paragraph (3), and that is the only one excepted. The rest are included.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO].

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, about 8 years ago I asked to become a member of the Committee on Immigration. When one asks for something of that kind, he does it for a reason. My reason for asking to become a member of this committee was because of a request made to me by women who are mothers of children, in order to hold their husbands from being deported, or, not necessarily deported, from being compelled to go back to their native country and then being permitted to return. I thought the proper thing to do was to have a bill similar to this. You could not introduce a bill and say that any alien who is here illegally, who shall marry an American woman, may be permitted to stay, and you could not say that a man who has an American child should be permitted to stay. So it was necessary to put the discretion in the hands of someone. And I say to you on this side of the House that I was ready to permit the Republican administration to have that discretionary power. When some of you on this side criticize Miss Perkins, when some of you criticize Mr. Ickes, when some of you criticize Mr. Hopkins and other members of the administration, you might just as well come out altogether and say that you discredit the Roosevelt administration, because that is what you are doing. If you cannot trust an appointee of your President to use discretionary power in a bill of this kind, then I say it is your duty to impeach that member of the Cabinet or that official if you can, and dispense with their services.

They speak of some people who have been here for 10 years and yet have made no effort to become American citizens. That is true. They are unable to make application to become American citizens, because the minute they do they are subject to deportation. The gentleman from Kentucky says that the aliens come here and yet when war breaks out they all claim exemption. The records of the World War will show you that 90 percent of the aliens in this country at that time who answered questionnaires volunteered. I venture to say there were a million aliens in our Army who volunteered in the World War. They were willing to defend this country. Let me show you the peculiar thing about this immigration law. There is a gentleman in my district, a man in Maryland, who cannot be deported, due to the fact that he was here before 1924 and married an American girl. Yet he cannot obtain his citizenship papers. Nevertheless that gentleman is in the Navy and has served three terms. Here is a man who was here illegally, who cannot be naturalized, and who is in our own military force.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, the general provisions of this bill are admirable, but I would like to point out to the Members of the House the language on page 3, so that they will be under no misapprehension that in voting for this bill they are going to grant relief to numerous meritorious cases in which they are interested, because under the provisions of this bill they are specifically excluded. Section 2, subdivision (a), definitely excludes certain cases in connection with the violation of the immigration laws. On page 3 one of the exceptions is with reference to one of the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917. The Department of Labor informs me that any case which involves moral turpitude in connection with entry papers will be excluded from the provisions of this act. For instance, none of the cases in the omnibus bill which was before this House 2 weeks ago would be eligible under the provisions of this act. My attention was directed to it for the reason that in my own district I have a case of this kind. A woman born in Scotland came here under the quota number of her sister. She signed an affidavit that she was her sister. After coming here she married a naturalized American citizen. When he learned the circumstances surrounding her entry he voluntarily revealed the facts to the immigration authorities. She has three children born here, the oldest about 3 years of age. Under the provisions of this bill she would get no relief because of the mere fact that she signed an affidavit. The warrant for her deportation specifically sets forth that she has been guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude.

The Department of Labor informs me that none of these cases would be eligible for the discretionary authority given to the Secretary of Labor under the provisions of this bill. I think that is something which you, who are of the opinion that these cases in which you are personally interested would be covered by this bill, should know. It does not include them. It specifically excludes them. Those are the most meritorious cases. Many of them are here through the wrongdoing of American officials abroad, taking money from these poor people, persuading them to sign an affidavit, and allowing them to enter this country illegally. They will get no relief under this bill. I hope the Committee will see fit to incorporate amendments to take care of those cases in which there were affidavits and which the Department of Labor says constitute crimes involving moral turpitude. It places them in the same category as gunmen, murderers, and racketeers. I do not think it is just. I would like the Members of this House to know that the best cases are not included in the provisions of this bill. If the committee does not introduce an amendment, I intend to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] stated a few moments ago that for years, as a member of the Committee on Immigration, I advocated the deportation of alien gunmen. In that the gentleman is correct. He is also correct in the statement that we have not always agreed on this important question. For the 30 years I have urged not only the deportation of gunmen, but all alien criminals.

The majority of the provisions in our immigration law, if not all, which provide for deportation, are provisions that I have aided in drafting, in conjunction with originally the greatest restrictionist in the United States, the gentleman frrom Alabama, the late Honorable John L. Burnett, who for 4 years was chairman of the Committee on Immigration, and who, after years of study, experience, and knowledge obtained on the subject and problems of immigration, realized that in the first few years of his service he was misled by professional restrictionists who misstated the facts to him. I regret that notwithstanding the long service of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], he is still utilizing figures as to the thousands of immigrants in the United States who are here illegally and in violation of the law. The facts are that there is only a nominal number here in violation of the law. Those who are here have demonstrated that they have made good not only in time of peace but also in time of war. I have urged, and I have demanded the deportation of those who have not made good, because we do not desire, and we do not want them here.

On the other hand, there are some men who came in illegally who have been unable to become citizens, through no fault of their own, and many others who came in legally who have become charges, due to injuries which they have received in their employment and who were sent to our public hospitals for a few weeks and who have been reported as aliens receiving treatment in our hospitals, and thus regarded as public charges. Our laws provide that they must be deported. It is for those that I plead, for the innocent women and children who are guilty of no crime and no offense. I believe due consideration should be granted them.

I yield now to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. The main contention of our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] in his two addresses has been one thing only: Why does not the alien who is here illegally within the last 10 years go to secure his citizenship papers? Is it not a matter of fact that he would be immediately arrested for being here illegally and be deported?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is right. The gentleman from Ohio knows this just as well, but unfortunately he fails to state it on the floor.

Mr. Chairman, while this is a very drastic bill I feel that it should be passed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an alien who entered the United States either from a foreign territory or an insular possession, either before or after the passage of this act, shall be promptly deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889, 890; title 8, secs. 155, 156), as amended, regardless of when he entered, if he—

(1) Is hereafter convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a crime involving moral turpitude for which the alien is committed to an institution as result of such conviction; or

(2) Has been convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of the crime of possessing or carrying any firearm (even if the alien was not sentenced to imprisonment); or

(3) Has been convicted of violation of any narcotic law of any State, Territory, insular possession, or the District of Columbia; or

(4) Knowingly and for gain encouraged, induced, assisted, or aided anyone to enter the United States in violation of law, or on more than one occasion subsequent to the date of the enactment of this act knowingly encouraged, induced, assisted, or aided anyone to enter the United States in violation of law.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STARNES: On page 1, line 10, strike out all of lines 10 and 11, and on page 2 strike out lines 1 and 2 down to and including the word "conviction" and insert the following: "At any time after entry if convicted of an offense which may be punished by imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more, or of a crime involving moral turpitude, said deportation to be made by the Secretary of Labor forthwith at the time he is released from confinement, or is placed upon probation, or is pardoned."

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to restore the original subsection 1 of the bill offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] on March 12, H. R. 5573. That bill provided that at any time after entry the alien is convicted of an offense which may be punished by imprisonment for a year or more, or of a crime involving moral turpitude that he should be deported, whether imprisoned or not. Under the bill H. R. 6391, which we have before us today, we find the provision that the alien must hereafter be convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a crime involving moral turpitude for which the alien is committed to an institution as a result of such conviction; in other words, the present bill requires that the crime must have been committed after the enactment of this act, regardless of what that crime was. That is point number 1. Number 2: The crime must have been committed in the United States. It makes no difference as to the nature of a crime involving moral turpitude he committed abroad. Number 3: He must have been committed to a penal institution. These three propositions I think unsound and unwise. I think the original provision offered by my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] should be substituted for this subsection 1. Unfortunately, we have too many criminals of our own in this country to provide for and to take care of without having to take care of the criminals from other lands and from other sections. I do not subscribe to the view of certain gentlemen here that the United States of America should be the asylum of every alien criminal under the sun.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Why is it necessary to prohibit the deportation of those who are incarcerated at this time? In other words, the gentleman's amendment would not bring about the deportation of those.

Mr. STARNES. The gentleman fails to catch the distinction. The distinction I am trying to make is that the bill provides that he must be committed. It is often the case that a crime involving moral turpitude is committed, the accused person found guilty, and sentenced to more than a year and a day, but the judge suspends the sentence, and the person is not committed. In cases like that the individual could not be deported.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Do we understand from the gentleman's amendment that some young fellow who, when he was 16 years old, committed some petty crime, we will say, in Italy, England, or some other country, then came over here——

Mr. STARNES. It does not apply. I can save the gentleman all that anguish; it does not apply. It involves only individuals convicted of an offense the punishment for which exceeds more than a year or an offense involving moral turpitude, and after his entry into the United States.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Suppose a theft is committed, does that involve moral turpitude?

Mr. STARNES. That depends upon the gentleman's interpretation of the law. This says if the imprisonment is more than a year or if it involves moral turpitude.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The language on page 1, line 10, of the bill reads:

> Is hereafter convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a crime involving moral turpitude for which the alien is committed to an institution as a result of such conviction; or—

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is one of the most severe amendments that has been offered on the floor of this House within my memory. This means that any alien who has not been a citizen, who has stolen a loaf of bread, 10, 15, or even 20 years ago is mandatorily to be deported. That is the consensus of the opinion of the members of this committee. That is exactly what a great many want to do, but it is likewise exactly what a great many of us do not want to do.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is my understanding that the paragraph of the bill as written strengthens existing law.

Mr. SCHULTE. That is it exactly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman explain that, because I think the Committee would be very interested in that. Will the gentleman show how the recommendation of the committee contained in paragraph 1 strengthens present law and permits the deportation of alien criminals who cannot be reached now?

Mr. SCHULTE. That is it exactly. That is why we are fighting the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman state wherein this paragraph strengthens existing law?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes. I read before this language:

> Is hereafter convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a crime involving moral turpitude.

That does not now exist.

Mr. McCORMACK. Under the present law, as I understand it, there must be a sentence of at least a year and a day?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. This means anyone who is convicted of a crime within 5 years. Five years is the law now?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Anyone convicted of a crime within 5 years, and he must have been sentenced to a year and a day before he can be deported?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. But under this, if he was convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude he could be deported if he served 3 months, 6 months, 1 year, or 2 years?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, as I stated before, they can go back any number of years, regardless of the hardship it creates, and deport the alien.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does that mean if a man was convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude 30 years ago and served more than a year and a day, according to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, he could be deported?

Mr. SCHULTE. Absolutely. It is the most drastic and most severe amendment that has been offered on the floor of the House since I have been a member of the committee. I hope the Members of the House will stand by the committee and vote down the amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the 5 minutes available to me. I just want to say that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS] has placed his finger exactly upon the defect in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES]. The amendment as drawn says that any alien, any time after he has entered this country, who may first of all have been convicted of a crime for which the imprisonment is a year or more and who may have been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, may be deported. That means you can reach back 25 or 30 years and find a man who has purloined a loaf of bread from a grocery store, who has been sentenced for 30 days, and under the provisions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama deport him from the country.

Certainly it is not within the contemplation of any member of the committee that we want to go that far and reach back into the lives of our citizenry for some trifling offense, shall I say, but involving moral turpitude, and send him out of the country, when after that he may have been a splendid citizen and may have achieved a high station and high standing in the community in which he lives.

I hope the amendment is voted down because it has no place in this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. STARNES: Strike out subsection 1 in lines 10 and 11, page 1, and lines 1 and 2, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "(1) At any time within 10 years before deportation proceedings are instituted, is or has been convicted of an offense which may be punishable by imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more or a crime involving moral turpitude which may be punishable by imprisonment or."

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, two speeches have already been made in support of the substitute amendment I have offered. I think that the word "hereafter" should be stricken from the bill, and the substitute I have offered eliminates that word. It also adds that the crime must have been committed within 10 years previous to the institution of deportation proceedings.

Mr. STARNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES. It is not necessary under the gentleman's amendment that the individual shall be committed to an institution?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. No.

Mr. STARNES. The gentleman puts in there simply a statute of limitations of 10 years?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is right.

Mr. STARNES. I have no objection to that whatsoever.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama would manifestly be an injustice, as pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois, because some person who came here 40 or 50 years ago and before our immigration policy became so strict may have committed some offense immediately after his entry, and under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, of course, he would be subject to deportation. This would work a tremendous hardship. There is no question about the fact that throughout this country there is a strong sentiment in favor of relief for these hardship cases. I was reading a very strong editorial in one of the New York newspapers this morning right along this line.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will my distinguished friend from Tennessee yield for an observation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. It is very gracious on the part of my friend from Tennessee to refer to the attitude of the New York newspapers regarding the humanization of the immigration laws. Every paper in New York wants to see every alien gangster, racketeer, and criminal who has been convicted of a crime deported. Every great editor of our metropolitan press would like to see the enactment of legislation that will humanize the immigration laws and do justice to the alien immigrants who entered this country illegally but who have been loyal, faithful, conscientious, and honest workers in our midst. We should never deport an honest alien and leave behind his American wife and children born here. Such treatment disintegrates the American home. It might interest my friend, Mr. TAYLOR, to know also that a fortnight ago there appeared in the New York Enquirer an editorial written by William Griffin, its publisher, that commands the respect and applause of every lover of religious tolerance. That distinguished editor, who had been appointed by the President on a commission to investigate certain social and economic conditions that were prevalent in European countries, denounced Hitler, Goebbels, and Goering, the triumvirate that are destroying the peace and freedom of the liberty-loving German people. Mr. Griffin predicts that the time is not far distant when the Protestants and Catholics of Germany will rise as a Christian nation and crucify upon the mystic swastika these three renegades of German culture and civilization, and bury them in the sewage of time, as the only treatment that should be accorded to modern tyrants who have persecuted, pilloried, proscribed, and plundered thousands of men and women, all on account of the accident of religious birth.

If nominated, I commend this distinguished publisher as the one man upon whom the democracy of New York might unite, as the next Democratic candidate for the mayorship of New York City. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and, while I am not an expert on New York politics, I am willing to accept the judgment of the distinguished gentleman from New York, for whom I have the greatest admiration and affection, particularly for his judgment and reasoning. I sincerely trust that my associates on the Immigration Committee will join the gentleman from Alabama in the acceptance of this substitute amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does not exactly the same proposition apply that applied to the other amendment? In other words, if some poor fellow, because he was broke, stole a loaf of bread in Italy or somewhere in France, is convicted, comes over here and has lived an exemplary and decent life for years, nonetheless he may be deported just the same?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The time is confined to 10 years previous to deportation proceedings.

Mr. PHILLIPS. But he would still be sent back just the same?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Perhaps he ought to be sent back.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute amendment.

The amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, a member of the committee, is exactly the same, only there is a limitation of 10 years set. It is the same story over again. It means that if within 10 years a man has committed a crime he may be deported, although in the meantime he has married and has a family of four or five children. I appeal to you. If he has stolen a loaf of bread or entered a grocery store for something to eat for those kiddies, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee it is mandatory that he be deported.

A great many Members have informed us they are very much in sympathy with these hardship cases.

Then, I say, why not leave the bill as it is? It reads "hereafter convicted."

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CITRON. Would this include also the case of an alien Gold Star Mother whose son was killed in the war? In my State we have a number of alien Gold Star Mothers who are aged and who cannot read or write and therefore cannot become citizens.

Mr. SCHULTE. Absolutely. That Gold Star Mother is placed in the same category as all the rest of them. It is mandatory that she be deported.

Mr. Chairman, if we are going to be kind at all, if we are going to have a heart, after all, they are here. I am going to take the members of the committee at their word. They said they did not want to create any unnecessary hardship; that they wanted to be fair. This being so, as a member of the committee, I ask you to vote down the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the House has already expressed its opinion with reference to crimes such as will be covered in the section as now written, where it says "hereafter convicted", meaning no crimes except those hereafter committed. While neither the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] nor the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] suits me, I am going to go along with both of them. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee, and if he will accept it I believe it will satisfy the opposition, at least, as I interpret the statements of those to whom I have listened. It might work an unreasonable hardship if you were to go back on a man's record and dig up a crime he has committed in some other country. Therefore, why not limit it to crimes committed in the United States? If the gentleman would accept this amendment, I think it would probably answer every objection, at least, those I have heard.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will accept that amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the Members of the House that the language in this paragraph can be amended, I believe, in such a way as to meet most of the objections which have been raised, and still not do violence to the views of the committee? If this substitute amendment is voted down, I propose to offer an amendment reading as follows:

On page 2, line 1, strike out the word "crime" and insert in lieu thereof the word "felony." After the word "turpitude", strike out the balance of line 1 and all of line 2 down to the semicolon, so that the paragraph will read:

Is hereafter convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a felony involving moral turpitude.

I do not believe we should permit the language to remain as it is now written in the bill. The bill now provides that conviction of any crime involving moral turpitude subjects the person to deportation provided the alien is committed to an institution as the result of such conviction. This leaves too much latitude in the hands of some penny-ante judge or some police judge, for instance. Anyone might be confronted with a charge of committing any crime, whether it is a felony or a misdemeanor, in which moral turpitude is involved. The court might sentence such individual to pay a fine of $10 or spend 3 days in jail. If the individual charged with the offense should happen to have the $10 and paid the fine, and did not serve the 3 days in jail, he would not be subject to deportation. However, another individual might commit the same crime under the same circumstances right along with the other person and might be picked up by the police officer at the same time. He might be given the same sentence by the judge of $10 or 3 days in jail, and if he did not happen to have the $10 and therefore was forced to serve 3 days in jail, he would be subject to deportation.

This is a discrimination in the bill which I do not believe the committee wants. Therefore it seems to me we should limit this provision to felonies only, and then provide that a person who commits a felony involving moral turpitude shall be subject to deportation whether he has money enough to pay his fine or not. This will put them all on the same basis. You know and I know that many people are convicted of felonies and misdemeanors in which large fines are involved, as much as $1,000 fine, for instance, or 6 months in jail. People who have been making a lot of money out of their graft and who have money in their pocket can pay their $1,000 fines, but the poor individual who has not been doing that long enough, or for some other reason does not have the money, not being able to pay the fine, would be forced to take his 6 months' sentence in lieu of the payment of the $1,000 fine, and thus would be subject to deportation, whereas the individual who had the money to pay the fine would not. This, despite the fact that both committed the same offense, and, perhaps, one might even have involved a greater violation or greater moral turpitude than the other.

If the pending amendment is turned down, I propose to offer such an amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] desire to submit the amendment he discussed a moment ago?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I accepted the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman from Tennessee accepted my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No action has been taken except the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee. The Chair is now inquiring whether or not the gentleman from Ohio desires to offer his amendment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR]. The amendment is, after the word "offense" in the second line, insert "committed in the United States"; and, after the word "crime" in the third line, insert the words "committed in the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered to the substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio moves to amend the substitute amendment as follows: After the word "offense", in line 2 of the substitute amendment, insert "committed in the United States"; and, after the word "crime" in the third line of the substitute, insert "committed in the United States."

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, would there be any objection to the Clerk reading the entire substitute amendment as it is now proposed to be amended?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the substitute amendment as it would be amended if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio were adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. STARNES: Strike out subsection 1 in lines 10 and 11 on page 1, and lines 1 and 2 on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) At any time within 10 years before deportation proceedings are instituted is or has been convicted of an offense which may be punishable by imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more, or of a crime involving moral turpitude which may be punishable by imprisonment; or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. JENKINS, to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. TAYLOR.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 58, noes 76.

So the amendment to the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee)—ayes 62, noes 80.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DICKSTEIN and Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 69, noes 118.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is my recollection that the gentleman from Alabama accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, and my inquiry is whether or not that is a fact or whether the Chair submitted the matter to the Committee on the statement of the gentleman from Alabama that he accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that a statement by a Member offering an amendment that he accepts the amendment is not the action of the committee, and the amendment must be submitted for action by the committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts thoroughly agrees with the Chair, but my question was whether or not the Chair had submitted to the committee the question of the acceptance of the amendment, and, if so, of course, that would preclude the consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment now pending is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, while the gentleman from Alabama said he accepted the amendment, nevertheless it was not accepted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Committee failed to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McCORMACK. My inquiry is made so that we may understand the parliamentary status.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. STARNES: Page 2, line 1, after the article "a" strike out the word "crime" and insert in lieu thereof the word "felony", and after the word "turpitude", strike out the rest of line 1 and all of line 2, down to the semicolon.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment I referred to a moment ago. It strikes out the word "crime" and inserts in lieu thereof the word "felony", so that you cannot deport for a misdemeanor, but for a felony involving moral turpitude. The amendment strikes out the provision following the word "turpitude", which reads as follows: "for which the alien is committed to an institution as a result of such conviction." In other words, under the language now in the bill it all depends upon whether or not the man is able to pay his fine as to whether or not he may be deported. The amendment puts them all in the same category and raises the requirement from a misdemeanor to a felony and also strikes out the provision which would provide different treatment with respect to those who are given a jail sentence and those who are not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, looking at these questions, as I do, from a broad and liberal angle, I think my position in this respect is understood; nevertheless, I cannot agree with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, particularly insofar as the amendment strikes out the word "crime" and substitutes the word "felony."

All lawyers know that there are two types of crime—felonies and misdemeanors—and there are two divisions or two types of misdemeanors, one malum in se and the other malum prohibitum.

Malum in se describes the type of misdemeanor that involves intent, where in order to find the defendant guilty the Government must establish that the defendant intended to commit the crime—entertained an "intent." "Intent" is a necessary element in that type of cases, just the same as intent is a necessary element in a felony. The element in crimes involving moral turpitude centers around the question of whether or not "intent" is necessary in order to establish the fact that such a crime has been committed. The amendment of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] opens the door to a type of criminals guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude remaining in this country who should be deported.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I have not stricken out the words "involving moral turpitude."

Mr. McCORMACK. But the gentleman changes the word "crime" to "felony", and he confines the application of moral turpitude to crimes which are only felonies, when certain misdemeanors involve the element of moral turpitude.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. DIES. If this amendment is adopted, it will practically destroy the effectiveness of this division.

Mr. McCORMACK. To a great extent, that is my understanding. So far as the other aspect of the gentleman's amendment is concerned, I appreciate the logic of his argument, and I address myself only to such portion of his amendment as tends to strike out the word "crime" and substitute therefor the word "felony."

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. If a man were convicted of being drunk, which is a misdemeanor, he would be guilty of a deportable offense?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; that is malum prohibitum. The mere fact that the man is drunk constitutes the crime; the Government does not have to prove the intention to become drunk. Similarly, in traffic, if you go by a red light, the Government does not have to prove an "intent" to do so.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. Is it not true that in various States there is such a mixture of interpretation in the matter of moral turpitude that one cannot tell what this law means?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no. The law involving moral turpitude is pretty generally established.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman's State and New York will not agree on that, and the gentleman's State and North Carolina will not agree on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on the adoption of the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion is pending offered by the gentlman from New York, chairman of the committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend my motion. I ask that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman first said he moves that debate close in 10 minutes, and now he asks unanimous consent that it close in 15 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, then I move that debate close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to move to close debate. The gentleman now states he desires to move to close debate. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the motion apply to only this one subsection or does the motion of the gentleman from New York apply to the whole section?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from New York was plainly stated by the Chair, and the gentleman moves that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. That means the entire section. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 2, line 5, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, insert the word "illegally."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York for 3 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment to insert, in line 5, on page 2 of the bill, the word "illegally" before the word "possessing." This amendment should be adopted in all fairness and equity. The Constitution gives us the right to bear arms, and we must recognize that right. I do not want any alien to be deported if he has a firearm in his home, a hunting gun or a hunting rifle and does not use it illegally. Under this section the mere possession of it in his home would involve him in a deportation if he were an alien.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. How could he be convicted if it did not happen illegally?

Mr. CELLER. It might be that a man were deportable even if he were not convicted, under the reading of this section.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. CELLER. I respectfully disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is not the language in paragraph 2 so broad that a man might be convicted of violation of a village ordinance and still be subject to deportation, although he might be fined only $1?

Mr. CELLER. I quite agree with the gentleman, and I think the use of the word "illegally" would clarify the situation and make it eminently fair. Otherwise this statute will be interpreted in such a way as to create a distinct hardship.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Under the law of the State of Pennsylvania an alien is not allowed to possess a firearm of any sort, even though it be a hunting rifle. The mere possession of this rifle would make him liable to deportation if the law is as it is written in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment offered by the gentleman takes the very heart out of this bill. It takes away the very thing that we are trying to do, that is, take guns out of the hands of the gangsters. What right has any person to carry a gun? I doubt if there is a Member of Congress who has ever carried a gun in his life. Then why should we sanction anyone carrying a gun? For what purpose? If a man carries a gun, he has some ulterior motive in carrying it. The very reason we want this bill is to take the guns out of the hands of racketeers and gangsters and to deport them. With this law on the statute books, if he is in possession of a gun he knows it is mandatory that he be deported. That is what the Members of this Congress want. For that reason I ask you to vote down this amendment.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Can the gentleman conceive of any situation under which an individual could be convicted of the crime of carrying or possessing a firearm, except that the carrying or possession be illegal and in violation of some statute?

Mr. SCHULTE. That is the point exactly.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. I understand in the State of New York you may not have a gun even in your own home. That would apply to a farmer who is living out in the country. If a gun were found in his home and he were convicted, he could be deported under this act.

Mr. SCHULTE. That is right, if he is not a citizen.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. If in some community some village ordinance prohibited the possession of firearms and someone was arrested for having a rifle or shotgun and was brought into court and the justice of the peace said to this man, "This is not a very serious offense. You plead guilty and I will fine you a dollar and costs." He pleads guilty rather than have a lot of trouble, whereas, as a matter of fact, he is not guilty of any offense. Then he would not only be subject to deportation, but because he would be convicted he would be forced out of the country?

Mr. SCHULTE. But the gentleman must keep in mind that we are trying to take the guns away from the fellows who are committing crimes.

Mr. BOILEAU. But this might be a shotgun that this farmer used to shoot rabbits. Why not limit this to a violation of a State law, or something like that?

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I do hope the Committee will vote down this amendment offered by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: On page 2, line 15, after the word "law", add a new paragraph, to be known as subsection 5, and to read as follows:

"Knowingly advocates or promotes communism, fascism, or nazism, or the overthrow by force and violence of the constitutional and republican form of government in the United States of America."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time in 15 years we have had a deportation bill before the Congress of the United States. It seems to me that an amendment of this kind is distinctly in order. If these Communists, Fascists, or Nazis or alien radicals or alien conservatives do not like our country, our laws, and our ways of doing things, all they have to do is to go back home. But if they insist on remaining here and spreading their doctrine of hatred and poison against our free institutions and our republican form of government, it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to enact drastic deportation laws, to send these alien agitators home and give their jobs to loyal American citizens now walking the streets looking for employment.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BARRY. Under the proposed amendment any alien who agrees with the ideas of President Roosevelt might be deported by a good many Members of the gentleman's party. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman thinks that the Communists and the Socialists are for the President, he is right, they are; but I do not believe myself that the President is a Communist or that the Democratic Party is affiliated with the Communist Party, but is a beneficiary of it. I do say, however, that this particular amendment would send back to their native lands the alien Communists, Fascists, and Nazis who advocate the overthrow of our Government by force and violence, and would have the support of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Catholic Church, and probably the American Federation of Labor, and of all patriotic organiaztions in our country.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has advocated for years the deportation of anybody who dared to say anything, even though they did not do any more than talk. He has favored that before the Rules Committee and advocated it. I have always taken the position that I would permit anybody to stand even on the Capitol steps and say anything that they wanted until they committed an overt act [applause], call him Communist, Socialist, or what you please. There is no place in the world where they would suppress free speech to that extent, and this ought to be the last spot on the globe where free speech is suppressed even though it be uttered by a Communist or a Socialist.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: Page 2, line 15, after the word "law", add a new subsection, to be known as subsection 5 and to read as follows:

"Has been convicted of and sentenced to a penal institution for a violation of the Mann White Slave Act."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, the adoption of this amendment would leave no doubt as to what would happen to the most vicious type of criminal in the United States.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALTER. I have not the time.

Mr. SCHULTE. Is not this already in the law?

Mr. WALTER. No; this is not in the law.

Mr. Chairman, just recently a gang was broken up in New York whose operations extended throughout the length and breadth of the eastern part of the United States, one of the most vicious gangs ever engaged in any sort of racket. The reading of the accounts of the arrests and convictions of these people discloses only alien names. Whether others than aliens were involved I do not know; but I have been informed that in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, up and down the Lehigh Valley, agents of these gangs have been in operation for years, and that every man engaged in this nefarious work is a foreigner, an alien of some sort. If these people are convicted, it seems to me that the thing to do is to chase them away from our borders immediately, for certainly they are a type of individual that we do not want. All of us are interested, and it is our patriotic duty to drive from our shores alien criminals, particularly of the vicious sort my amendment is aimed at.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I call attention to the fact that violation of the Mann White Slave Act is itself moral turpitude, and we have already provided for moral turpitude in no uncertain manner. If there is one thing above others that involves moral turpitude, it is a violation of the Mann White Slave Act. Specific mention of this particular act will be useless legally, although it may invite blackmail and persecutions. I think that we are just cluttering up this bill and that the amendment, therefore, should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: Page 2, line 10, strike out the words "and for gain."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply proposes to strengthen the bill. As the Dies bill stands now no alien could be sent out for assisting someone else to come in in violation of the law unless he did it for gain and profit. I think we should take out those words "for gain", because nearly everybody who assists another to come in is a relative and, of course, does his work free; and if he be not a relative, he would never admit that he did it for gain. You could never convict anybody on that proposition. You could never get the proof. Why not strike out those words "for gain"? They never were in the law before. I think about the meanest man in the country would be the man who has already stolen his way into this country, who will not become an American citizen, and who spends his time trying to help somebody else steal his way in unlawfully. I think this language should go out. I hope it does.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, that is already in the bill and is covered twice by the phrases "knowingly" and "for gain"; so in striking out the words "for gain" the gentleman is striking out one of the very things we want left in. As this provision now stands it gives us two reasons.

I hope that the Committee votes down the amendment that the gentleman has offered.

Mr. DOWELL. May I suggest if we leave these words in, we will find when we come to trial we will not be able to prove the gain. You will be able to prove the other part, but in order to get a conviction you will be obliged to prove the gain, and it will be impossible to secure a conviction. It is a matter of legal procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio) there were—ayes 80, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 2, line 3, strike out all of paragraph (2) and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) He has been convicted of a violation of the law of any State, Territory, insular possession, the District of Columbia, or the United States, prohibiting the possession of certain types or kinds of firearms, or the carrying of concealed weapons; or."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MASSINGALE: Page 2, line 10, after the word "for", insert the word "financial."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 2, after line 15, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(6) Who has visited Soviet Russia to secure training in communistic doctrine."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan: Page 2, line 5, after the words "crime of", insert "feloniously."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Except an alien deportable under the act of October 16, 1918, entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchist and similar classes", as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (40 Stat. 1012; 41 Stat. 1008; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 137), or the act of May 26, 1922, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes', approved February 9, 1909, as amended" (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 21, sec. 175), or the act of February 18, 1931, entitled "An act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics" (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156a), or the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States" (39 Stat. 874; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156), relating to criminals, prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons, or section 1 (3) of this act, the Secretary of Labor may permit to remain in the United States any alien found subject to deportation if he—

(1) Has lived continuously in the United States for a period of not less than 10 years; or

(2) Has lived continuously in the United States for at least 1 year and has living in the United States a parent, spouse, legally recognized child (or, if the deportable alien is a minor, and not otherwise falling within either paragraph (1) or (2) of this subdivision, he has a brother or sister) who has been lawfully admitted for permanent residence or is a citizen of the United States.

(b) Not more than 3,500 aliens shall be permitted to remain pursuant to subdivision (a) of this section during the first year following its enactment and not more than 1,500 for each succeeding year: Provided, That no alien shall be permitted to remain in the United States under subdivision (a) of this section after the elapse of 4 years from the enactment of this act. Not later than the 1st day of February for each year following the date of the enactment of this act, the Secretary of Labor shall submit to the Congress a report giving the name of each alien permitted to remain in the United States pursuant to this section in the preceding calendar year, together with a brief statement of the facts in the case.

(c) Any alien not ineligible to citizenship as to whom there is no record of admission for permanent residence who has been permitted to remain in the United States in accordance with subdivision (a) of this section shall be recorded as admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the order permitting him to remain upon payment of a fee of $18 to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, which fee shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Page 2, line 16, strike out all of section 2.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have had a bill pending before the Immigration Committee for something like 2 years which has for its purpose purely the deportation of criminal aliens. That is a subject in which I believe we are all very much interested. We are all, theoretically at least, in favor of the deportation of criminal aliens who are continually stirring up trouble in this country. If you will adopt the amendment I have just offered, which strikes out section 2, you will have then stripped this bill down to a bill which has for its purpose the deportation of criminal aliens and it will remove the controversial feature which, if it remains in the bill, will ultimately result in its defeat. So that you will not get a bill through this Congress which has purely for its purpose the deportation of criminal aliens.

Last year I offered an amendment to a bill which was being considered by the House which amendment had for its purpose the deportation of criminal aliens, but the chairman of the Committee on Immigration made a point of order against the amendment. As I said before, we all, theoretically at least, favor the deportation of criminal aliens.

Mr. Chairman, section 2 is the section that has caused all the controversy about immigration legislation in this House for 3 or 4 years. We all know there are a number of aliens in this country who are subject to deportation, and we all know that the immigration authorities, in defiance of the law, have failed to carry out the mandate of the Congress that those people be deported. The purpose of this section is to permit a certain amount of power and permit a greater amount of discretion to be lodged in the immigration authorities so that these people who have come here unlawfully and have remained here unlawfully may profit by their wrong and continue to stay in the country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would the gentleman take an alien who is here illegally or unlawfully, who has married an American citizen, and there are two or three children involved, and deport him?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. May I say to the gentleman I am more interested in the people who were born in this country and the people who are citizens of this country than I am in the others. This sob stuff with reference to hardship cases involving a few people who came here unlawfully and illegally, mostly through fraud, does not appeal to me.

I would rather be hard-hearted once or twice.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I agree with the gentleman in regard to the criminals.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am answering the gentleman's question, and will not yield further.

I would rather be hard-hearted with a few of these people and accomplish the great good we would accomplish for the great masses of the people of this country by getting rid of the people who are here unlawfully and who have no business here. If you will adopt this amendment, you will have reduced this bill to the one proposition, the deportation of the criminal aliens. I challenge any Member of this House to say he does not favor it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does the gentleman think the deportation of a few thousand aliens would help the great masses of the American people, 130,000,000 people?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; I think it would be a great help, because you cannot pick up a newspaper today without finding where all this agitation is going on and where all this crime is going on, without finding some of these aliens hooked up with it. The people of this country are getting tired of it. I would like these people put out of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as I explained this morning in detail, this section in no sense increases immigration. The only effect of it is to give preference to the alien who is here and subject to deportation, and who has family ties, as against some alien who, for the first time is seeking admittance under the existing quota. There is now a quota of 153,000 from the quota countries. All the countries in the Western Hemisphere are on a nonquota basis. Therefore, it comes down to the simple proposition that if there is an alien in this country who is subject to deportation, not for the commission of a crime but because he stayed longer than his permit entitled him to stay, or for some other similar reason, you permit him to remain in the United States instead of someone else coming in.

Let me read you an explanation of the kind of cases these are. Mr. Shaughnessy, who has been in the Immigration Service for 20 years and is under civil service, and certainly cannot be accused of being partisan, at my request wrote me this letter, from which I quote:

> I find from an examination of a group of approximately 2,000 cases which have been studied that about 92 percent of the aliens involved are persons subject to deportation because they entered without inspection under the immigration laws—

Mind you, prior to 1924 entering the country illegally was no crime.

> or because they failed to depart from the United States after having legally been admitted for a temporary period. About 55 percent of these aliens—> would leave behind them citizen spouses in the United States, and about 30 percent would leave legally admitted alien spouses behind them.

The ones they are about to deport—

Something was said about insane people. Let me give you an illustration in the city of Washington. A woman came as a little girl to the United States. She lived here the greater part of her life, then went back to the old country to see her parents. She returned and was committed to an institution for insanity. Under existing law she is subject to deportation because she became a public charge within 5 years after her second entry.

A number of cases have been shown to me by Mr. Shaughnessy, and I am convinced they have merit. They are not cases of criminals, they are cases of people who deserve clemency and consideration. You are not helping the cause of restriction by creating the unfavorable public sentiment in this country which will result when you put 2,500 people aboard a ship, leaving their children and wives behind, when you know that in place of these 2,500 you will have 2,500 more come for the first time into this country. If we really want to promote the cause of immigration, it seems to me it is our responsibility to recognize this great human problem and meet it.

We took out of the Kerr-Coolidge bill provision after provision regarding unlimited discretion, the right to have nontemporary admittance changed to permanent status, as in the case of a student, and so forth. Under the Coolidge bill any such person could be given a visa. There were many other provisions. We have cut these provisions out one after another, and finally have got down to the present bill. [Applause.]

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have arrived at the real crux of this bill and the crux of the situation. The House has consistently during the past refused to delegate an unlimited amount of power or discretion to the head of a department where a permanent policy of the Government was involved. You are now about to make a departure from this safe, sane, and salutary policy which you have pursued through these years, and you are about to embark upon a delegation of power to a department head which would enable her to set aside the mandatory provisions of the law and set at naught policies of the Congress.

Mark you this, you are not only taking care of 8,000 aliens who have violated our immigration laws in this bill, but, as surely as God reigns in heaven, eventually you will take care of the 200,000 that Colonel MacCormack estimated would eventually be cared for. On the floor of the House this afternoon some Members have spoken well and have spoken the truth when they said many others would come forward for this clemency once this law was enacted. You are going to see that happen. Instead of this being a deportation measure, I am telling you again upon my responsibility, you are permitting to stay in this country lawbreakers far in excess of the number these four deportation provisions will take out. Just as surely as you and I live, that is going to happen. It is your responsibility. I say it is a departure from a constitutional democracy; it is a departure from sound governmental principles. You can walk that way if you desire, for that is your prerogative, and I will not criticize you. However, I for one intend to vote against this bill because of the unwarranted delegation of power to a departmental head where an established policy of this Government is concerned. For my part I intend to walk humbly and as upright as I can in the path of constitutional democracy. Any other course violates the dictates of my conscience.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, in one sense this is the heart of this bill. I cannot agree with the argument made by my distinguished friend from Alabama that this is an unwarranted delegation of power. This bill provides standards. The first Congress of the United States of necessity had to delegate power to some extent, and the proper delegation of power is consistent with the entire history of our country. The delegation of power in this section is a necessary and a proper one. Of necessity from a practical angle, to meet the problems of the day, we have to delegate power. Every legislative body must do this, and this delegation of power carries with it specific standards prescribing the manner in which the power so delegated may be exercised by the Secretary of Labor.

These persons are law-abiding citizens. Every one of our forebears at one time was an immigrant to this country. We want the law-abiding person who is numbered among this unfortunate class to remain here. We want to keep in mind that this does not in any way increase the quota of any of the countries of the birth of any persons who may benefit. Every one of these hardship cases permitted to remain in this country is charged up to the future quota of the country of his or her birth.

This is a humane piece of legislation. In my opinion, it should be passed. I hope that the academic argument of our distinguished friend from Alabama will not be accepted, and permitted to produce the effect of striking out this meritorious and humane provision. I urge, as I hope, the defeat of the pending amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRADLEY: On page 3, line 7, after the word "criminals", insert: "unless the crime involving moral turpitude prior to entry relates solely to the fraudulent securing of a visa or passport."

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall repeat something that I said in the earlier part of the debate because I see there are a great many Members here who were not present at that time.

In the language on page 3 of this bill there are a great many cases involved in which the Members of this House have an interest that are not covered, but are specifically excluded from the provisions of this measure. Under the regulations and the law enforcement as conducted by the Department of Labor anyone who fraudulently signed an affidavit in connection with a visa or passport is guilty of the crime of perjury and of a crime involving moral turpitude. They are placed in the same class as gunmen, racketeers, dope peddlers, and the like. In the omnibus bill which was before the House 2 weeks ago, and which contained very meritorious cases, the people whom we sought to aid and give relief to by that bill would not be covered by the provisions of this measure. My amendment seeks to take care of such cases. A great many of them, through connivance of American officials who took money from them or accepted bribes, involve the signing of affidavits and thereby they are classed as guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude. I think we ought to differentiate between these people and gunmen and racketeers and peddlers of narcotics and those who have perpetrated vicious crimes.

I would ask you to bear in mind that these are cases in which a great many of you are personally interested, and if you are of the opinion that the general provisions of this bill will apply to them, you are laboring under a misapprehension. To take care of these cases it will be necessary to pass an amendment such as I have offered, and I therefore ask you to vote for the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the amendment of the gentleman were adopted, would it not be an invitation to aliens to come to this country in a fraudulent manner?

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not think so, because the bill provides that the Secretary of Labor has authority within the next 4 years to act in connection with those cases that are already here, and therefore it does not apply to those who may attempt to come in later.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania condones crime and goes entirely too far.

Mr. DIES. And does it not violate the very principle we are trying to establish, not to permit criminal aliens who are guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude to remain here?

Mr. SCHULTE. That is the point exactly, and I do hope the Committee votes down the amendment, because, as I say, it goes entirely too far.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this House 2 weeks ago passed half a dozen bills for the relief of aliens who entered this country through fraudulent passports.

Mr. SCHULTE. We can take up those specially, as we have done in the past. I hope the Committee votes down the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in support of the amendment. I call attention of the Committee to the fact that if an examination is made of the so-called 8,000 cases referred to this afternoon, it will be found very likely that more than half of them are those very cases that will be covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY]. We have a distinguished official of the Department of Labor in the gallery today, Mr. Edward J. Shaughnessy, for years Deputy Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and now Acting Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. I know of no more conscientious or distinguished official in the Department of Labor than Edward J. Shaughnessy. All who have come in contact with him will always remember his courtesy and cooperation. I am pleased to state that I have always had for him the highest regard and esteem. He can readily testify to the vast number of bogus passport cases. I am quite sure that he, too, feels that the bill under consideration will be valueless without this amendment; that unless you adopt this amendment these 8,000 cases would be in a very bad way. There are many of these individuals who desired to come to this country to escape prosecution and the rigors and hardships that were attendant upon their stay in Europe who were inveigled, enticed into fraudulent arrangements even with American officials, to whom they paid money to get either visas or passports. They are not criminals in the ordinary sense, they are victims of circumstances. We do not condone crime, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] has said, by passing this amendment. We differentiate between those who are hardened criminals and those who had the misfortune to be entrapped into these arrangements before coming here. You may as well strike out section 2 in its entirety unless you accompany it with this amendment.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. KRAMER. The gentleman is a member of the bar, and he is aware of the fact that the crime of perjury is as great as the crime of robbery.

Mr. CELLER. But this is not perjury. These victims are not guilty of perjury in any sense of the word in actuality. Pro forma they may be guilty of perjury, but not in essence. They never intended to commit perjury. They wanted to come over here; and these criminals, even American representatives in the Consular Bureau, enticed and inveigled them into the payment of money to get these bogus passports.

Mr. HALLECK. Does the gentleman understand that this amendment would apply to aliens or residents of foreign lands who hereafter by fraudulent action obtain entry to this country?

Mr. CELLER. No. You have before you your 4-year provision here, and that answers the gentleman's inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, since I stuck out my neck here in the House on these hardship cases about 3 years ago as 1 of 90 Members who voted on a roll call for a bill for their relief and am going to stick it out again, I want to say why and give you a hardship case which is no doubt typical of hundreds of other cases in this country. A native of the Republic of Mexico brought his family to my district in the State of Colorado, with several children. His wife died. He took the youngest of these children, a little girl about 2 years of age, back to old Mexico. This was shortly prior to the passage of the immigration law of 1924. He kept her there just long enough to overstay the 1924 act under which she could not return to the United States without a visa. He then took the child to El Paso and sent her back to the town where the rest of his children were still living, in my district in Colorado. So it will be seen that she reentered without a visa.

At that time she was not more than 4 or 5 years old. About 3 years ago when this young girl was a pupil in high school in a fine American town in my district, after she had gotten to be 15 years of age, she was seized by the immigration authorities and ordered deported from the United States, and at the very time the bill to relieve these hardship cases came up here 3 years ago, I had been down, under the demands of the leading citizens of that town, the school superintendent, the mayor, the editors of the papers, the leading businessmen, almost on my knees in the Immigration Bureau begging for this little girl's life, for that is what it amounted to. I think I did something that some other Members did not do. I have understood that some other Members of this body who were in a similar situation voted against the bill when it came up in the House. I did not do that. I voted for it. I could not find it in my conscience to be begging down there for the life of this young girl at this time when they wanted to send her to old Mexico after her father had become blind and a pauper, at a time when it would have been better to take her out and shoot her, and then vote against the bill.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. There has been no finer interpretation of these hardship cases than has been manifested by the Acting Commissioner General of Immigration, Mr. Shaughnessy, and I am sure if the gentleman had called this case to his attention he could have found a way to help him.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes, they have let her stay, awaiting the action of Congress, and they have been accused of violating the law for keeping this and similar cases in the country, and there are hundreds of others in the same category. If there has been any failure on the part of the immigration authorities to deport such cases I have information that much of the humanitarian leniency shown was due to the insistence of Members of both bodies here on the hill, who, when the show-down came, left the Bureau of Immigration holding the sack by voting against the very discretion they were asking it to exercise in individual cases.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard it stated by those better versed than I in the immigration laws, that they are a hodge-podge beyond the understanding of the Bureau of Immigration itself, but it does not take a very deep knowledge of the subject to understand this bill. It is a very simple measure. It is practically all to be found in sections 1 and 2 of the bill. Section 1 deals with deportations and section 2 with the hardship cases.

Section 1 provides that an alien shall be promptly deported, regardless of when he entered the United States, under the following conditions: (1) If he is hereafter convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings of a crime involving moral turpitude, for which he is committed to a penal institution; (2) or has been convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of the crime of possessing or carrying any firearms; (3) or has been convicted of violation of any narcotic law, State or local; (4) or has knowingly and for gain aided in any manner in the illegal entry of another alien into the United States.

Section 5 states that these provisions are in addition to the provisions of existing law, so there is no weakening or liberalizing of the existing immigration laws, but a real tightening up of the laws. It is said that these provisions will enable the deportation of 23,000 criminal aliens who are now in this country. The objection to this section is that it does not go far enough, but in view of the fact that there is no law for the deportation of these criminal classes, and that the defeat of the bill would still leave this large class of alien criminals at large in the country, to be handled in some way by future legislation, it strikes me that the bill is a desirable step forward and should not be defeated simply because it does not do more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me come to section 2 of the bill, the hardship cases. This section provides that an alien who has entered the United States illegally (a) and has lived here continuously for not less than 10 years; (b) or not less than 1 year and has a parent, spouse, or legally recognized child; (c) or is a minor and has a brother or sister who is lawfully in the United States, may be permitted by the Secretary of Labor to remain in the United States of America, provided the alien is not an anarchist, and so forth, and has not violated the narcotic laws and other laws involving moral turpitude. The total number of these persons which the Secretary of Labor may permit to remain in the country is 8,000, spread out over a period of 4 years, the power terminating at the end of 4 years from the enactment of the bill.

Not all of the 8,000 may be permitted to remain, but that is the limit which may be permitted, and everyone who is permitted to remain will be charged up to the quota of the country of their origin and reduce by that amount the number of new aliens who may come into the country under the quota, and in that way cancel off the hardship cases insofar as any additional immigration is concerned.

I make this brief analysis of the hardship section by reason of the very loose language indulged in by some of the Members who are opposing the legislation. One Member this afternoon, after stating that the Secretary of Labor will have the right to deport up to 3,500 persons the first year and 1,500 each succeeding year thereafter, without mentioning the time limit of 3 additional years fixed in the bill, then asked if we knew how many people had been coming into this country under the quotas in the last 6 years. He answered his own question by stating that it was 16,000 a year, and then he wanted to know if we were going to give this woman—Mme. Perkins—authority to pass upon whether nearly one-third of that number shall be deported. He meant, of course, giving new authority to not deport them. I am not able to figure out how 1,500 comes to one-third of 16,000 in addition to which the 1,500 refers to people already in. The only thing about that statement which impressed me was the small annual number now coming into the United States under the quota system. The figure to which I am referring, 16,000, is not very far wrong. The total coming into the United States in 1936 from all countries under the quota system, was 18,675. The startling thing about the immigration figures for the past few years is not simply the almost negligible number coming in, when compared with the total volume of our population, but the fact that the exodus has exceeded the influx and that during the past 5 years far more aliens have left the United States than have entered it. For the information and convenience of Members, I shall insert the figures for the 5-year period, 1932 to 1936, inclusive, embracing all classes of aliens, not half of which are quota aliens.

Year	Aliens entering	Aliens leaving
1932	35,576	103,295
1933	23,068	80,481
1934	29,470	39,771
1935	34,556	38,834
1936	36,329	35,817
Total	158,699	298,198

Total leaving	298,198
Total entering	158,699
Alien deficit	139,499

Only last year, 1936, did the number entering exceed the number leaving and then by only 500. For the 5-year period the total leaving exceeded the total entering by 139,499. There ought to be some assurance in these figures for those who fear the effects of foreign immigration, and that the immigration laws demand greatly increased restrictions. Unquestionably in years past they were far too lax. The disquieting thing revealed by the ebb tide of aliens is that so many of them came to this great country because of its superior advantages and have found it in their way to go whence they came.

Under the quota system, about 150,000 aliens may enter this country annually. The number who have been availing themselves of the privilege in recent years ranges from 10 to 20 percent of the quota. Here is a problem for our consideration very much larger than 8,000 hardship cases. No such thing ever happened before to America.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the able gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] on this bill. No Member of the House has been more active than he in promoting legislation to restrict immigration and to prevent the entrance of undesirable alien classes and get rid of those that are here. I feel that he has accomplished a result in this bill which entitles it to the support of reasonable-minded men, while at the same time vesting a needed discretion in the Department of Labor, a discretion which must be lodged somewhere, to take care of the hardship cases, which has been hanging over both the Department and the Congress the past 5 or 6 years.

Now, there is an opportunity presented to this Congress to relieve those cases, and God knows they need relief. I do not see how any Member of Congress who has ever had any knowledge of these hardship cases or any connection with them could find it in his heart and conscience to vote against this bill. I cannot. I am not looking to the attitude of any organization for or against this bill. I am only interested in doing my duty under my conscience. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PHILLIPS) there were—ayes 67 and noes 57.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is there not another amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment which the Clerk is now about to report.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the Chair state the parliamentary situation with reference to my amendment to strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is still pending and will be disposed of, of course.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the Chair to state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is still pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The amendment which I have sent to the desk is not a perfecting amendment. I will offer it as a substitute amendment if it does not involve the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio cannot offer a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, which is to strike out the section.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Virginia) there were ayes 44 and noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2 (a). Except an alien deportable under the act of October 16, 1918, entitled 'An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchist and similar classes', as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (40 Stat. 1012; 41 Stat. 1008; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 137), or the act of May 26, 1922, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes", approved February 9, 1909, as amended' (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 21, sec. 175), or the act of February 18, 1931, entitled 'An act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics' (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156a), or the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States' (39 Stat. 874; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156), relating to criminals, prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons, or an alien who is insane or psycopathically inferior, or an alien deportable by virtue of the terms of section 1 hereof, or an alien ineligible to citizenship, the Secretary of Labor may permit to remain in the United States any alien found subject to deportation if he has lived continuously in the United States for at least 5 years and has living in the United States a spouse or child who is a citizen of the United States."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, section 2 of this bill gives to Mme. Perkins the right to grant amnesty to certain people. Now, the people to whom she cannot grant amnesty are set forth in the Dies bill and are included in this amendment. This amendment of mine adds to the list just those who are already prohibited by statute, and deportable. That is all it does in that respect. But here is the crux of the amendment. It provides that Mme. Perkins can grant amnesty only to one class of people. For instance, to those who have lived in this country 5 years and have a wife or husband or child, a citizen of the United States, and who has not committed any of these heinous offenses enumerated in the paragraph of exceptions. In section 1 of this bill you voted four new classes to be deportable, and you said they are mandatorily deportable, but if you pass this bill as it is, three of those classes will be subject to amnesty by Mme. Perkins. You are undoing what you did a while ago, and you are opening up the doors. Are we going to allow Mme. Perkins to control four or five thousand of these people when we can lay down a formula in plain English that is consonant with the spirit of Americanism, consonant with the spirit of the people who sent you here who believe in restrictive immigration?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has expired.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KENNEY: Page 4, line 9, strike out subsection (b) of section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 3, line 24, after "Provided", strike out balance of line 24, all of line 25, and the words "section after the elapse", in line 1, page 4, and insert "the authority granted the Secretary of Labor under subdivision (a) of this section shall cease after the lapse."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That Secretary of Labor may specifically designate persons holding supervisory positions in the Immigration and Naturalization Service to issue warrants for the arrest of aliens believed to be subject to deportation under this or any other statute: Provided, That no person shall act under a warrant issued by himself.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to point out to the Members a few considerations in regard to what we have heard this afternoon about perjury, forged passports, and moral turpitude. Consider your own situation if you were in this country as an alien escaping prosecution abroad; suppose that your mother, your brother, your sister, or some other relative were subject to persecution abroad, subject possibly to imprisonment, subject possibly to danger to life; suppose further you had tried in every lawful way to get that parent or that relative into this country but had failed, would you not then do everything you could to get that relative in here illegally? If you did, you would be guilty of a crime which some of the Members, possibly not considering the matter in its fullest aspect, have dubbed moral turpitude.

It is moral turpitude, but in a sense it is not; so I ask the Members to give their thought to this aspect of the problem before us.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. The provisions of this act are in addition to and, except where previous laws are expressly amended, not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws (including section 19 of the Immigration Act of Feb. 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 155)), and shall be enforced as a part of such laws.

SEC. 6. Clause (B) of paragraph (1) subsection (a) of section 6 of the Immigration Act of 1924 (43 Stat. 155), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 206 (a)), which grants to quota immigrants, skilled in agriculture, their wives, and their dependent children under the age of 18 years a preference within the quota, is repealed.

SEC. 7. Section 1, subdivision (a), clause (1), of the act entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes", approved March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512), as amended, is hereby amended to read: "Entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924."

SEC. 8. (a) At the end of each fiscal year the Secretary of Labor shall report to the Secretary of State the number and (as determined in accordance with section 12 of the Immigration Act of 1924 (43 Stat. 160; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 212)), the nationality of all aliens who—

(1) Were allowed to remain in the United States under section 2 or were registered under section 7; and

(2) Entered the United States on or after June 3, 1921, and were not charged to any quota at the time of their last entry.

(b) The Secretary of State shall deduct the number of aliens so reported from the appropriate quotas (determined in accordance with the provisions of section 11 of the Immigration Act of 1924 (43 Stat. 159; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 211)), for the next succeeding fiscal year, or for later fiscal years if necessary to account for the whole number of aliens so reported.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I make this motion in order to answer some inquiries that have been made as to how much longer the consideration of this bill will take. I may say that we on this side of the aisle do not have any more amendments. I may say, however, to those who yet are restrictionists, that they will have a chance to vote and by that vote to indicate whether they really are restrictionists when I offer my motion to recommit. I hope that a goodly number may repair to the standard of restriction of immigration and that there will be enough vote for that motion, so that we may have a real deportation bill such as the country demands, and not a bill that will meet the approval of those who have always stood on the floor of this House seeking to lay down the bars.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. During the year following the enactment of this act, the Secretary of Labor may permit to remain in the United States any alien who has heretofore been temporarily admitted, if the alien is found by the Secretary of Labor to be a person whose presence in the United States will promote the cultural, educational, and industrial interests of the people of the United States. The number of aliens so permitted to remain in the United States shall not exceed 100, and the date of the alien's admission for permanent residence shall be as of the date of the order of the Secretary of Labor permitting him to remain.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 9.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman from New York for that purpose. The gentleman from Iowa was on his feet seeking to offer an amendment.

The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 9.

Mr. Chairman, I have made this motion for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the purpose of this section.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I can answer the gentleman's inquiry, but I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] can answer it better. It appears that there are about 100 Catholic nuns in the hospitals of Texas.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. I can explain the amendment to the gentleman, for I offered it in the first place. There are about 100 student nuns engaged in charitable work, women who give their entire time to charitable purposes without a dollar's pay. Under existing immigration laws when their permit for temporary stay in the United States expires they must be sent back to Ireland. They cannot come back to this country until they can get in under the quota. These people are not taking a paid job away from anyone.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UMSTEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill

(H. R. 6391) to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 229, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment agreed to in committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FISH) there were—ayes 163, noes 46.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, the mere fact that the division does not show that a quorum is present does not mean a quorum may not be present. A quorum may be present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair intended to count. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-three Members are present, a quorum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. (a) Except an alien deportable under the act of October 16, 1918, entitled 'An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchist and similar classes', as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (40 Stat. 1012; 41 Stat. 1008; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 137), or the act of May 26, 1922, entitled 'An act to amend the act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes", approved February 9, 1909, as amended' (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., title 21, sec. 175), or the act of February 18, 1931, entitled 'An act to provide for the deportation of aliens convicted and sentenced for violation of any law regulating traffic in narcotics' (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156a), or the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States' (39 Stat. 874; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 156), relating to criminals, prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons, or an alien who is insane or psycopathically inferior, or an alien deportable by virtue of the terms of section 1 hereof, or an alien ineligible to citizenship, the Secretary of Labor may permit to remain in the United States any alien found subject to deportation if he has lived continuously in the United States for at least 5 years and has living in the United States a spouse or child who is a citizen of the United States."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands a division. All those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is not in order while the House is dividing.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has discretion to conclude the count on a division before entertaining another request.

Mr. MAPES. I never knew the Chair to make such a ruling before.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now makes it.

Mr. MAPES. As a lawyer said in addressing the court, "If Your Honor says so, that is the law."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 176.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state to the gentleman from Michigan that he meant no disrespect to the gentleman, and the Chair feels the gentleman was not deprived of any parliamentary privilege.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 6391, that I consider the most ill-advised and ill-considered bill that has passed during this session of the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

(Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. MAVERICK asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania, until June 15, on account of important business.

To Mr. ZIMMERMAN, for 1 week, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. PEARSON, for 2 days, on account of important business in his district.

To Mr. MOSIER of Ohio, for 4 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PLUMLEY, for 2 weeks, on account of official business.

To Mr. RICHARDS, for 3 days, on account of illness in family.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the disposition of the legislative program in order for that day, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

(Mr. PATRICK and Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the following gentlemen, I ask unanimous consent that they may have leave of absence for 4 days on account of official business: Mr. MAAS, Mr. HEALEY, Mr. MOTT, Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts, Mr. HIGGINS, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. BATES, Mr. FORAND, Mr. OLIVER, and Mr. MAGNUSON.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I had permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Monday next, but have turned that time over to another Member who needed it more than I did.

I now ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 15 minutes on Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, following consideration of the legislative program of that day.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman include in his request also the special orders of the day?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And following the special orders heretofore made, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many hours have we now set aside for special orders after the completion of the regular business on Tuesday?

Mr. MICHENER. Does the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] mean that he is to speak before we adjourn?

Mr. RAYBURN. Many of the gentlemen who have permission to address the House at 5:30 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon do not claim their time.

Mr. SNELL. I think we ought to have an understanding about that.

Mr. RAYBURN. On Tuesday there will probably be the conference report on the C. C. C., and following that there will be the nonmilitary War Department appropriation bill. I rather think these matters are going to take the day.

Mr. SNELL. I may suggest to the majority leader we ought to have an understanding that when we have an hour or 2 hours after the completion of the regular business of the day nothing new will be brought up, including unanimous-consent requests. If Members want to talk to the Members who may be here, all right, but the rest of us would not be obliged to stay.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman that when the legislative program for today is over—and it is always over before these speeches begin—there will be no further legislation considered on that day.

Mr. SNELL. What about unanimous-consent requests for consideration of private bills or matters of that sort? Does the gentleman consider the entire work of the day to be over except for such speeches?

Mr. RAYBURN. I consider the entire legislative program of the day is over when such speeches begin.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I want to have a definite understanding about.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire an answer to his parliamentary inquiry with respect to the time already granted for special orders?

Mr. SNELL. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state that prior orders have already been made for 1 hour of time after the completion of the legislative program on Tuesday.

Mr. SNELL. I am not going to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there will be no one here at that hour. Why cannot the gentlemen take 5 minutes if they want to get their remarks in the RECORD, and extend their remarks, and not punish the Speaker and the rest of the Members who may have to stay here?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not going to punish the Members of the House after 5 o'clock, but if there is a break in the legislative program, I shall take the time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to burden the empty seats here after the business of the day is over by delivering a speech. I do not do it that way. I have spoken only a few times since coming into this House. I have never spoken yet unless I have given a great deal of care and attention to the preparation of the speech I intended to give. I am not going to do otherwise at the present time.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that in the RECORD of June 8, instead of standing here and talking to the empty benches, I inserted an address which I think is worthy of attention. This is an address on income-tax dodging, which I delivered in this House on the 16th day of July 1932, in which I set out completely exactly the same things the Secretary of the Treasury communicated to the President, as stated in the President's message the other day.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 236

Resolved, That LEON SACKS, of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Patents.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 237

Resolved, That A. J. ELLIOTT, of the State of California, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committees of the House of Representatives on the Public Lands and Public Buildings and Grounds.

The resolution was agreed to.

OCCUPATIONAL EXCISE TAX ON MARIHUANA

Mr. DOUGHTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6906) to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and notwithstanding the fact that my friend, REED, is in favor of it, is this a matter we should bring up at this late hour of the afternoon? I do not know anything about the bill. It may be all right and it may be that everyone is for it, but as a general principle, I am against bringing up any important legislation, and I suppose this is important, since it comes from the Ways and Means Committee, at this late hour of the day.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that we have a unanimous report from the committee on this bill and there is no objection, and while we would like to get it passed, if there is any objection, I shall not insist, of course.

Mr. SNELL. This is an illustration of the situation I was talking to the majority leader about a few moments ago. If we hold a session until late in the day and somebody brings up a piece of legislation, the average Member knows nothing about it, and while it is probably all right, it is hardly fair to take it up at that time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I may say that the gentleman from North Carolina has stated to me that this bill has a unanimous report from the committee and that there is no controversy about it.

Mr. SNELL. What is the bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. It has something to do with something that is called marihuana. I believe it is a narcotic of some kind.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Marihuana is the same as hashish.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object but I think it is wrong to consider legislation of this character at this time of night.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 329. An act to further extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead and desert-land entrymen;

S. 790. An act to continue in effect until June 30, 1939, the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935; and

S. J. Res. 155. Joint resolution to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 545. An act for the relief of Dean Scott;

H. R. 1013. An act for the relief of Irvin Pendleton;

H. R. 1084. An act for the relief of Samuel Cripps;

H. R. 2042. An act for the relief of Joshua L. Bach;

H. R. 2223. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Johnson and Joy Johnson, a minor;

H. R. 3031. An act to provide for the establishment of Coast Guard stations along the Maine coast;

H. R. 3411. An act to amend section 112 of the Judicial Code to provide for the inclusion of Whitman County, Wash., in the northern division of the eastern district of Washington;

H. R. 3738. An act for the relief of Clifford Y. Long;

H. R. 4457. An act for the relief of Naomi Lee Young;

H. R. 4508. An act for the relief of Margaret Grace and Alice Shriner;

H. R. 4893. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a Coast Guard station at the San Francisco Airport; to provide for quick rescue facilities on the San Francisco Bay; to strengthen the Immigration and Customs Service patrol; and for other purposes;

H. R. 6438. An act to expedite the dispatch of vessels from certain ports of call; and

H. J. Res. 350. Joint resolution authorizing a modification in the existing project for the improvement of the Illinois Waterway, Ill., and the abandonment of a portion of the Calumet River.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, June 11, 1937, at 11 o'clock a. m.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GARRETT: A bill (H. R. 7467) to authorize the erection of a Veterans' Administration hospital in the State of Texas; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 7468) to provide for the punishment of persons stealing animals moving in interstate commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCHULTE: A bill (H. R. 7469) to authorize collection of information concerning amount of prison-made goods produced in State and Federal prisons, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. FISH: A bill (H. R. 7470) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Society of the Cincinnati, a corporation of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 7471) authorizing the acquisition of timberlands within the boundary of the former Siletz Indian Reservation for the use and benefit of the Indians of western Oregon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

2604. Also, petition of Mollie Emerson and various other citizens of Madison County, Ala., urging the enactment of the old-age pension bill as embodied in House bill 2257, introduced by Representative WILL ROGERS, of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 11, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

When thy father and thy mother forsake thee, then the Lord will take thee up. We praise Thee, Heavenly Father, for this immortal care, which has its cradle in the heart of Almighty God; it gives strength to the weak and encouragement to the erring. Impress us that to know the duty of the hour is wisdom and to discharge our obligation to our country is a great virtue. Help us to give forth today a message of faith and good cheer, and grant us, O Lord, the courage to labor as we understand. We kneel at the altar of our souls and pray. Search us, O God, and know our hearts; try us and know our thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in us and lead us in the way everlasting. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested.

S. 1984. An act for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. BUCK and Mr. COCHRAN were each granted unanimous consent to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes to discuss the steel strike.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN EXCISE TAXES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 375, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 375.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 375, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That title IV, as amended, and parts I, II, III, and IV of title V, as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932 are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1939." Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "1937" whenever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1939."

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous-consent agreement the time for general debate is limited to 4 hours and 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, the pending resolution provides for the extension of certain excise and miscellaneous taxes for a period of 2 years as recommended in the President's message of January 6, 1937, in which he said:

> I recommend that the Congress take steps by suitable legislation to extend the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes which under existing law will expire this June or July, and also to maintain the current rates of those taxes which would otherwise be reduced next June. I consider that the revenue from such taxes or its equivalent is necessary for the financing of the Budget for 1938.

Those are the words of the President with respect to these taxes. The President also recommended that the 3-cent postage rates for first-class mail matter other than local delivery be continued. Unless these miscellaneous taxes are extended the Treasury will stand to lose $650,000,000 annually. I am unable to understand how anyone could consistently and reasonably contend at this time that, under existing requirements of the Government and appropriations made by Congress, we could spare the loss of that much revenue. If we do not extend these taxes, it will be necessary for us to raise a similar amount of revenue in some other manner. No one seriously contends that this can reasonably be done at this time. In the minority report, the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means refer to this resolution as constituting a breach of faith; that the taxes were originally proposed in 1932, with the definite promise to the American people that they would be allowed to expire at the end of 2 years as provided in the statute.

I should like to know by whom that definite promise was made and who had the right or authority to make any such definite promise. It will be recalled that these taxes were imposed first under the previous administration—the Hoover administration—in 1932, upon his insistence or request, and how could anyone then bind another administration, even of the same party, or how could that Congress bind a succeeding Congress? I should like my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], when he comes to address the Committee, explain why the minority makes any such statement that this administration has not kept faith. He says it is the third time that this administration has done so, when it was not a party to any such agreement, and it was not even in power at that time.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Did the chairman of the committee and the committee consider that we have $800,000,000 of sterile gold that is absolutely not used at this time in connection with this matter, for the purpose of determining the necessity of levying these taxes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is the first time I ever heard anything of that kind mentioned by anybody in connection with this matter.

Mr. PATMAN. Eight hundred million dollars.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Has the gentleman ever brought that to the attention of the committee or addressed any communication to me of that kind? I never heard of it before.

Mr. PATMAN. The Treasury statement shows it each day. That gold is laid aside—is not now used at all.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The Committee could not consider a matter of that kind when it was not brought to our attention. It is the first time that the gentleman from Texas even has brought it to the attention of the committee, so far as I recall.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Of course, it is safely and properly assumed that the President of the United States has full knowledge and information on the gold situation, and yet in his message to Congress he very definitely and specifically requests the extension of excise taxes covered in this resolution.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is undoubtedly true. The minority views further state that these taxes have been twice continued by the present administration in violation of that pledge, one for a 1-year period, and again for a 2-year period, and further states:

Moreover, by continuing the taxes for 2 years, the Democrats possibly may have in mind bringing in a resolution next year to repeal the nuisance taxes just before the election and thus reap the political advantage which would thereby result.

Now, here is the interesting part of that minority report. I quote:

This, however, could not be sincerely done, in view of the acute financial condition of the Treasury.

They say they could not be sincerely repealed were they on the statute books 1 year from now. If they could not be sincerely repealed 1 year from now, how can you sincerely refuse to extend them now? I want my friend TREADWAY to explain that. [Laughter.]

The minority report also states that—

The so-called nuisance taxes are all consumption taxes, which fall most heavily on the poor and those least able to pay.

Since when, please, did the minority party become so interested about consumption taxes and taxes that fall so heavily on the poor and those least able to pay? That seems to be a new position they are taking. We all remember the position they took in opposition to the enactment of the income tax, the estate tax, and the excess-profits tax, and other taxes based on that principle.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; not at this time. If the gentleman wants to contradict my statement, I will yield, but I do not want to yield for a stump speech. I understand the gentleman is going to make a stump speech and has 40 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I should like to try to get some information.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Unless the gentleman wants to dispute my statement, I do not yield.

Now, what is the history with respect to the taxes this resolution seeks to extend? Facts are always interesting and uncontrovertible. We can give opinions, but I want to give you the facts about how they originated and how they were enacted.

President Hoover, that almost forgotten man—at least one whom some of our Republican friends would like to forget—stated in his message of December 7, 1931, as follows—and I crave the attention of our minority friends as well as the majority. These are the words of President Hoover before these taxes were imposed, when he was asking for additional revenue:

We are now face to face with a situation where for a time the current revenues of the Government under our existing laws have fallen below the amounts required to meet the absolutely necessary expenses of the Government. As already stated, the deficit for the fiscal year 1931 is $902,000,000—and the estimate deficit for 1932, $2,123,000,000.

That was under the prosperous administration of President Hoover—

Now, can my good friend, the minority leader, hear that? Is that loud enough for him to hear? [Laughter.] I want to be certain the gentleman hears that.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I yield. I just wanted to be certain the gentleman heard what I said.

Mr. SNELL. I want to ask you a question about what you have been talking about. Does the gentleman approve of the statement of President Hoover?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Do I approve his statement? I do not approve or disapprove. I suppose he said what was the fact, only he did not make it half big enough.

Mr. SNELL. I just wanted to know if the gentleman approved the statement of President Hoover. That is the first time any Democrat ever approved anything he said.

Mr. DOUGHTON. When he says two and two makes four, I believe it until he says tomorrow that two and two makes six. Then I do not believe it. [Laughter.]

He said further:

The estimated deficit for 1932 will be $2,123,000,000; for 1933, $1,417,000,000, or a total—

This is his exact language:

Or a total estimated deficit for the 3 years of $4,442,000,000, which, after deducting statutory debt redemptions and increased cash in the Treasury, shows for these fiscal years a total probable net increase in the national debt of $3,247,000,000.

Under a Republican administration. Could that be so? He said it would be $3,247,000,000 net increase, but, unfortunately, subsequently it turned out to be a great deal more than that.

I quote further from President Hoover:

I recommend that Congress provide for an increase in taxation for a definite limited period, and upon the general plan of taxation which existed under the Revenue Act of 1924. The Secretary of the Treasury has prepared recommendations along these lines which he will present at the proper time. This plan, it is estimated, will raise $920,000,000 next year.

In other words, the extension of these taxes will be about $650,000,000, including the postage, while he requested special taxes estimated to raise $920,000,000. So the situation then must have been more desperate than it is now, according to that statement of President Hoover.

Since our Republican friends are talking about balancing the Budget, let us examine the record while they were in power and see just how successful they were in making estimates and in balancing the Budget—mark this, and remember that this was during the time when the so-called greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton was the Secretary of the Treasury and when Mr. Ogden Mills, a very able man, as we all know, was Under Secretary of the Treasury. Now, listen to this: Instead of having a deficit of $2,123,000,000 in 1932, the actual deficit in 1932 was—now, listen, I want you to understand me—the actual deficit in 1932 was $3,153,097,507. That was for 1 year. And instead of a deficit of $1,417,000,000 in 1933, as was predicted by Mr. Hoover, the actual deficit was $3,068,268,000. So they have some record so far as deficits and increases in taxation is concerned; in other words, instead of an estimated total deficit for the years 1932 and 1933 of $3,540,000,000, they had a total deficit of $7,123,081,266 for these years; and the total increase in the national debt was $6,263,000,000. That is the record.

It comes with poor grace to attempt to deceive the American people by such cheap political byplay. Let us now examine the recommendation of Secretary Mellon which he estimated would yield $920,000,000, and see how the consumer, especially the poor for whom the present minority report has such great concern and to whom it gives such great consideration—let us see how they fared then—especially the poor and those least able to pay. I quote Secretary Mellon, who recommended the following:

An increase of one-sixth in the present rates on tobacco manufacture and its products except cigars.

The tax already was 6 cents a package on cigarettes and he recommended an increase to 7 cents per package through his extreme consideration for the poor; in other words, they wanted the consumer to pay 7 cents instead of 6 cents tax on every package of cigarettes, notwithstanding the fact they were receiving at that time over $400,000,000 revenue from tobacco, and this year will amount to approximately $560,000,000. In this connection it might be well to call attention to the fact that the tobacco consumers of this country will pay more taxes on cigarettes alone than will be collected from all of these so-called nuisance taxes that this resolution seeks to extend.

Secretary Mellon also recommended reducing the exemption on admissions. Let us see the consideration he had for the poor. He recommended the exemption of admissions up to 10 cents. In other words, he would tax all admission tickets of 10 cents and above. That was the consideration and the compassion that Secretary Mellon had for the poor.

He recommended an excise tax on automobiles and radios, a stamp tax on transfers of real estate, checks, drafts, telephones and telephone messages, and also an increase in the income-tax rates; and in the matter of income-tax rates, as one would surmise, the heaviest increase fell on the small-income taxpayers. Yes; he recommended an increase on the small-income taxpayers. That was more consideration of the poor and those least able to pay.

During the hearings Secretary Mills was subjected—notice this—during the hearings Secretary Mills was subjected to a lengthy cross-examination by the Republican membership of the committee, and he was taken to task and severely criticized because he had not recommended a tax on gasoline, furs, and cosmetics—taken to task by the members of his own party because he did not recommend a tax on gasoline, cosmetics, furs, and things of that kind. If you read these hearings you will find that most of these taxes which our Republican friends now say constitute consumption taxes that fall on the poor were first suggested and recommended by them. They first suggested the taxes they now complain of as being burdensome to the poor. There is no question about that. Maybe the minority leader [Mr. SNELL] does not hear that either.

The minority report charges that this resolution contains elements of politics because it provides for an extension of 2 years instead of only 1, yet in the next breath they say that a 1-year extension would require another extension resolution next year, and that the needs of the Treasury would prevent the repeal of these taxes in the next Congress. That is what I referred to a moment ago.

We were not charged with playing politics back in 1932; oh, no. We were not playing politics in 1932 when a Democratic-controlled Ways and Means Committee sought to meet the needs of the Treasury and pass a tax bill estimated to yield $1,200,000,000—at the request of and to help out a Republican administration and to try to balance the Budget and preserve the credit of the Nation. That was done at the earnest request of President Hoover and Secretary Mellon. The Democratic House patriotically responded to the request of a Republican President and a Republican Secretary of the Treasury in order to preserve the credit of the Government in a great crisis, in a great economic catastrophe, which had its inception under a Republican administration.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has given us a very careful explanation of the activities of Secretary Mellon under a Republican administration.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, I have not given half of it yet.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell us something about the bill that is being presented here today for the consideration of the House?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course I will, but I shall not please the gentleman when I do that.

Mr. SNELL. That is what we should like to hear about.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman will hear plenty more before I get through, and what you will hear will not please you.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not at this time. If the gentleman will secure some time for me from that side I will.

Of course the recommendation of President Hoover and Secretary Mellon for enacting these taxes for a definite period contained no element of politics, no more so than the effort made during the last campaign to mislead the people to believe that the present administration was responsible for there being a tax on cigarettes, when as a matter of fact such a tax has been levied since it was first enacted back in 1893.

If our Republican friends are against consumption taxes why have they not sought to repeal or reduce the tax on cigarettes which yields more than all of the so-called nuisance taxes covered by this resolution, and keep faith and carry out the promise Governor Landon sought to convey during the past campaign. They at least owe this to their loyal supporters in Maine and Vermont. Neither have I heard my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] advocate the repeal or reduction of the consumption tariff taxes levied for the benefit of special interests, rather than for meeting the needs of the Treasury, and in addition, I think my friend from Massachusetts should be the last person on earth to charge anyone with playing politics or to criticize the extension of these taxes on the ground that they are consumption taxes after he promised his constituents last fall that, I quote:

> In view of the announcement of Dr. Townsend that he will support Governor Landon for President in those States where Congressman LEMKE is not a candidate, I am glad to confirm my support of the principle of old-age pensions as urged by the proponents of the Townsend plan and the McGroarty bill.

The fulfillment of that promise meant imposing a consumption tax on bread, meat, clothing, farm implements, medicine, schoolbooks, furniture, Bibles, and everything under the sun. Now he is talking about these taxes being consumption taxes on the poor. Oh, what monumental statesmanship; yes, mountain-top statesmanship.

If the membership of this House, especially on the majority side, desires to follow the leadership of the ranking Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. TREADWAY] rather than the President of the United States, who has to deal with all these problems, then you have that choice today. It is within your choice to follow the gentleman from Massachusetts.

It is not a pleasant duty to levy taxes, and any taxes levied are objectionable or contain some objectionable features. Your committee recognizes this fact and is as anxious to bring about the repeal of these taxes as any Member of this House.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. Along the line of meeting expenses, is it not true that the Democratic majority has supported some appropriations which were not even approved by the President?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, possibly they have; yes, sir.

Mr. ANDREWS. I am thinking of some of the special items the gentleman has listed here.

Mr. DOUGHTON. How does the gentleman reconcile that with charging us with getting orders from the White House and implicitly following those orders and being a "rubber stamp" if we have exercised some independence? The gentleman should give us some credit for that.

Mr. ANDREWS. I do.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS. I recall the bill, which involves an additional expense of some five or six million dollars for the construction of a road. It would require the taxes on all sporting goods to meet that expense alone.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman does not claim that was not O. K.'d by the Budget? The gentleman is not very consistent, because that was O. K.'d by the Director of the Budget, and that is the main reason I advocated it.

Mr. ANDREWS. There is nothing in the record to show it was recommended by the President with the approval of the Budget.

Mr. DOUGHTON. But it was contained in and approved by the Budget. There is no question about that.

Of course, we should all like to get rid of these excise taxes.

It is hoped that perhaps before the end of this Congress relief expenditures may be reduced if business continues to improve as contemplated. [Laughter.] Oh, the gentlemen on that side may indulge in horselaughing, of course. That is very easily done. The gentlemen may explain why it is that there have been such great relief expenditures when the conditions which made that relief necessary and the expenditures necessary had their origin under the previous Republican administration. This administration inherited the worst economic conditions ever inflicted upon a country, with which the present administration has had to deal, than ever before existed.

People can pay taxes much more easily when conditions are improved, as they are today, when labor is employed, when industry is profitable, and when business is humming. People find it much easier to pay $10 in taxes today than it was to pay $1 in taxes under the conditions which we inherited.

I do not defend high taxes, and I shall advocate the removal of these taxes just as soon as it can be done. We gave due consideration to the needs of the Treasury and the requirements of the public. The public demands Government service, Government activities, and Government expenditures. Congress has passed these appropriations, not the President. Congress has made the authorizations. If the credit of the Government is to be protected and these appropriations provided for we must impose the necessary taxes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I do not know whether the question I am going to ask is pertinent to this bill or not. However, on page 3 of the committee report there is shown the amount of taxes which will be continued by the enactment of this resolution. I notice under the heading "Taxes on imports" there are listed crude petroleum, and so forth, coal, coke, and so forth, copper and copper concentrates, and so forth, and certain other items. If this resolution is passed, will such taxes be collected irrespective of any trade agreements which may be entered into by the President with foreign countries under the provisions of the Trade Agreement Act?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Undoubtedly. They cannot enter into reciprocal-trade agreements which invalidate the law in existence at the time.

Of course someone would like to see each and every one of these excise taxes repealed. Good reasons can be assigned, no doubt, for repealing each one of the taxes. The impelling reason for continuing them is that we need the money, and until we can raise the money in some other way or reduce the expenses of the Government, which our Republican friends say could be done easily, although they do not specify exactly how or where it could be done, we must continue these taxes. I appeal to the Members on the majority side of the House, where the responsibility lodges, to pass this resolution. Of course the Members on the other side play politics and confuse everything all they can. They do not care anything for consistency. Consistency does not appeal to them. However, we on this side of the House have a great responsibility.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. I want to vote for the bill if there is any necessity for it. I cannot understand, however, I may say to the chairman of the committee, why we should vote taxes taking away from the people a million and a half dollars a day and at the same time pay $7,000 a day in interest to keep $873,000,000 in gold idle. The Treasury statement issued each day shows the amount of inactive gold we have. The Treasury statement for June 8 discloses that we have $873,000,000 in the inactive gold fund. It occurs to me it is ridiculous to tax the people a million and a half dollars a day by these nuisance taxes and then pay the banks $7,000 a day interest on the bonds necessary to be floated in order to keep this gold idle. If the chairman can convince me we should do this in view of the idle gold, I shall be glad to vote for the resolution.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman believe anyone, living or dead, could convince the gentleman of that?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; if there is any logic or reason in opposition to the argument advanced.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I could not do that in the time I have, even if I were in possession of the facts to debate the matter with the gentleman. With all due regard to my good friend, the gentleman from Texas, and to his ability and fine service in the House, I do not think he would expect me to enter into a debate on that subject at this time.

Mr. PATMAN. I just wanted to know if the chairman had any information on the subject.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not as much as the gentleman from Texas, I suppose.

Possibly there will be some amendments offered to strike out certain of these taxes. Just as much reason can be advanced for the elimination of any one of them as another. Until we can make a complete study and readjust our tax system so as to raise the amount of revenue that will be lost if these taxes are not extended, the taxes should be continued. Therefore I hope all amendments will be voted down and that we will pass this resolution as introduced. If through economy or any other procedure we can get along without the money, it will be entirely satisfactory to me, and I shall welcome and cooperate in having these taxes repealed.

I certainly hope this resolution will be passed, in accordance with the earnest request of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee has made several references to the milk in the coconut. There is no more milk in the coconut, Mr. Chairman. The New Deal has drained the coconuts.

The gentleman was very adroit in evading a discussion of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I cannot yield.

For 30 minutes the gentleman very skillfully evaded a discussion of the bill under consideration. I am not surprised. I presume the gentleman at heart is ashamed of being compelled to bring in a measure of this kind, especially after we have repeatedly been assured that each enactment would be the last. This is the third time Congress is being asked to extend these nuisance taxes.

The gentleman, in his very brief reference to the items on which we are proposing here to extend the tax, stated none of the items could be considered necessary.

Now, I submit in all fairness that the item of gasoline is a prime necessity under our modern scheme of things, as is electrical energy, lubricating oil, and toilet preparations. Maybe they do not use soap down in North Carolina, but they do up in Minnesota, and we use matches out in our country, and we do not consider the radio a luxury any more—it is a necessity.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I cannot yield now.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am just interested in matches, and I am sure my friend will yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Is the gentleman objecting to the tax upon matches?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not objecting to any one item of taxation; I am objecting to all of them.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Did not the gentleman support, and does he not support today, an increase of the tax upon paper matches?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will answer that in my own way, if the gentleman will kindly take his seat. I am advocating placing paper matches and wood matches on the same basis.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. No; the gentleman has been favoring an increase of the tax on paper matches.

Mr. KNUTSON. But I imagine that paper matches are being manufactured by gentlemen who were material contributors to the Democratic national campaign last year.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Does the gentleman want to punish them if they did contribute?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; but I do not want to reward them out of the Federal Treasury.

We all know, of course, that this legislation is going to pass overwhelmingly because the President wants it. He does not need it. If he would only begin a policy of common sense in spending, it would not be necessary to reenact this legislation.

The chairman said that maybe before we adjourn these taxes will not be necessary. He is the prime optimist of all the ages. The more money we raise the more ways you will find down at the other end of the Capitol to spend it. No wonder business is jittery. No one knows what lies ahead of him in the way of new taxes, and I may say to you again, as I have stated repeatedly upon this floor, the one thing that is retarding recovery above all others is the excessive taxation the American people have to pay. People are not going to put their money back into business so as to give the Government an additional opportunity to tax them. They are not going to expand and put the unemployed to work when the Government takes all their profits away from them in the form of taxation.

Oh, the gentleman holds out the hope that this will be the last time you will be called upon to rob the American people through the machinery of the tax law. I do not place much faith in Democratic promises. I want to read to you from a platform which I think is one of the greatest documents ever adopted by a political gathering anywhere in all the history of the Republic. This was adopted in Chicago on July 2, 1932:

> We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people—> to be faithfully kept by the party when entrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe.

Now, what is a covenant? It is an agreement, a contract—

You folks have not kept a single covenant you have made except the one with John L. Lewis last fall, when he kicked in with $500,000 for your campaign fund; in fact, your covenants are more honored in the breach than they are in the observance. And today what do we see? Large portions of the country practically paralyzed because the Federal Government has lent its strength and power to the creation of contempt for law, and we see that the Post Office Department has abdicated its function and now refuses to transport mail under all conditions. Shades of Grover Cleveland, one of the really great Presidents you have given us!

Now, to get back, because I do not want to evade the matter under consideration, as did the chairman; you propose now to raise or to keep on raising over $500,000,000. Notwithstanding the fact that you have levied taxes upon the American people far and beyond those ever levied by any Congress in peacetime, you are several billions away from balancing the Budget. This is a nice record on which to go before the people, and then you wonder why there are 9,000,000 people out of work. At the rate we are going it is only a question of time until we will have twice as many on relief, if the Congress does not awaken to its sworn duties, prevent wasteful spending and squandering of the people's substance, and assure the country that from now on we are going back to a business basis and we are going to keep our expenditures within our receipts. High taxes mean lower living standards, curtailed production, higher prices to the consumer, increased unemployment, and a general feeling of insecurity that bodes no good for the future. Gentlemen, let us return to sanity in governmental expenditures and activities.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, these so-called nuisance taxes, which the pending joint resolution proposes to continue for another 2 years, were originally imposed by the Democratic House of Representatives in 1932 after the House had voted down a general sales tax applying generally to all articles excepting food, clothing, and medicine. At the time they were imposed it was provided that they should expire at the end of 2 years, or on June 30, 1934.

Since that time the present administration has twice extended these taxes. Under the National Industrial Recovery Act they were continued until June 30, 1935. Then, 2 years ago, a resolution similar to the present joint resolution was passed continuing them until June 30, 1937. Now, it is proposed to extend them until June 30, 1939.

Thus three times the administration has broken faith with the people in extending these taxes beyond their original expiration date. Yet that is nothing more than we have come to expect from those now in control of the Government. "Covenants with the people" are no more respected by the administration than if they had never been made. We have seen the Democratic platform of 1932 absolutely scuttled; we have seen the President's promises forgotten as soon as they were uttered; and we have even seen the iron-bound pledge of the Government to pay its currency and bonds in gold absolutely nullified. The people should not be surprised, therefore, that the administration has again broken faith with them over the continuance of the nuisance taxes.

Mr. Chairman, last fall, during the Presidential campaign, Mr. Roosevelt made a speech at Worcester, Mass., outlining his tax policy, in which he said:

> Here is my principle: Taxes shall be levied according to ability to pay. That is the only American principle.

Let us apply that principle to these nuisance taxes. Are they levied according to ability to pay? They are not. They apply equally to rich and poor alike. There is no graduation in the rates, as in the case of the income tax. The tax on gasoline is the same, whether it is bought by a struggling farmer or by a multimillionaire. So it is with the tax on electricity, on matches, cameras, chewing gum, sporting goods, cosmetics, toilet soap, tooth paste, furs, tires and tubes, automobiles, moving-picture admissions, and so on. The same is true of the additional 1 cent imposed on the carrying of first-class postage, which, of course, was added for tax purposes, and which is also continued by the pending joint resolution. Thus the extension of these nuisance taxes constitutes another breach of faith on the part of the administration, in that they are not based on the principle of ability to pay.

These nuisance levies are in the category of so-called hidden taxes. For the most part, they are imposed in the first instance on the manufacturer and then passed on through each subsequent transfer until they reach the consumer in the form of a higher price for the article he buys. Of course, there is method on the part of the administration in collecting as much revenue as possible through hidden taxes, so that the people will not know just how much of the tax burden they are really paying.

The extent to which the administration has resorted to hidden taxes is shown in the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee last year in connection with the Revenue Act of 1936. The General Counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in his statement before that committee, admitted that in 1935, 61.3 percent of the taxes collected were of the hidden variety, as against only 38.7 based on ability to pay. This is almost the reverse of the situation existing in 1930, when over two-thirds of the taxes collected were based on ability to pay and less than one-third were hidden taxes.

In the last analysis, the consumer not only pays these hidden nuisance taxes but he pays many other taxes in the increased cost of what he buys. The real-estate taxes, the license taxes, the franchise taxes, the income taxes, are all passed on to the consumer. That is why every man, woman, and child in the country has a profound interest in taxation, even when the taxes are imposed on someone else in the first instance.

When the people of this country come to realize that every dollar this administration wastes and squanders must some day be collected from them in taxes, either directly or indirectly, they will rise up in their might and put a stop to all this foolish and unnecessary spending. The trouble is that the administration has lulled the people into the belief that they will never have to pay the bill, which, of course, is absolutely contrary to the fact they are now paying, and in the future will continue to pay, the greater part of the cost of running the Government, not to mention the ultimate reduction of the national debt, which now aggregates over thirty-five billions.

Why is it necessary for us to be considering a tax bill at this time? It is only because the President has failed, year after year, to carry out his oft-repeated promise to reduce expenditures. As a candidate for office in 1932 he gave the country the definite assurance that he would carry out the platform pledge to cut the cost of government by 25 percent. At that time expenditures were running around five billions annually. Now they are from seven to eight billions annually. As is pointed out in the minority report on the pending joint resolution, to which I have subscribed, if the President had merely held expenditures at the 1932 level, without making any attempt to reduce them as promised, our present tax structure would produce in the next fiscal year nearly two billions in excess of our needs.

Thus the reason these nuisance taxes have been extended again and again is that the President has increased the cost of government by some 50 percent. While we have had several increases in the tax burden expenditures still are running far in excess of revenues. Every year the President has been in office he has had a deficit of anywhere from three billion to four billion dollars or more. He preaches economy and promises a balanced Budget, but he only gives lip service to these objectives. The fact is there has been no concerted effort to reduce expenditures. There has been much administration propaganda about retrenchment, but there is nothing tangible that anyone can put his finger on. It is true that the President vetoed a $5,000,000 appropriation for the New York World's Fair on the ground of economy, but what of the hundreds of millions, and even billions, he is throwing away in other directions? He is saving at the spigot and spending at the bunghole, and the taxpayers of the country in all walks of life will some day have to pay the bill for his wanton, reckless spending.

Personally I shall not vote another dollar of taxes on the American people until the administration has first made a determined and conscientious effort to reduce expenditures through the elimination of extravagance and waste. It would be no effort at all for the administration to save the entire sum which the pending bill proposes to raise in taxation simply by eliminating needless expenditures.

In his recent message to Congress on tax evasion President Roosevelt quoted the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes as saying:

> Taxes are what we pay for civilized society.

I accept that definition. And in so doing I challenge the right of this administration to pile more and more taxes on the American people simply to fill the pockets of New Deal spendthrifts so that they can continue their wild and unrestrained orgy of extravagance and waste.

In closing let me say that no one can possibly be more concerned over the failure of the administration to balance the Budget than I, but I want to see it balanced by reducing expenditures and not by the process of ever-increasing taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, while we all recognize the need for a considerable amount of revenue on the part of our Government, yet there are those among us who feel that some of these tax provisions are illogical and unsound and should be discontinued. For instance, the States had already preempted the field of gasoline taxation when the Federal Government subsequently entered that field and imposed a tax of 1½ cents per gallon, thereby requiring the services of many additional tax collectors. One-half of that was subsequently reduced, and now it is again proposed to extend that tax. Then the tax on first-class postage was increased from 2 to 3 cents, or a 50-percent increase, which brings in substantially about $90,000,000. This is a tax that is spread more heavily over the ordinary person, so that there is just complaint of inequality in that respect.

The distinguished chairman of this committee said that they would be willing to reduce some of these taxes if the suggestion of other avenues of taxation could be made. So, carrying out that thought, I suggest to the committee that there are some fields of income which we might approach and which would bring revenue and likewise employment to our people. It is a matter of deep concern, particularly to the people in the agricultural districts, to know that very heavy importation of farm products have arisen, especially in the last 3 years, and if adequate duties could be placed against these imports they would bring additional revenue to the Treasury, or if an increase of these rates would diminish imports it would increase the income of the farmer, and I know that the farmer would like to join that very exclusive group so that he could be numbered among those who pay income taxes. If his position could be bettered, he could contribute, through the income-tax channel, to our Government. Such a course would increase Federal tax receipts.

I now briefly call attention to the tremendous increase in farm imports in the last 3 years. In 1934 about 3,000,000 bushels of corn were imported into the United States; in 1935, 43,000,000 bushels of corn; in 1936, 31,000,000 bushels of corn. In those same years wheat imports increased from 18,000,000 bushels to 38,000,000 bushels, and then to 52,000,000 bushels. In 1934 a million and a half pounds of hogs or pork were imported. In 1935 three and a half million pounds were imported, and in 1936, 17,000,000 pounds, as well as a very heavy increase in other fresh-meat imports. I draw particular attention now to hams and shoulders. In 1934 less than 1,000,000 pounds were imported; in 1935 slightly over 5,000,000 pounds, and in 1936, 26,000,000 pounds were imported—2,500 percent increase in 2 years. Then, in the field of canned meats, 46,000,000 pounds plus were imported in 1934, 76,000,000 pounds plus in 1935, and 87,000,000 pounds plus in 1936. We could and should replace these imported farm products with domestic meat.

There is another subject that is very important to probably two-thirds and possibly three-fourths of the States of the Union, and that is the sheep industry; and, of course, its allied product, wool. In 1935 there were about 109,000,000 pounds of wool imported into the United States, in 1935 slightly more than 200,000,000 pounds, and in 1936, 257,000,000 pounds. If there are about 5 pounds in a fleece, we imported the wool or the fleece from over 50,000,000 sheep into the United States, every pound of which could have been produced at home. That is closely related to our soil-erosion program. It is said that we should build up the secondary land and that it should be placed into noncrop products, in clover and alfalfa and other erosion vegetation, but that land cannot lie idle and be handled to any advantage. It would be a tremendous burden on the person who owned it, so it is obvious that if we have a logical soil-erosion program we should feed the cattle and sheep and cows and horses on this land we are building up and reclaiming, and we cannot do that to the extent that would be equitable and sensible unless we prevent these farm products from coming into the United States. If we are to have a logical policy on erosion, we should conserve these markets for our farmers, just as we propose to save the fertility of the soil.

Here is an interesting situation, and I touch upon it briefly, in respect to the aggregate amount of farm products coming into and going out of the United States: Commencing with the fiscal year 1930 and continuing down to three-fourths of the present fiscal year, or to April 1, 1937, we exported farm products to the value of $5,284,000,000, but during that same period we imported farm products totaling a value of $6,273,000,000, or almost a billion dollars more imports into the United States than exports from the United States in that period. Therefore some of the countries of the rest of the world held the balance of trade against us in that respect. The figures follow:

Just recently the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, after a conference with the Chief Executive, announced that it is improbable that major farm legislation will be considered because of the lateness of the session, and I assume that he spoke advisedly. If he did, then we are not to have any benefits that would flow to this great industry at this session, but apparently other interests have the inside or pole position in this economic race track. We are diminishing hours and increasing wages to other groups in such a substantial manner that the cost of the products which the farmer must purchase have increased greatly. The Chief of the Procurement Division of the Government says that building costs today are substantially 15 percent higher than they were a year ago; farm-machinery cost has been greatly increased, and we know that our metal and allied products have been considerably increased in cost, and because of this increase it is apparent that unless the farmer receives some additional protection, either through the addition of excise taxes or duties upon imports, he is going to lag behind in this contest. Cheap land and cheap labor will continue to take his market.

There is a method in which we can amend existing law and bring him up to a higher level and save his market. I expect therefore to offer an amendment which will increase the duty upon the imports of farm products. When we have a picture of the situation we know that the farmer has not in the past received, and apparently in the current situation is not going to receive, the fair consideration which he should have. We talk a good deal about our foreign markets, and particularly export of automobiles.

The farmers of Illinois and Iowa buy and pay for more automobiles each year than all we are able to export and sell to the rest of the world. It is their well-being and their economic solidarity that is going to primarily promote the welfare of our country. So I am going to appeal to those who have acted in behalf of other groups to be logical and support this proposal. Last week we passed a measure which, of course, will permit the fixing of the price of petroleum products. We have not heard of many foreclosures among that group or in the steel industry, so those from this, the farming section of the country, this most important of all human endeavors, are going to ask that at least they be given the first opportunity in the American markets. I do not contend it will bring them equality in return, but at least it will preserve the American markets to those American producers. I hope I can have the support of the different groups who have taken care of these other industries.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The picture which the gentleman has painted as to the prospect of the American farmer is especially applicable to the dairy farmer. There is no one industry in the United States that has suffered more under present conditions than the dairy farmers of the North and East. They have received practically no consideration on the part of the administration up to the present time, and every single thing they buy, including the grain they buy from the western farmer, is from 25 to 75 percent higher than it was heretofore. If some consideration could be given, it would be welcome.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Would the gentleman mind incorporating in his remarks the amount received by the farmer for his crops in 1932 and 1933 as compared with 1936 and 1937 and the number of farmers who lost their homes in 1932 and 1933 as compared with the number of farmers who have lost their homes in the past 2 years? All those statistics and facts bear on the farm situation.

Mr. THURSTON. I would say to the gentleman that would be informative, but he only asks for one side of the picture; and in order to have the complete picture, then we should also have the increases that have been made in the long list of commodities which the farmer is obliged to purchase.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Make the statistics complete. I would like to have it 100 percent complete.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me also suggest that the gentleman put into the RECORD the great increase in farm foreclosures in the last 2 years.

Mr. THURSTON. That is a pertinent observation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in closing, I am going to offer an amendment to increase the excise tax upon the importation of farm products one-fourth; and I hope those who are interested in agriculture will rally to the aid of this proposal, so that at least we will have an opportunity to somewhat better farming conditions in the immediate future.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein two tables in relation to the prices of farm products and imports and exports of such commodities.

The CHAIRMAN. Consent to include in the gentleman's remarks the tables referred to would have to be received in the House. Otherwise, without objection, the gentleman will have permission to revise and extend his remarks.

There was no objection.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. THURSTON. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, the taxes provided in this bill are called nuisance taxes and are properly so named. They were enacted under a prior Republican administration. As I understand, the author was a distinguished Member of this House, Mr. Ogden Mills, of New York, who would inflict a sales tax on the consumer to protect the income-tax payer in the higher brackets. These nuisance taxes were supposed to the temporary. They are consumption taxes. They were sales taxes, applied to a special group of consumers and inflicted on a special list of commodities. I do not believe that any Democratic administration would ever have or ever will inflict such taxes on our consumers. It is proposed now to again and again carry on this heritage of undemocratic and un-American taxation handed to us from the Republican administration.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman will admit that this legislation originally came out of a Democratic Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have forgotten if that is true, but if that is so, I would not change my statement as to the iniquitous and the un-Americanism of such taxes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Patriotically attempting to help the Republican administration to balance the Budget when the Nation was in peril.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will you tell us why it is continued now?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Now, gentlemen, I do not know, and they should not be continued.

Mr. Chairman, many of the taxes contained in this resolution are unjust and inequitable, and I submit as a prime premise that it is no answer to an unjust or inequitable tax to say, "Well, we have got to get the money somewhere." That is no answer whatever. Nor is it any answer to say, "Well, will you tell us where to get the money otherwise?" That is no answer whatsoever.

For instance, the Federal Government, without any justification whatever, has invaded the gasoline-tax field. That field should have been left entirely and exclusively to the States. There is no justification whatsoever for that particular Federal tax.

What I want particularly to call to your attention, among the many inequities in this continuing resolution, is the tax on furs. What I may say about the tax on furs and fur-trimmed clothing is equally true as to the tax on cosmetics. They are taxes on the consumer and are taxes on necessities. They are taxes upon the little fellow, the consumer, and not upon the big fellow, the purchaser of luxuries.

Permit me to say in passing that the form of this legislation is a confession of legislative cowardice. By a joint resolution, which never should be used for this purpose, it is proposed to continue or extend the Revenue Act, a bill of 1936. To my mind, the deceptive method of a joint resolution should never be used for this purpose. It is either a bill to amend an existing act or it is not. Why the deceptive method of a joint resolution?

Let me illustrate for a moment, the tax continued as to furs. A session or two ago you changed the tax on furs. Let me show you here the picture of a beautiful fur garment of chinchilla which costs $30,000. In the last Congress by one fell stroke you relieved the buyer of that garment of $2,100 in taxes, but you still persisted in keeping the 3-percent tax on the little working girl because she had a piece of cat or rabbit on a coat. You provide, however, not only to tax the cat but to tax the coat, the clothing, the garment—wool, cotton, and so forth. Why, Mr. Chairman, in no sales tax ever proposed was it ever intended to tax clothing, a necessity. How do you finagle to do it? You provide that if the fur is the chief component material in value, then the whole garment is taxed. How does that work? The Government gets very little revenue out of this so-called fur tax which is in reality a tax on clothing, just a few millions at least, $3,000,000 to $5,000,000; whereas the consumer, not the people buying this $30,000 chinchilla coat pictured here which I hold in my hand, not the people buying "fur" coats, but the people who buy fur-trimmed garments, they pay countless millions which the Government does not get.

Let us take a concrete example: A fur-trimmed dress or coat is sold by the manufacturer for $40. There is a 3-percent tax on that because the cat or rabbit fur on the neck is a little more valuable than the rest of the coat or the dress, so the whole thing is taxed. That tax amounts to $1.20. When the coat goes to the retailer, he immediately doubles the wholesale price, the price it costs him, so that he marks it up to $82.40. By that time the person buying it is paying $2.40 in tax; and, of course, the second $1.20 does not go to the Government at all. If this dealer has a price range, as most of them have, if his price range on one garment, for instance, is $79.50, and his next price range is $95, this particular garment in question which has cost him $82.40, is put in the $95-price range, solely because of that $2.40 tax. So the consumer, the buyer, pays $10, $12, or $13 additional which the Government does not get at all, mark you. This tax, intended to be a tax for the benefit of the Government, does not revert to the Government, but is inflicted upon the consumer in pyramid upon pyramid.

It is not only the cloak and suit manufacturers in New York City or the consumers who have complained against this tax.

The farmers of America have protested against this tax for years. I could show you letters signed by Mr. Chester H. Gray and other farmer representatives protesting in behalf of the granges and the farmers, whose incomes have been reduced by reason of this tax upon a necessity. In the off agricultural seasons, the farmers recoup an income from fur-bearing animals. This tax has practically destroyed the industry in the farm sections.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. FLANNERY. May I ask what happened to the luxury tax on jewelry?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, let me confess that in the closing days of the last session of Congress, I think it was, the 10-percent tax on jewelry was taken off entirely—believe it or not.

Mr. FLANNERY. May I ask the volume of revenue derived from it?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I cannot give the gentleman those figures at the present time, but how that elimination of a real luxury tax happened only the cloistered few can disclose.

The miner, the farmer, the lumberman who has a little piece of fur on his glove or who has a fur-lined jacket, or whose wife has a fur-collared coat are still paying a luxury tax, but the people who buy 20-carat diamonds are relieved entirely from any tax—why I do not know. How it just so happened no one seems to know.

In the city of New York, part of which I represent, 70 percent of all the ladies' garments worn in America are there made. Hundreds of thousands, perhaps a million, people are employed in that great garment industry. This tax on fur-trimmed garments affects the wages these laborers receive, especially on piece work, which work is figured on the completed cost of the garment, including the tax.

The garment industry is made up of countless small units of workshops. The public generally thinks of the garment industry of New York as a number of great big concerns. This is not the fact. There are thousands of little shops where 7, 10, or 15 people work, for instance. The products of these shops gravitate into the great garment center of New York City, to be distributed to the Nation and the world.

This tax on fur-trimmed garments, which the Government does not get, is a fundamental injustice, because always bear in mind that the tax is pyramided and pyramided again and does have a most decided injurious effect on the worker, the manufacturer, and on the consumer. All of these three bear the burden, and the Government does not profit.

It is no answer to my complaint that you cannot get revenue otherwise. If the tax is unjust it should be repealed.

I was glad, of course, to get this time to discuss this matter. Although I have not introduced a bill in reference to the fur tax, some of my colleagues from New York have. The matter was brought to my attention last February, and I thereupon asked the Ways and Means Committee in writing to do the simple courtesy to the taxpayers and others interested of holding hearings on some of these matters. I wrote a letter to each member of the Ways and Means Committee and I also spoke to a number of the members of that committee personally, but to date no hearings whatsoever have been held as to the continuance of these nuisance taxes which we were guaranteed were temporary. Let me now and here predict, Mr. Chairman, that if the Congress passes this bill extending these nuisance taxes for 2 years more, these taxes, unjust as they admittedly are, will become permanent. They will never be repealed. Posterity will continue to scowl at the tax collectors—to no avail.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I recall that the gentleman has been very much interested in this matter. Does the gentleman agree with me that there have been three changes in the tax on furs since 1932, and that one of them was at the instance of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not recall as to the number, three, but I do know that I appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means in reference to the taxing the entire garment with just a piece of cat's fur on it. I have fought against this iniquitous tax for years.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. And that amendment was adopted. I am certain that the gentleman favored the amendment that was adopted last year in the 1936 tax bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. No; I did not entirely.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The gentleman means he did not favor reducing the rate from 10 percent?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, yes, indeed; but when you taxed the whole garment with a rabbit skin on it, I contended then it was not fair at all to the consumer, and I still do. You are violating all the principles of a sales tax by taxing necessary wearing apparel. No sales tax would ever pass this House with such a provision in it.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The gentleman has been very successful in regard to fur-tax amendments.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. And the Ways and Means Committee for some reason have been able to successfully continue this inequitable tax against the fur-trimmed coat worn by the working girl and in favor of the rich who buy expensive furs.

Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I wrote to each Member of the House as follows:

JUNE 10, 1937.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: It is expected that the bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee to continue the nuisance taxes for another 2 years will be taken up on the floor of the House on Friday of this week.

Although requests were made by persons interested in many of the taxes involved, no hearings were held by the Ways and Means Committee, and the bill provides a flat continuation for another 2 years of taxes, which were originally intended only to be temporary, and many of which are inequitable and constitute a sales tax imposed upon a selected group of articles, some of which are necessities.

For instance, the 3-percent tax on furs and fur-trimmed garments, which so vitally affect a great industry of my city of New York, is typical of other injustices under these nuisance taxes.

When the bill is taken up on the floor of the House, I intend to call the attention of the House to this situation, which is substantially as follows:

The tax imposes an unjust and inequitable hardship upon the farmer, the laborer, the small producer, and the consumer, which is entirely unjustified by the revenue derived.

For years the National Grange has opposed this tax. The farmer who supplements his meager and hard-earned income by trapping and hunting in the winter months, finds a depressed market for his furs as a result of the tax. When the same farmer or trapper buys a fur-lined hat or work glove he pays a tax on the very commodity which he produced.

The tax is imposed not only on the materials—the woolens and linings—but upon the labor represented in these garments.

The miner or the laborer is taxed for the dab of pelt which may give a semblance of warmth to his wife's cloth coat.

The consumer's tax burden is many times the revenue derived by the Government. The women's coat and suit manufacturing industry, for instance, is comprised of numerous small manufacturing units which uphold wholesome labor standards, strive in every way to be constructive members of the business community, and produce a vital necessity. Not only is this industry placed at a competitive disadvantage in intercommodity competition, but the pyramiding of prices from producer to retailer to consumer applied to the millions of taxable garments sold annually imposes a tremendous burden on the consumer infinitely in excess of and completely unwarranted by the revenue derived.

Nor is this tax on the great mass of consumers even slightly justified by the income to the Government. The proportionate revenue derived from the tax is negligible. Moreover, even though the proportionate yield were greater, it is self-evident that Government revenue, however necessary, is never justified by an unjust tax.

This temporary tax has survived to date, but the time arrives when justice to the farmer, the laborer, the consuming public, and to a burdened industry demands that it be permitted to pass from the statutory picture.

Sincerely,

JOHN O'CONNOR.

The Revenue Act of 1936, which imposes a 3-percent tax on furs and articles of which fur is the component material of chief value, has failed to yield the Government any appreciable revenue and violates every principle of equitable taxation. All wearing apparel which is fur-lined or fur-trimmed is taxed, and when the fur is the component material of chief value the entire garment is taxed.

This tax vitally affects a great industry in my city of New York, and is typical of many other injustices under these nuisance taxes.

The revenue derived from the fur excise tax is negligible when compared to the total Budget. For the period July 1, 1936, to May 1, 1937, the total receipts therefrom, as reported by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, amounted to $5,275,862.31, and for the preceding same period $3,035,855.71. By virtue of the 1936 amendment thousands of additional manufacturers who had been heretofore exempted from the operation of the tax were rendered subject to it, and the cost of collection seriously impairs the revenue derived.

The fact is, however, that the consumer's tax burden far exceeds this revenue. The pyramiding of prices from the producer, on whom the tax falls, to the retailer and then to the consumer, applied to the millions of taxable garments sold annually, imposes a tremendous and unwarranted burden on the consumer. For example, a taxable coat or suit is sold to the retailer for $20 plus 60 cents for tax. The retail profit, which is 40 or 50 percent for this commodity and sometimes higher, is based on the delivered cost. Consequently the purchaser of this garment pays anywhere from 85 cents to $1.20 as tax, whereas the Government revenue is only 60 cents.

Frequently the tax projects the garment into the next higher retail priced bracket than that which it would have occupied had it been tax free. In these cases the consumer pays 5 to 10 times the amount which the Government receives.

The tax is an onerous burden for the industries subjected to it. The women's coat and suit manufacturing industry, for instance, is comprised of numerous small manufacturing units, upholding wholesome labor standards, and striving in every other way to be constructive members of the business community. This tax places these industries at a decided disadvantage in intercommodity competition.

The fur excise tax also falls upon the materials—cloth and lining—as well as the labor represented in these garments. Congress never intended to enact an impost of this kind. I do not believe it intended to saddle a luxury levy upon the lumberman's gloves and the farmer's hat when these are lined with what the law flatteringly classifies as fur. Nor did Congress seek to figure as finery the dab of pelt that may give at least the semblance of warmth to the coat of an unemployed miner's wife. The obvious unfairness of this tax is further demonstrated by the fact that an evening gown which costs five and six times as much as the coat of a laborer's or farmer's wife, and a hat or pair of custom-made shoes costing as much as the coats for three or four children are not taxed.

Even if this revenue were necessary other and more equitable means of raising the money should be invoked. This "temporary" tax has survived to date, but the time arrives when justice to the farmer, the laborer, the consuming public, and a burdened industry demands that it pass from the statutory picture.

Among the countless telegrams and communications I have only just recently received in reference to this fur tax, the following are examples:

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 10, 1937.

Hon. JOHN O'CONNOR,
House of Representatives:

We respectfully urge you to oppose retention of tax on furs and articles of which fur is component material of chief value. This tax is a discriminatory burden against major industries of New York City. It is a luxury impost upon a necessity. Your cooperation will be deeply appreciated.

NATIONAL COAT AND SUIT INDUSTRY RECOVERY BOARD.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 11, 1937.

Congressman JOHN O'CONNOR,
House Office Building:

Read with pleasure your splendid communication to your colleagues on fur tax. The American Farm Bureau Federation, as well as National Grange, strongly opposed to this tax. Call Chester Gray, of the Farm Bureau, if you desire verification. Good luck to you. Thanks for your efforts.

MICHAEL HOLLANDER,
National Fur Tax Committee.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 10, 1937.

Hon. JOHN O'CONNOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The so-called fur tax, which is actually an impost on cloth garments trimmed with fur, has impaired the ability of the coat and suit industry to give employment and to consume woolens, linings, and other materials. This inequitable impost is a severe blow to New York's industrial welfare, as more than 80 percent of the national output of coats and suits is produced here. We ask that you join with your colleagues from New York in removing this glaring example of sectional discrimination from the miscellaneous tax bill when it comes to the House.

J. LOUIS DUBOW,
Executive Director,
Merchant Ladies' Garments Assn., Inc.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 10, 1937.

Hon. JOHN O'CONNOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned organization, comprising 400 manufacturers of coats and suits, employing 15,000 workers in New York, appeals to you as a fellow New Yorker and fair-minded legislator to have tax on furs and fur-trimmed merchandise eliminated from miscellaneous tax bill. This tax has seriously retarded the recovery of this industry. We shall be grateful for any assistance in this connection.

SAMUEL KLEIN,
Executive Director,
Industrial Council of Cloak, Suit, & Skirt Manufacturers, Inc.

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 10, 1937.

Hon. JOHN O'CONNOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The present fur tax applies to trimmings on children's garments, this being typical of unsoundness and unreasonableness of this levy. It is an intolerable burden to New York industry and is indefensible insofar as the public is concerned. By insisting upon the termination of this tax you will be correcting an obvious injustice and will be rendering a valuable service to the largest manufacturing field in your home city.

CHARLES BAKER,
Executive Director, Infants' & Children's Coat Association.

I. THE FUR TAX IS LEVIED UPON CLOTHING, A NECESSITY OF LIFE

The Revenue Act of 1936 imposes a 3-percent tax upon articles made of fur, or of which such fur is the component material of chief value. All wearing apparel which is fur lined or fur trimmed is taxed. When the fur is the component material of chief value the entire garment is taxed. Fur-trimmed cloth garments, fur-lined gloves, fur-lined jackets, and children's apparel are typical necessities which are taxed under this section, and the farmer, the laborer, and the great mass of working women are the consumers who bear this burden. The obvious unfairness of this tax is shown by the fact that there is no impost upon a hat costing as much or more than a coat; or upon a pair of custom-made shoes costing as much as coats for three or four children.

II. CONGRESS DID NOT INTEND TO TAX NECESSITIES

It is clear that when this excise tax was introduced as section 604 of the Revenue Act of 1932 it was not intended to apply to necessities (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 1932, pp. 11023, 11376, and 11381). In 1934 Congress, cognizant of the injustice of the 1932 act, amended it to provide an exemption for all garments under $75 (sec. 608 of the Revenue Act of 1934). In 1936 the tax was again amended to apply to all garments regardless of price. An examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS referred to will quickly reveal that the intent of Congress as expressed therein is defeated by the present section of the law. It is also a fact that if a general sales tax had become a law in 1932 fully 60 percent of the coats and suits now taxed as a luxury would have been exempt as basic necessities.

III. THE TAX IMPOSES AN UNWARRANTED BURDEN UPON AN IMPOVERISHED INDUSTRY

For the period 1931 to 1935, inclusive, the women's coat and suit industry has lost approximately $10,000,000, or 17 percent of its working capital. In 1935, a year in which practically all industries earned a profit, the coat and suit industry lost 1.37 percent of its already depleted capital. The rehabilitation efforts of an industry whose resources have been exhausted to this extent should not be retarded by this excise tax. The tax, as indicated below, places this industry at a competitive disadvantage with other industries. The fact that this trade has fared more poorly than any other branch of the needle trades is attributable, in part at least, to this competitive handicap.

IV. THE CONSUMERS' TAX BURDEN FAR EXCEEDS THE GOVERNMENT REVENUE

Retail mark-ups are calculated on a percentage of the delivered price. A $25 fur-trimmed coat bearing a 75-cent tax is sold to the retailer for $25.75. If the retail mark-up is 100 percent, the consumer pays $51.50 for the garment. The 75-cent tax which is paid to the Government has been pyramided to an additional cost of $1.50 to the consumer. This principle of pyramiding applied to the millions of garments sold annually imposes a tremendous burden on the consumer, completely unwarranted by the comparatively small revenue derived.

V. WOOL AND LABOR ARE TAXED

When fur is the component material of chief value on a garment, the tax is levied upon the selling price of the entire garment. Though the fur may cost $10 and the garment be sold for $30, the tax is 90 cents—60 cents of which is a tax on wool, labor, and other elements of production cost. This tax minimizes the protective tariff on wool and imposes an unconscionable tax on labor. A most conservative estimate of the amount of the so-called fur tax that is derived as an actual impost upon woolens and cloth garment labor places it well above $1,000,000—not large as to revenue but a staggering burden upon the industrial factors in question.

VI. CONGRESS IS OPPOSED TO THE TAX

Every candidate for Congress in the last election of 1936 was asked to express his opinion of the fur excise tax. Almost without exception the entire body expressed disapproval of the tax and favored its repeal.

Surely the time has come to repeal this fur tax.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, no one particularly cares to talk about taxes unless he is against them, but every one also knows that in order for the Federal Government to continue its operations it must be supported with revenue. I have just a few things to say with reference to the extension of the so-called nuisance taxes before I consider another subject briefly that I did not know was going to be under discussion today. I came to the session this afternoon with the definite understanding we were debating a tax bill, not a tariff bill, and I want to direct my remarks to the latter proposition for a few moments in view of the fact the issue has been raised.

It might be well for us to refer to the fact that the good faith of the President of the United States has been challenged upon the ground that taxes have not been reduced. I deny that inference. It all depends upon how you look at the subject of taxes as to whether or not they have been reduced. One might say, for example, that if a man is earning $50,000 a year and is forced to pay half that amount in taxes, $25,000, and it constitutes a substantial increase in the total amount of taxes over what he was paying 2 years ago, he has just reason for complaint at first thought, but let us carry the argument a step further. Let us go back to 1932. Suppose that man was paying $500 in taxes and was not earning anything in the way of income. That certainly would constitute a heavier tax burden than paying half of his total income of $50,000 in taxes and he would be in a much more serious condition financially. That is a hypothetical example, but it serves to illustrate the point I have in mind that people who are paying more taxes today under the New Deal are paying them because they have larger incomes and because they are making more money as a result of the New Deal program that has been given to this country.

It is a question of whether the American people want to earn more money as a result of some of the activities of the Roosevelt program and pay more taxes or whether they want to pay slightly less taxes and not earn any money, as was the case in 1932 and before. That is one of the important issues we must take into consideration in discussing the question of taxation.

I think it is also important for us to keep the fact in mind when we are talking about the matter of income for the Federal Government that sometimes, and certainly under this administration, people receive more for taxes than any other money they spend. We may take, for example, the policing of the national waters of the United States and the international waters; the military protection that we receive as a result of Federal expenditures, and we might take specifically in this administration the public-works program which for the first time in the history of this country has given us a wide distribution of public benefits, paid for out of tax money, of course, or the work-relief program that has done what? Put money into the pockets of the people who needed it the most. I stated in my own district, and will be glad to say again at any time, if there has been any tax money wasted in the payment of salaries to people who were out of work, that money did not go to Wall Street, but on the contrary it went into the hands of people who needed it badly.

What did they do with it? Did they go out and buy stocks and bonds? No. They bought food, clothes, and fuel from the businessman on Main Street in the little town in which they lived, and many a retailer kept his back away from the wall and preserved his solvency as the result of that relief program, which is paid for obviously out of taxes. Taxes upon what? Upon the larger incomes and more prosperity in America since 1932 than we have seen in many years before.

Now, to depart for a moment from the matter of taxes to tariffs and trade agreements, which I did not expect would be under consideration today. The suggestion has been made by my distinguished colleague from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON] that we ought to increase the tariff rates on agricultural products in order to increase the income to the Federal Treasury, and that if the result was a decrease in agricultural imports, there would be an increase in the income of the American farmer that could be taxed. If his proposal worked out that way it would be fine, but it does not. In fact, that observation was an astonishing statement for my colleague to make, when he comes from the State of Iowa. When we stop to consider the price of hogs went down to 1½ and 2 cents a pound under the highest protective tariff in America, with the income of every American farmer considerably below nothing, farm bankruptcies occurring by the thousands, American business throughout its entire stretch from agriculture to industry in a state of ruin, and all during the highest protective tariff regime in the history of the Nation, it is astonishing that he would take the position that we ought to increase the revenue of the United States by increasing tariffs on agricultural products, as was done under the three administrations of his party that preceded Roosevelt.

He also leaves the inference that the American farmer would profit as a result of such an arrangement; but it is obvious that the American farmer did not profit as a result of it in the past, and I insist when he revises his remarks he ought to include therein, as our distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee pointed out to him, a statement of the total income that the American farmer is receiving today under this program and the total income he received in 1932 and before under the Hawley-Smoot tariff. He ought to also include therein the prices received for pork products, about which he complains at the present time, from 1934 to 1936 under this program of reciprocal-trade agreements with those of 1932, if that is what we are talking about; and I apologize to the members of the Ways and Means Committee on the majority side for raising this issue, but I felt it was necessary to discuss the matter in view of the circumstances.

I might also go into the matter of the tariff with reference to the subject of corn and impress upon the people of this country that agricultural imports have come in here, why? Because corn was 10 cents a bushel? No. Because it was $1.35. That is why it has come in. That is one of the principal reasons it has come in. Farmers have been out of feed grains all over the country and imports have saved them from suffering unduly at the hands of speculators during 1936.

We ought to keep the issue clear. We ought to keep the facts before us when we are discussing these questions and not allow the American people or ourselves to become confused. Agricultural imports into the United States have likewise increased by virtue of drought conditions that have prevailed since 1934 almost continuously in many parts of the country up to and including 1936.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WEARIN. I point out these facts because I believe it is well for us to keep in mind that the American farmer, as a result of the trade program which has been advanced by an able Secretary of State, has enjoyed a continuing increase in farm income in all respects. If we have had more farm foreclosures, as was intimated here a few moments ago, in the last year or two than there were 2 and 3 years ago, it is because there has been some relaxation of the moratorium laws passed by State legislatures, necessitated by the crisis which prevailed in 1932, when we took over the Government of the United States, and because of debts which were entailed as the result of the unsound economic policy which prevailed prior to the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.] I would remind you that after all is said and done the American people have received more in the first 4 years of the Roosevelt program for their tax money than they had ever received before. For the first time the man in the street realizes it is worth the effort to have a Federal Government in Washington which believes in the rights and the welfare of the average man. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear all the remarks of the gentleman who has just spoken, but he said something about the Roosevelt administration giving the people so much.

I do not know whether he mentioned the abundant life or not, but that is the old gag, and he ought to have mentioned the abundant promises and pledges that have not been carried out.

May I remind the gentleman that the President of the United States has himself repeatedly stated that one-third of the people are undernourished, badly clothed, in want, and poorly housed? You have been in office for 4 years and you still talk about giving the people this or that out of their own money. The New Deal goes around and around and around and comes out where? Out of the pocketbooks of the taxpayers.

Here again we have a bill to raise additional revenue, I suppose again to balance the Budget, and what do you do? You pick out selective sales taxes, nothing but sales taxes, much worse than if you had a general sales tax on manufactures. You pick out these discriminatory taxes on special industries in order to raise a few hundred millions of dollars, and who pays the bill? Why the poor people and the burdened consumers. Where is your financial policy? It is of a vanishing type. It is like the Cheshire cat in Alice in Wonderland. Sometimes you see the grinning face, sometimes you see one or two paws, and sometimes you even see the tail, but you never see the entire cat. Your financial policy is like trying to nail a Camembert cheese to the wall; it just does not stick. There is no policy whatever except to borrow more money, to pile debt upon debt and deficit upon deficit, and continue to increase the national debt, which is now over $35,000,000,000, or almost $20,000,000,000 more than it was under the administration of Calvin Coolidge.

I am opposed to this form of taxation, its soaking and swatting the poor. You have already squeezed the rich taxpayers dry and now you pick the pocketbooks of the wage earners, farmers, and small-business men. I am opposed to it doubly as long as you continue to take money out of the Treasury, $800,000,000 since the first of the year, to buy gold from foreign nations at twice the cost of production. This money comes out of the Treasury of the United States from the American taxpayers and out of the general fund of the Treasury Department. It is added to the deficit and increases the national debt and makes it utterly impossible to balance the Budget. What is the use of trying to raise a few hundred million dollars when you are letting the money out of the Treasury through the bunghole? This expenditure since January 1 amounts to almost $900,000,000. It jumped $91,000,000 last week alone, in order to buy gold from Russia, where gold for which we pay $35 is produced at $5 an ounce. In South Africa, gold is produced for $15 to $20 an ounce, and we pay $35 an ounce for that. What is the use of trying to raise revenue when you let the Treasury of the United States take hundreds of millions, almost a hundred million dollars a week, out of the Treasury to buy gold we do not need, and bury it in the ground where it does not produce any interest whatever?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Another objectionable feature of this bill to which the gentleman might call attention is the fact that it invades the States' field for raising taxes, including such articles as gasoline and lubricating oil.

Mr. FISH. Oh, does not the gentleman know by this time the Democratic Party has absolutely forgotten all about States' rights and State sovereignty, and that such issues have vanished under the New Deal? They are not concerned with them any longer.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has reference to the New Deal Party. I think the Democratic Party is just as much concerned over States' rights as ever.

Mr. FISH. Where are they except for the few constitutionalists that are left in the Democratic Party?

Mr. KNUTSON. There are some down in the Smithsonian.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have here an editorial from the Philadelphia Record concerning the gold situation. This editorial comes from one of Mr. Stern's papers which has been 100 percent New Deal. I now find it is only 99.5 percent New Deal. This is the first time I know that any of his papers have left the New Deal reservation.

The editorial is entitled "Alice in Blunderland" and reads as follows:

Alice found herself in the Treasury Department. She'd heard they were buying goldfish, at $35 a pound, and, she reflected, the two goldfish in the bowl at home would pay her way to the movies.

A man who looked for all the world like the Mad Hatter—only he didn't have a hat—walked up to her.

"Young lady," he said severely, "how did you get in here?"

"There was a hole in the Budget", said Alice, "so I just slid through."

"Would you like to buy some Treasury notes?" countered the man. "We have $800,000,000 worth for sale."

"But I came here to sell you some goldfish", objected Alice.

The man scratched his chin. "We've only been buying gold—so far—" He paused, then seemed to reconsider, and said: "Well, wait a few minutes. I'll see if we can handle goldfish, too."

Alice waited.

"We'll make you a proposition", said the man who looked like the Mad Hatter, a few minutes later. "We'll buy your goldfish if you'll persuade your friends to buy our Treasury notes. Fair, isn't it? Especially since we're paying half a percent higher interest than we've paid in years."

"Why higher interest?" inquired Alice. "Won't I, as a taxpayer, have to help pay that?"

"Come, come, child, you don't understand. The higher interest is the result of our Treasury policy of higher reserve requirements, which makes money scarce."

Alice hesitated. She was a little frightened now. Wonderland hadn't been anything like this. "But tell me, what will you do with the goldfish?"

"Oh", said the man who looked like the Mad Hatter, "we'll bury them with all the gold we've been buying. After all, if Europeans will sell us gold for $35 an ounce, when it costs them only $20 an ounce to mine it, you should be tickled to get $35 a pound for your goldfish."

"It's all very confusing", said Alice. "And I'm worried about the fish, buried with all that gold. Haven't you enough gold now?"

"How much is 'enough gold'?" came the tart reply. "You might as well try to figure out how many is 'enough goldfish.' We can't be bothered."

"Oh, I guess it's a bargain", murmured Alice, "but I still can't understand why you have a policy of making it more expensive for you to borrow money."

"You don't understand economics, my dear."

"And I still can't see", persisted Alice, "why you pay more to borrow money to buy goldfish you don't need."

"Come, come", said the man who looked like the Mad Hatter, soothingly. "You just don't understand finance. Bring in your goldfish. We'll give you the money * * * cash. * * *."

In the remaining few moments I want to add a few words to some remarks I made the other day in regard to the last finance bill to plug up the loopholes in the income-tax law. Let me say to the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, Democrats and Republicans alike, that if you propose to plug up these holes and stop tax evasion and tax avoidance there are other income-tax payers besides those referred to in the President's message whose incomes you should also look into. I have not myself seen the income-tax returns of the President of the United States, and do not believe I would be permitted to see them, but I suggest the committee look at the income-tax returns of the President. I am informed on reliable authority he has deducted from his income tax the losses on his so-called farm at Hyde Park in my district in New York, which, after all, is not a farm but a palatial residence and country estate, and also for losses on his cotton plantation in Georgia. If he has done that, why should not others under the law deduct from their taxes in the same manner? If you are going to investigate anyone's taxes, I suggest you investigate those taxes as well; at least, these rumors should be verified or scotched. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I have some special objections to the enactment of this bill into law, one of which is that it has not been given the committee consideration that is its due. The Congress picked out some 20 industries in the United States and laid upon them individual sales taxes. Why we picked out these particular 20 industries nobody knows. I suppose it was on the general proposition that it is easy money to collect, as, for instance, the Federal gasoline tax.

The chairman of our committee, the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, referred to the fact we had inherited these taxes and the necessity for them from the terrible conditions that were handed them by a Republican administration. Well, speaking of inheriting burdens, I wonder if my Democratic friends have stopped to think that the Republican administration in 1921 inherited a burden of twenty-six and one-half billion dollars of war debts from the preceding administration. This was everybody's debt.

During 11 years of my service on the Ways and Means Committee we were concerned with four tax reductions, in 1921, 1924, 1926, and 1928. In 1921 the total reductions were $663,000,000; in 1924, $579,000,000; in 1926, $422,000,000; and in 1928, $222,000,000. During this 11-year period we were considering tax reductions, and we did not have deficits, but we had a surplus each year. So my experience during the last 6 years has been quite different from the 11 years' experience during which we reduced the national debt ten and one-half billion dollars—this war debt we fell heir to when President Wilson retired from the White House.

It is only fair to say that in the reduction of this debt by ten and a half billion dollars, there were involved many recoveries on the part of the Government in connection with the railroads, and in connection with war supplies that were sold, and it was not all from surpluses, but nevertheless we reduced that debt from a high in 1919 of $26,596,000,000 to a low point of $16,026,000,000 in 1930. Since then it has steadily increased until it is now above $35,000,000,000 and still mounting. I presume the Members of the majority do not care very much for the minority report that was made here, but there is one sentence they ought to cut from it and paste on cardboard and stick right in front of their desks or right in front of their shaving mirrors. At the bottom of page 21 there is the statement made by the President when he was a candidate for office in 1932 when he pledged that "rigid governmental economy shall be forced by a stern and unrelenting administration policy of living within our income." Every one of our Democratic brethren ought to cut this out and keep it in full view to remind them constantly that this is one of the many promises that has been completely forgotten by this administration.

Now, these taxes are not new taxes, Mr. Chairman. They were originally war taxes and were much more extensive in their scope than they are at the present time. There are very few men in the House who remember when these taxes were enacted into law. The political complexion of this House has changed materially since then, due to circumstances to which it is unpleasant for me to refer. [Laughter.] So very few present Members know how they were put in.

In 1932 we tried to have enacted here a manufacturers' excise tax. Afterward the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] introduced such a bill and I introduced one afterward continuously for about 4 years. You may recall that fight led by the chairman of our committee. His lieutenant on this side of the House was Major LaGuardia, now the mayor of New York, together with a group of Progressives, and the Democrats, as a whole, although there are a few who were for the policy. Chairman Crisp was acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee at the time. It was a sensible measure. It had the licensing system to prevent pyramiding and carried a very low rate of 2¼ percent with exemptions on food, clothing, and medicines.

This is the kind of tax we ought to have. We ought to have a Federal sales tax of that character and then have the money allocated to the 48 States proportionately, but that field has been so invaded by the States and by cities and other political subdivisions that a Federal sales tax now is wellnigh out of the picture, whether it is a manufacturers' excise tax or not; but what interests me now is that in some of the States where gentlemen were most strenuously opposed to it, their own States have adopted this type of tax. I do not know how they explain this, but perhaps they do not want to explain it. Some things are better left unsaid.

When we failed to pass the excise tax there was hurriedly sent up to the Speaker's desk from the chairman of the committee these amendments, and they were adopted one by one. They figured them out hurriedly. Nobody in the House had seen them and no one was apprised of the effect of what was being done. They were hurriedly sent up from the chairman's desk, after the other measure had failed, and were adopted, and now appear in today's bill under the title of manufacturers' excise taxes.

Of course, the policy is unfair, and what I complain about, as I said in the opening, is that we should have had public hearings and have given many of these taxes some consideration. Take the match tax. We could have improved the revenue on that by a very slight change, and we could have eliminated some of the others without losing very much revenue. I appreciate the need for revenue, and until the end of the squanderlust which is part and parcel of this administration we are going to continue to need increasing revenues. What I regret is that the people at home, the people abroad in the country, in the letters to me, and in the contacts I make with them, seem to be absolutely unconcerned about where the money is coming from. Those who are beneficiaries of the relief program—and, incidentally, the relief program is figured as good for 15,000,000 votes, together with their relatives—are all absolutely unconcerned about where the money is to come from.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, a tax bill is always a very unpleasant measure to vote for. I was a little amused at my colleague from New York [Mr. FISH]. He said that he is opposed to this kind of taxation and opposed to this kind of a measure, but when this measure was brought in under the Hoover administration in 1932 he voted for it. He voted for practically every appropriation that this administration recommended. These appropriations will take money back to his constituency just as it does to the constituencies of the rest of us; but when it comes to voting for a tax measure, he says that he is against it; and then to fill out his time he said he would read us a little joke from an article in one of the papers in his district. He presented no argument against this bill. He is like an old Member of Congress who attributed his long term in office by voting for all appropriations and against all taxes. No one on the floor of this House dares to present an argument against the bill. The gentleman from New York says that he is in favor of balancing the Budget. When he does that, all we need to do is to go back and look over his record of votes for the last 4 years and we will find that he has voted for practically all of these measures. Of course, we have the query of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who always wants to know where the money is coming from. It is a fine thing to talk about, getting the boys in the gallery to put a little headline in the paper which says that FISH damns the President and says that there are loopholes in the tax law and that he is evading taxes. That is no argument. If there are loopholes in these laws, the gentleman's party has been in power almost all of my entire life, then why have not they regulated them? There are always going to be loopholes, so far as the income tax is concerned. But this administration is anxious to cure all defects and is not afraid of accumulated wealth and its influence.

Let us get down to the milk in the coconut and see whether we should pass this bill. This measure did not originate with us; it originated with the Republicans, and they were not appropriating money as we have been—necessitated by lack of foresight of Republican misrule. We inherited their panic and depression, the worst in American history.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FULLER. In a moment. The question involved here is as to whether or not we want to give up $650,000,000 when each and every one of us, more or less, day in and day out, Democrats and Republicans, are asking for more money, more appropriations, doing nothing sincerely about balancing the Budget, except to put our extension of remarks in the Appendix and get up here on the floor and make a few speeches about it. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman know that only about $400,000,000 was actually spent for relief out of the $4,800,000,000 of extraordinary projects and expenditures this year?

Mr. FULLER. I have not time to go into a detail of that, and, in fact, I have not all of the information at my fingers' end, and I am satisfied that the statement made by the gentleman is not correct when it is properly analyzed; in fact, I know it is a radical misstatement of the facts. Here is a bill that does contain several items which I would like to see eliminated. The biggest item is the tax on gasoline. It brings in approximately $200,000,000 a year, but what has been happening? We have been appropriating even up to $400,000,000 a year to build roads in this country for the automobiles to travel over. Federal money is being appropriated for that purpose. We cannot expect to get money out of the Federal Treasury to build these public roads for the safety and convenience of the traveling public and for the benefit of the people who own automobiles unless we make a little sacrifice ourselves. A few years ago, under the Hoover administration, we were fortunate to get fifty millions a year.

There is another item here that I would like to see eliminated, and that is the tax on lubricating oil. The farmers have to pay a good deal of that, and it goes on down, and in many instances it cannot be passed on to the consuming public. There are some items in the bill that in the Ways and Means Committee I moved to have eliminated. I asked to have the tax on chewing gum eliminated. I think that is a real nuisance tax, and it brings in less than a million dollars in a year. That should be eliminated. Some portions of the firearms tax should be eliminated, sporting goods especially, all bats and balls for school children, and sporting goods in that class. I was in favor of eliminating the tax on matches, but they voted me down. You know we cannot legislate just to suit ourselves. In all general legislation we have got to give and we have got to take. The responsibility is upon the Democratic side of the House to stay with the administration. If you do not stay with the administration in trying to get this money, you cannot balance the Budget. Do not come before this House day in and day out and ask for more projects and ask for more appropriations, if you want to balance the Budget. If the conservative people do not stay together, the others will even make the relief money $4,000,000,000, as they tried to do for this year. After all, the President is not to blame altogether for the recommendation for so much of this relief. Why? Because the membership of this House asked for it. Our chambers of commerce back home write and tell us to balance the Budget, and in the very next mail we get a resolution from them asking us to get some project through for them which will take millions and millions of dollars out of the Federal Treasury.

With regard to furs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] wanted to eliminate the tax on furs. I tried to get that eliminated, but three times, to my personal knowledge, the Ways and Means Committee has backed down on furs, until it was perfectly satisfactory to those people who appeared for it the last time. Now they want the tax eliminated. How can you gentlemen go on record to eliminate the tax on furs and then keep the tax on lubricating oil, on refrigerators, keep the tax on matches, keep the tax on gasoline, keep the tax on the little things that are sold to the school boys and girls, the tax on the chewing gum that your little grandchildren chew? Why, Mr. Chairman, it is ridiculous.

Of course nobody wants this bill. Nobody wants to vote for tax measures, and I am only hoping I can see the time when we can get some other tax to take its place. The hope is held out to us that we will get a new tax bill and get the revenue somewhere else. I would like to know where it is coming from. In my opinion it would come from reducing the incomes of those of small return. This is the English system, and under the English income tax its citizens pay three times more than we in America. I will tell you what we need to do. We had better get down to brass tacks; we had better get back to our old way of living; and, instead of appropriating so much money try to economize and try to balance the Budget and take some of this tax burden off of the people. [Applause.] We cannot do it as long as we listen to radicals and hold out every inducement, political and otherwise, to them to hold them in line. It must stop some time and someone must take the responsibility. I say to you Members on the Democratic side of this House it behooves each and every one of you, whether you like it or whether you do not like it, to take this measure as it is and vote for all of it. If not, do not come in here asking for any more appropriation or for any more projects in your home communities. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON].

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, we see a rather amusing spectacle today in the variety and variance of the issues presented. I always attempt to consider the matter that is the subject of debate on the floor of the House as I would if it were a lawsuit. As we all know, in the courthouse definite issues are drawn by the pleadings. Then you know where to direct your proof. In this instance the nearest approach to pleadings that we have is the majority report on one hand and the minority report on the other hand. Then, of course, the remarks are directed at the issues joined. Our friends on the Republican side have not been satisfied with drawing a sharp issue; they have set up various contentions, some in conflict with others. If we were in a courthouse, we would move to have them elect which of the defenses, inconsistent one with the other, they would rely upon.

What do they say? They say in the closing words of their report, "We believe that the Budget ought to be balanced." We have been attacked from every quarter because we do not rise to the responsibility of balancing the Budget and balancing it now. Then, in another portion of the report these gentlemen, who are able lawyers and who will sidetrack you if you do not watch out, say, "We are against these taxes. They are economically unsound. They are consumption taxes that fall upon the people."

Then, lo and behold, they come along and say, "We object to the extension of these taxes for a 2-year period." Why? Because perhaps next year, 1938, in an election year, the Democrats will come in and try to repeal these taxes. They say that the Democrats should not have the political benefit that would come from repealing these taxes next year. Why? Because the situation in the Treasury, the financial condition of the Treasury, is so acutely perilous that we ought not to do it. Now, if it will be acutely perilous next year, why is it not acutely perilous today? If it is acutely perilous today, why do they not join us in maintaining the credit of the Nation? Of course, it is just simply politics. Politics. When we look in one direction and see the attack in that direction and meet it, they are sharpshooting at us from over here.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], a most able, eminent, distinguished statesman, a hard fighter, but never hits below the belt, told you something of the history of these taxes. I want to embellish somewhat the facts he gave to the House and to the country. I would first remind that these excise taxes came into being after the manufacturers' sales tax had been beaten in 1932 in the House of Representatives. As a matter of fact, the enactment of these taxes came after that fight on the manufacturers' sales tax in the House, but they had been in mind by the Republican administration before they recommended the sales tax. They had been recommended to the Ways and Means Committee by Mr. Ogden Mills, Secretary of the Treasury. He recommended practically all of these taxes prior to the time he recommended the manufacturers' sales tax. I want to deal with it chronologically.

It pains me to think of the dire straits that this country and our people were in on January 16, 1932, when Mr. Mills, a distinguished former Member of this House, then Secretary of the Treasury, came before us, a Democratic majority on the Ways and Means Committee, and said, as I well recall:

This is the time that politics should be forgotten. The situation in the Treasury is serious. We have had a deficit of almost a billion dollars last year and our deficit this year will be $2,000,000,000 plus. We call upon you as patriotic representatives of the people to balance the budget.

He told us that we would need $920,000,000 of additional revenue. That was on January 16, 1932. I hold in my hand the mimeographed statement from which he read on that date making recommendations to the Ways and Means Committee, pointing out sources of revenue along with certain amendments in regard to the income taxes. His prepared statement was mimeographed and delivered to the committee. It reads:

MISCELLANEOUS TAXES

Under the 1924 act, a substantial amount of revenue was provided through miscellaneous taxes. These included the tobacco taxes, the taxes on admissions and on club dues and certain stamp taxes, which have been retained, and the capital-stock tax, other special taxes, the tax on manufacturers' sales of automobiles, trucks, and accessories, and a number of minor taxes which have been repealed. In view of the marked contraction in corporation and individual incomes, in recent years the principal source of taxation, it seems essential that, as under the Revenue Act of 1924, substantial additional revenues be provided by miscellaneous taxes. I do not recommend, however, the exact provisions of that act as to miscellaneous taxes.

Accordingly I recommend that additional revenue be provided from the following sources: An increase of one-sixth in the present rates on tobacco manufactures and products except cigars; an increase of 1 cent in the existing stamp tax upon sales or transfers of capital stock; extension of the present tax on admissions through the reduction of the present exemption to 10 cents; a tax on manufacturers' sales of automobiles, trucks, and accessories at 5, 3, and 2½ percent, respectively; a stamp tax on conveyances of realty of 50 cents for each $500 of value in excess of $100; a tax of 5 percent on manufacturers' sales of radio and phonograph equipment and accessories; a stamp tax of 2 cents on each check and draft; and a tax on telephone, telegraph, cable, and radio messages of 5 cents for charges in the amount of 14 to 50 cents, and 10 cents for charges in amounts in excess of 50 cents.

The amount of revenue which would be realized from the miscellaneous tax proposals would depend upon when they became actually operative. Additional revenue on the basis of assumed collections for a period of 6 months from January through June 1932, was estimated at about $205,000,000. The increase for the fiscal year 1933 is estimated at $514,000,000.

POSTAL RATES

We have heard a great deal about the increase in the postal rates. Upon page 11 of that mimeographed statement the then Secretary of the Treasury recommended the increase in the postal rates, and he placed it upon the basis of the deficit that had been created under that administration. He said:

In recent years the failure of postal revenues to cover expenditures has resulted in increasing postal deficits, which have been met from the general revenues of the Federal Government. A part of this deficiency may be attributed to expenditures for special services, such as the cost of free postal services performed for governmental departments and agencies, the excess of the cost of air-mail service over revenues, and the cost of special rates paid to ocean-mail carriers of American registry. According to estimates by the Post Office Department, the postal deficit, exclusive of such special expenditures, will approximate $150,000,000 for the fiscal year 1932. It is recommended that postal rates be increased to cover such deficiencies by a reasonable margin—that is, to provide additional revenues in the amount of not less than $150,000,000 on an annual basis, thus relieving the Budget for the fiscal year 1932 by about $75,000,000 and for 1933 and subsequent years by the full $150,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, let me suggest that the added burden in 1932 of $150,000,000 to the users of first-class postage was a much heavier burden than the $177,000,000 plus that they paid in 1936, or the $195,000,000 plus in 1937, or the $204,000,000 plus in 1938, estimated. It does not take a smart person to know that that burden imposed then for the patriotic purpose of balancing the Budget was more burdensome than the present rate under existing conditions. Why, even my Republican friends ought to be able to see that.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. I wonder if the gentleman has given any thought to the fact that a large number of Republicans and quite a number of Democrats have not voted for all these extraordinary expenditures in the last 3 years.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. No; and a lot of our Republican friends who were here in 1932 never did have a chance to vote for or against them.

Mr. ANDREWS. I would be interested in knowing how many Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee voted for any of the so-called economical proposals that have been presented to the House. How many of them voted for $1,000,000,000 for relief instead of $1,500,000,000?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Several voted for the $1,000,000,000 amount. I am one who did not; I voted for $1,500,000,000. I gave my reasons for so doing at the time; and I voted as I did because I wanted to take care of your poor whether you wanted to or not.

Let us continue with the chronological sequence of events. On January 13, 1932, came these estimates based upon figures compiled in December of 1931. Within a month and 3 days, on February 16, this same Secretary of the Treasury came down and admitted that they had made a mistake in their estimates. Within 2 months they found out that they had made a mistake of $321,000,000, and instead of being necessary to raise $920,000,000 it was necessary for our committee to report out a tax bill totaling $1,241,000,000.

We said:

Mr. Secretary, we are ready to assume that obligation; let us have your recommendations.

Recommendations were brought down on February 16, 1932. I read from the mimeographed statement presented to the committee by the then Secretary of the Treasury, Ogden Mills:

FEBRUARY 16, 1932.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter of February 10 requesting the Treasury Department to make recommendations as to how the additional revenue necessitated by the revised estimates may be obtained. I am very glad to comply with your request.

The Committee on Ways and Means and the Treasury Department are in complete accord as to the necessity of balancing the Budget during the next fiscal year so as to eliminate any further increase in our public debt. There can be no question as to the soundness of this position. It admits of no compromise.

The estimates submitted by this Department to the Congress in December indicated that approximately $920,000,000 of additional revenue were required to balance the Budget in the fiscal year 1933. At that time receipts were estimated at $2,696,000,000 and total expenditures at $4,113,000,000, including statutory debt retirements, indicating a deficit, exclusive of the latter, of $920,000,000. Owing to marked changes which have occurred in basic economic conditions since the time when the original estimates were made, the revised estimates of revenue submitted to your committee are $321,000,000 less than the estimates submitted in December. Furthermore, the same changes in conditions necessitated a revision of the estimates of the additional revenue that would be yielded by the taxes outlined in the Treasury program of December last resulting in a reduction of $134,000,000.

According to the figures now before you, the indicated deficiency is therefore $1,241,000,000. This amount must be provided for in the main by increased taxation, but it seems to me that a part, at least, should be covered by decreased expenditures.

While recognizing that the Budget Director has already made a vigorous effort along this line, it seems to me that under the compulsion of necessity it might be possible to reduce our total expenditures to about $4,000,000,000 or by as much as $118,000,000. This would leave approximately $1,123,000,000 to be raised through increased taxes.

In that statement he recommended a general manufacturers' sales tax of 2 percent, tentative estimate of $600,000,000 yield. Mr. Chairman, then it was that the fight came in the committee on the manufacturers' sales tax, and then it was that a Democratic Ways and Means Committee reported that manufacturers' sales tax to the House, and the House rejected it. Then it went back into the committee for the purpose of raising $1,241,000,000; and do not forget, my Democratic friends—our Republican friends could never forget it—do not forget that in that manufacturers' sales tax as it was reported to the floor of this House there was not one single article of food or clothing exempted. I shall never forget as long as I live how, in executive session, a motion was made to exempt salt from tax by a splendid Tennessean who sat at my side, a distinguished American, the Honorable Ed E. Eslick, who gave his life to his country in this spot at a later date. It failed because there was a tie vote. As I recall, the vote was 12 to 12, the Republicans voting en bloc, with two Democrats joining them. I voted for this and other amendments to exclude food and clothing. I voted against the bill on the floor of the House.

The manufacturers' sales tax that was considered originally did not exempt food or clothing. After its defeat on the floor we brought out this bill of so-called nuisance taxes. The taxes in the 1932 bill were recommended by the Honorable Ogden Mills as the way to raise this revenue. The Democratic House followed that leadership patriotically, and I do not think we should be criticized today by gentlemen on that side because these taxes are old. They were placed upon the books at the request of the Hoover administration.

My friend from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], whose tongue pierces deep, who is always keen and alert in debate, thinks the country is in fear of new taxes. They might well fear new taxes if this tax bill fails to pass. It is not pleasant to support tax measures. I do not want to see the friends of my distinguished colleague from Minnesota die of heart failure through the fear of new taxes. They have been able to adapt themselves to these taxes in many instances, and they have been able to pass them on or absorb them.

The gentleman from Arkansas talks about the chewing-gum tax. At first blush you would think that was a tax on the children or the users of gum, but it is not. You get just as many sticks of gum today for a nickel as you did before the tax was put on. However, the tax yield is not of considerable size; but, of course, it all adds up.

Mr. FULLER. It makes the chewing gum a little shorter and a little thinner.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I have not laid down a measuring rod, so I do not know.

Mr. FULLER. It might be good politics to lower this tax. As I understand it, Wrigley last year gave $50,000 to the Republican campaign. It might be good politics for us to lower this tax a little bit.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I know the philosophy of the gentleman from Arkansas and the philosophy expressed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] in regard to the same subject.

FUR TAX

In connection with the consideration of a tax or tariff bill they may talk about fear as to what is being done or what is going to be done. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] talked about the jewelry tax. Some gentleman asked him about the repeal of the jewelry tax. The House did not do that initially. That was done through a Senate amendment. You would think the repeal of that tax just simply meant the loss of five or six hundred million dollars. It was not so stated, but there was that inference. There was a loss of revenue, however, of some $3,110,000 from the repeal of that tax.

What position were we in in regard to that item? We had under consideration the 1936 tax bill, which was in conference. TOM CULLEN, who has been most attentive toward amending and repealing the fur tax, was gnawing on the bit in regard to the fur tax, and we had to get together with the Senate conferees. I realize that the metropolitan city of the United States probably has 75, 80, or 85 percent of the fur business of the country within its limits, and I can very easily understand their interest in the fur tax. But "'pon my honor, and I hope I may die", if we did not try every time we had the matter up to satisfy them, but you cannot satisfy them until the tax is repealed.

As I recollect, the fur tax, originally taken from the 1918 act, was 10 percent. Then they came along and said that the tax hampered them. That it was a tremendous burden upon cheap clothing with just a little bit of fur. So we exempted the articles of clothing upon which fur was placed where the value was less than $75. That is what they wanted at that time. Then last year in the conference report we came out with a 3-percent rate, as I recall it, instead of 10 percent, with the exemptions eliminated. Let us see what that brings insofar as revenue is concerned.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. The gentleman has devoted a good deal of time to the fact that the original taxes of this type were proposed by the Republican administration. Everyone knows that. We know that and the country knows it.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am glad the gentleman knows it.

Mr. ANDREWS. I entertain no fears similar to some people on this side of the House. May I ask, Can the gentleman tell me where the Democratic Party has made any effort during the present session of Congress to effect any economies whatever?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The gentleman has his viewpoint, and everybody knows what his viewpoint is. What is the use of my standing up here trying to convince my friend from New York in regard to relief expenditures or Democratic principles? We belong to different schools of thought.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am over here, as I understand, fighting for people so that they may get bread, food, clothing, and all that sort of thing. The gentleman is over there sharpshooting at us politically, advocating anything in opposition to that which we propose.

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not need relief. What about the Interior Department appropriation bill?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am not talking about that. The gentleman cannot take me off the floor by asking me questions in reference to the Interior Department appropriation bill. The gentleman got excited about the road in the district of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. He asked the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] about that five or six million dollar road. The gentleman from North Carolina did not catch what he was driving at at first. But the gentleman can easily find out it was authorized by an act of Congress and it was authorized by the Budget Director. Of course, it is hard for us sometimes to answer all those things when we are talking about a tax bill. When we have a tax bill up for consideration they want to talk about the tariff or they want to talk about relief. They want to talk about the Interior Department appropriation bill. But when we have up for consideration an Interior Department appropriation bill they want to talk about taxes, relief, or something else.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Very adroitly the gentleman from Kentucky has stated these taxes are not new, and I am glad he has admitted they are fast becoming old. But when will the Ways and Means Committee and the Members of this House be honest with the American taxpayers and no longer claim that these are temporary provisions? The original taxes were passed in 1932 for 2 years. They were extended 1 year until 1935. They were then extended until 1937, and now the gentleman is advocating extending them for 2 more years. When are we going to stop?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. My friend from Missouri knows we have followed the path laid out when this resolution was initially passed. Why did the great Ogden Mills say these taxes would not be permanent? Because they hoped they would be in power when the 2 years elapsed, and they possibly might increase the rates and put certain exemptions in the income-tax laws, both for corporations and individuals, and thereby balance the Budget.

Mr. SHORT rose.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I decline to yield now.

I said they were old taxes, with the idea in mind that the country would not be made jittery because of their extension.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to my friend the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, the gentleman knows when these taxes were originally proposed we were in an emergency.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am glad to get that admission. I never knew before that my good friend the gentleman from Minnesota ever knew we were in an emergency. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, yes; we have been told so.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Hoover did not know about it in 1932.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman tell us what party created this emergency?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Well, a person should not say anything disrespectful about the dead. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman's party stated we were in an emergency, and I admit we were. Are we still in an emergency? That is what I want to know.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. We are attempting to maintain the credit of this Nation. The gentleman from Minnesota says, "Balance the Budget." We are trying to do that very thing. Instead of trying to sabotage, instead of trying to make the deficit larger by curtailing taxes, it seems to me the gentleman ought to be joining shoulders with us to maintain the credit of the United States about which he is so concerned.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I say to the gentleman I have done so by voting against every extravagance they have been proposing.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he expected anyone in this country to believe we are honestly trying to balance the Budget, when we continue to spend $2 for every $1 of income we are receiving?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. That just shows how much my friend the gentleman from Missouri knows about the fiscal situation.

Mr. SHORT. I confess my profound ignorance on the system of bookkeeping.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I confess we have been and are spending plenty of money.

Mr. SHORT. I have voted against it.

THE FISCAL STATUS

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The deficit in the fiscal year 1936 was $4,600,000,000, if I am correct, and I will turn to the distinguished professor from New York for confirmation. In the next year it is substantially $2,600,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Three billion four hundred million dollars.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Two billion six hundred million dollars is the figure I have. It is stated that the revenue at this time will not be within $604,000,000 of the estimated yield. Let us talk about that for a minute.

You have $134,000,000 which has been tied up and has not gone into the Treasury under the tax laws connected with the Railroad Retirement Act. You have $80,000,000 which has been tied up in court action and has not gone into the Treasury of the United States that was in those estimates accruing from the windfall tax. This makes $214,000,000. When you deduct $214,000,000 from $604,000,000 you have $390,000,000. There were granted taxpayers this year more extensions of time in which to file their tax reports than ever before in history; 100 percent more extensions than were granted in the last tax year. June 15 is not far ahead, and it is my guess when you get to June 15 you are going to see some pick-up. There may be some deficit in the corporation and personal income-tax returns, but I do not think it will be what our Republican friends have said it would be or have hoped it would be.

With regard to balancing the Budget, under the present arrangement it looks as if there will be a $400,000,000 deficit for next year, but you have the savings which are going to be effected, you have this loophole proposition that is going to receive consideration, and then you have the consideration of the tax bill, which will probably be presented in the early days of the next Congress. I forecast the Budget will be pretty well in balance on July 1, 1938.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to my friend the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. And you will count in as part of the money which is going to balance the Budget what you are receiving into the Treasury from the taxes under the Social Security Act, which are supposed to be a trust fund?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. When we collect the social-security taxes the Congress is authorized and directed to make appropriations to the old-age reserve account. Therefore that account will be safe and sound in the days to come when the aged will need retirement payments.

Mr. REED of New York. That money is going into the Treasury and is going to be spent, and will not go into a fund, and you know it.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I beg your pardon; it goes into the old-age reserve account through direct appropriations. I cannot conceive of Congress failing in its duty to preserve the fund.

Mr. REED of New York. This is being used now to mislead the American people regarding the condition of the Treasury.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The Congress of the United States directed the placing of funds in the old-age reserve account.

Mr. REED of New York. But it will go into the Treasury and be spent if this Congress permits it.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Congress will not fail, in my judgment, in keeping the fund intact for the purpose of paying old-age benefits. I wanted to talk about the shades of Grover Cleveland, whom they praise so much today. It took 40 years for them to appreciate him, but I am glad they finally are doing justice to Mr. Cleveland. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend, I append hereto a table showing receipts from internal-revenue taxes for the fiscal year 1936 and the estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1937, together with the percentage which the total receipts from the various taxes bear to the total of internal-revenue and customs receipts.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I regret to announce the death of a former Member of this House. On the night before last, the 9th of this month, James H. MacLafferty, a former Representative from the Sixth District of California, who served in this House in the Sixty-seventh and Sixty-eighth Congresses, passed away. Mr. MacLafferty had the respect and confidence of the Members of the House. He performed a useful service to our State. Many thousands of our people will learn with deep regret of his passing.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, on the 20th of April the President of the United States sent here a message in which he urged a curtailment of expenditures in the various executive departments, stating that the deficit for 1937, which is the year we are in now, was estimated by him in January 1937 at $2,248,000,000, and that revised estimates indicated, as of the 20th of April, that the deficit would be $2,551,000,000.

Let me say to the House that on this daily Treasury statement that we have here the deficit as of the 8th of June, the last statement I have, appears on page 2 to be $2,422,000,000, but this deficit is arrived at by using as a deduction from your expenditures $985,000,000 of principal receipts which have been carried on the Treasury books as principal assets for years and which are not revenue. Therefore the actual deficit on the basis of revenue receipts today is $3,408,000,000, and this type of bookkeeping and making of statements tend to deceive the public as to the situation we are confronting. It is fair to estimate that the actual deficit for the current fiscal year will be at least $3,550,000,000. No one can tell exactly.

Now, the bill that is before us calls for the raising of taxes in the amount of approximately $600,000,000. As I figure it, this is an item of approximately 22 percent of the amount required to balance the Budget. It would be less than 20 percent when we come to add to that amount the deficit we are going to have next year.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York where this great discrepancy comes between his figures as to the present deficit and the figures of the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman makes it three and a half billion dollars, while he gets it down to five or six hundred million dollars.

Mr. TABER. If anyone happens to have the daily Treasury statement and will turn to page 3 of the statement, at the bottom of the page, he will find that principal collections have reached a total of $985,000,000, but this does not show in the figures on page 2 of the statement, where the deficit is set forth as $2,422,000,000.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. They have had a system of bookkeeping at the Treasury whereby they deduct from expenditures these principal receipts, and this results in a very deceptive situation.

I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, because he is perhaps going to ask me the question, this method of putting out the statement has existed for a long time, but that does not make it any better. It is bad just the same, because it does not show the actual situation of the Government and we ought not to deduct principal receipts from the regular expenditures of the Government in figuring a deficit.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. But my distinguished friend will admit that has been the method that has been followed in days gone by.

Mr. TABER. Yes; but they have never heretofore amounted to any substantial figure. Down to the last two fiscal years I think $100,000,000 was the peak in the years preceding 1934.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] to the fact that the figure I used as the deficit for the present fiscal year was $2,600,000,000. The figure of $400,000,000 which I used was with respect to the charge that has been made from the Republican side that there would be a deficit of $400,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year of 1938.

Mr. TREADWAY. The deficit for the fiscal year 1938 is figured by the Treasury in the same way that this is figured, and, as far as I can see, the principal receipts will probably run very close to the same figure next year that they are this year, and we are not getting an accurate picture of what the country is facing unless we have the actual revenues and the actual expenditures. We cannot get along by collecting the loans we have made and calling them receipts to offset regular expenditures of the Government.

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, who, I believe, was on his feet first.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Referring to page 2 of the Treasury statement, does the column under fiscal year 1937, the portion that refers to expenditures of $2,665,000,000, include the expenditures which we are making from time to time in connection with relief and the other agencies or activities of the Government?

Mr. TABER. If you add $985,000,000 to that $2,665,000,000 you will arrive at part of the figure we have so far spent for what they call relief, and I am going to put the figures in the RECORD in detail next Tuesday when we have a little opportunity for general debate, or at least I hope we will. This will give the details of what those expenditures are for so-called recovery and so-called relief of all kinds. As I figure, we have spent about four billion and a half dollars so far this year, and all of it except about four or five hundred million dollars has been for projects and that sort of thing, rather than for relief. The amount for relief is only about $450,000,000 or $500,000,000. I will have all those figures here next Tuesday in general debate if I can get the opportunity to present them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What figure does the gentleman pick up at the bottom of page 3?

Mr. TABER. Oh, all those figures where it states "Receipts" are headed "Repayments and collections."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Fiscal year 1937, $388,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Fiscal year 1937, repayments and collections, and it begins with $130,000,000, and the total of that column is $985,000,000.

I simply want to call attention to one other thing while we are considering this matter. Our appropriations so far in this Congress, including the bill which the Committee on Appropriations is about to bring in here today and which is expected to be reported out today, amount to $8,402,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. That includes certain reappropriations. That does not include any deficiency items whatever. I have not the comparable figure for 1937, but the size of the appropriations means that we are not going to get anywhere near balancing the Budget for 1938. If you pass this tax bill, it will not provide one-quarter of the revenue that you need, or anywhere near it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Probably no man in the House is more familiar with the Government finance than the gentleman now occupying the floor, and therefore as an expert I ask him this question: What does the gentleman estimate will probably be the deficit from balancing the Budget in 1938?

Mr. TABER. It is rather difficult to say, because I do not know what taxes are going to be added.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman's guess is just as good as that of the Democratic side. The gentleman has heard what they have guessed.

Mr. TABER. If this tax bill alone is passed our deficit will be anywhere from one billion and three-quarters to two and a half billion. I do not think anyone can say any closer than that at this stage, because I do not know what we are going to be up against. That will be on the basis of revenue receipts and actual disbursements. This year so far our actual expenditures are ahead of last year down to this date. Our expenditures, including everything so far this year, are practically $8,000,000,000. It may run one or two hundred million dollars over that. It will be $8,200,000,000 anyway, and it may be $8,250,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman's understanding is not the same as that of the chairman of this committee, because I understood him to say in his speech this morning that our expenditures and appropriations are much less this year.

Mr. TABER. Oh, they are more this year than last, and we are getting away beyond control. I hope that this House some day will take an actual position in favor of balancing the Budget. I have tried continuously, I have voted against appropriations of all sorts. I have had some support. Some efforts have been made by Members of the majority to cut expenditures. I do not believe that accomplishments can be made unless there is more effort all the way along the line. If the majority today would bring in a tax bill that would balance the Budget, I would vote for it, but a subterfuge that amounts to about 20 percent of accomplishing that purpose is a fraud on the American people, and we ought not to consider such a proposition. We are not meeting our responsibility.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. The people in my district are very much interested to know whether or not I can get official figures as to the actual national debt, and what the ratio of expenditures is to that of receipts. Can the gentleman give us that?

Mr. TABER. The ratio of revenue received to expenditures is that of about 8 to 4½. The revenues are approximately four and a half billions and the expenditures approximately eight billion.

Mr. STEFAN. And as to the national debt?

Mr. TABER. It is $35,273,000,000; and a contingent liability on account of guaranties of over $5,000,000,000—a total of over $40,000,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, taxes like the measure under consideration today are before this House because the forces in control at the present time refuse to cut expenditures. To make matters worse they do not attempt to develop a well-rounded tax system, which must include both drastic reduction of expenses and a general tax program of sufficient proportions to balance the Budget, before it can be considered sound and justifiable. They sometimes talk about economy, as a smoke screen, but they do not translate the words into action.

SLEIGHT-OF-HAND POLICY

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has given an excellent description of the present financial condition of the Government. By reason of the conditions he describes the Government has been compelled to follow a pernicious system of dealing from the bottom of its financial deck in order to keep on spending. At the present time the Government is depending upon a financial policy of fancy sleight-of-hand tricks; the hand must be quicker than the eye to keep it going.

ROBBING PETER TO PAY PAUL

What do I mean by a sleight-of-hand financial policy? The thing to which I specifically refer today is the practice of using what we could properly term "trust-fund money" for the everyday operation of the Government, and for the purchase of Government bonds to bolster that market to permit continued borrowing and spending.

FINANCIAL JUGGLING

Incredible as it may appear, it is nevertheless a fact that the Treasury is using certain trust-fund collections for current expenses. It is also using trust-fund reserves for the purchase of Government bonds in the open market. Current purchases of Government obligations by the Treasury itself are at the highest rate ever recorded. In addition, the open-market committee of the Federal Reserve Board also has been supporting the market from time to time during the last few weeks.

SUBSTITUTING I O U'S FOR CASH

Trust-fund reserves, such as Postal Savings reserves, the revolving fund of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, reserves of the civil-service retirement fund, and funds administered for Indians, now exist almost entirely in Government securities. As the social-security taxes come in, the cash is being dispersed by the Treasury on account of current expenditures, and an equivalent amount of Government bonds deposited in the social-security reserve fund. For the fiscal year 1938, beginning July 1, 1937, this source of funds alone will aggregate some $700,000,000. At the end of the year, however, there will be nothing in the social-security reserve fund save that amount of Government I O U's.

REPAYMENT PLEDGE IGNORED

In addition, the Treasury is receiving large repayments of loans from the R. F. C., Farm Credit Administration, and similar agencies, and these funds likewise are being used to defray current expenditures instead of retiring a portion of the national debt, as promised in 1933. Up to April 1 of this year income from these repayments were $432,196,282—for 9 months of the current fiscal year. Every cent of this repayment was used by the Treasury, in addition to current revenues of $3,740,428,265 for the same 9 months, in payment of current expenditures; and, in spite of these tremendous revenues, the Treasury deficit for the 9 months was $1,855,672,763.

UNCLE SAM CAN DO NO WRONG?

If a charitable organization took a specific fund of money and used it for purposes other than those designated when it was raised, what would the donors think about it? If a banker juggled his depositors' cash from one use or one fund to another, he might easily find himself in jail; and yet similar practices have now become an established part of the present financial policy of the United States Government. The day of reckoning is bound to come.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in support of the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] with reference to the Budget and the deficit, as contrasted with the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON], I should think that the fact that the Democratic administration at this time is insisting that this bill be extended for 2 years is strong proof in support of Mr. TABER's position. If the finances of the country are now as the gentleman from Kentucky would have us believe, and we are ready to balance the Budget next year, in 1938, what would be the sense in extending this tax bill beyond 1 year? I want the House and the country to know that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, supported by some of the Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee, did what we could to vote down this proposition of extension for 2 years.

Much has been said as to why we should reduce these taxes. There is no question about this position. Every Member of this House has no doubt hoped to be able to reduce taxes. Under the Democratic administration taxes have been increased three times in 4 years, and these increases have been tremendous. If we are to reduce taxes at all, this is the logical place to do it, and this is the logical time. You should do it now or forever refrain from proclaiming your desire to reduce taxes.

An old stock question that has been asked the Republican Members when we ask that the Budget be balanced is, "How are you going to supply the difference?" We have been asked that frequently, but not today. I wonder why somebody did not ask us today, "If we repeal these taxes, what are we going to put in place of them?" The reason that question is not asked today is that only 2 weeks ago we had a grand opportunity on this floor to answer that question most emphatically, because at that time there was a contest on this floor as to whether the relief bill should be $1,000,000,000 or $1,500,000,000. We kicked aside that day, just as though it were a football, $500,000,000, the difference between a billion and a billion and a half. If at that time we had been economical-minded, if we really intended to practice economy, that would have been the time to practice it, because there is no question that the relief situation in the United States could be met adequately with one thousand million dollars. It was not necessary for us to provide fifteen hundred million dollars to do that job. We could have answered this question emphatically with that other $500,000,000, and we could have repealed all these taxes. They scheme and sweat around and search every nook and cranny for the nickels and dimes of the children as taxes, and they lay the burden of taxes on all classes. Most of this increase is due to the extravagances of the administration. Yet they waste $500,000,000 and vote it to the President to do as he pleases with it—why not use it to pay taxes?

The Republican members on the Ways and Means Committee tried to raise some more money in this bill from a source that is willing to pay. We tried our utmost to have this bill amended in this respect and that was something you would be surprised to know about. We wanted to amend this bill in such a way that it would bring in an additional $1,000,000 to the Treasury. We could have done that by changing the tax law with reference to the tax on matches.

In spite of anything we could do, in spite of the support of a considerable number of Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee, we could not get that amendment into the bill. It would have brought in around $1,000,000 additional tax, without any objection from the people who paid for it. That is a wonderful situation. That is a situation comparatively unknown in tax legislation, when the people who would pay the tax of an additional $1,000,000 were willing to pay it. You will wonder why that was. The reason is simple. There is a differential between the tax on paper matches and the tax on wood matches. Those who manufactured paper matches were perfectly willing to permit the change. You ask why? Because it would result in an equalization in the manufacture and sale of matches, and this $1,000,000 could have been absorbed, whereas now it is taken up by advertisers. If we had only changed that law to that extent, by striking out three or four small words, we would have brought into the Treasury of the United States an extra $1,000,000, but that change was not permitted. Why? It was simply because an edict had come from the White House that this bill should not be changed in one particular; not in one particular. No; the White House wants all the millions it can get. I wonder if the time will come that the Democratic majority on the Ways and Means Committee will stand up and do what they know they should do. I have seen it happen time and again that the Democratic membership on the Ways and Means Committee will lie down supinely and permit the White House or the Senate to run over them. They follow along, and when the public shows its resentment, the Senate amends it so as to meet the wishes of the people.

Without any disrespect to anybody in the other body, with full respect to the Democratic membership of the Finance Committee of the Senate, yet I am proud to say of the Ways and Means Committee of the House that there is no comparison between the knowledge, the ability, the acumen, and the capacity of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the corresponding membership of the other body. Still they refuse and fail to stand up and do their duty. They absolutely refused to accept $1,000,000 handed to them just because of an edict coming from some place else. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there is much more that I might say, but I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio yields back 2 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, as this tax bill comes to us this year my mind goes back to the revenue bill of 1936. One particular clause in the majority report on the revenue bill of 1936 seems to me to be most pertinent today.

I sympathize with the Democrats as they have to hang their heads in shame from time to time as these memories of old promises haunt them. I realize they have a serious task on their hands to save their faces from embarrassment.

I have profound respect for the intelligence of the men on the Democratic side; but let me read you a promise in your majority report last year in connection with the revenue bill. As you brought out the revenue bill and wrote a very voluminous report last year you told the Congress and the country that for the time being, at least, that revenue bill would be satisfactory until—and I quote:

> The next session of Congress, which can then act more intelligently.

"Which can then act more intelligently!" It is fair to assume that you mean to tell the country that the result of your more intelligent consideration of taxation is this nuisance-tax bill now before us.

I wonder whether the Ways and Means majority might tell the House what greater degree of intelligence has been used by this Ways and Means Committee with these nuisance taxes. Where is the evidence, in other words, of this higher degree of intelligence? I will yield to any man on the Democratic side, to any of the distinguished members of the Ways and Means Committee on the majority side, to tell me in what respect and in what way this nuisance tax, this tax on the cats on the girls' coats that the distinguished gentleman from New York told us about, and all of these other consumer taxes and the continuity of these nuisance taxes—I challenge you today to tell us where this bill represents a greater degree of intelligence than was shown last year. How does this fulfill your promise of more intelligence which you made last year?

There is only one answer to that question, and that is that you are afraid to bring out a revenue bill. Certainly the Democrats are chargeable with revenue raising. This is your bill, this is not the bill of the Republican side. You men who have the girls complaining about the tax on the cats on their coats, take the baby home to yourselves; it is your bill—and all of these other taxes, the additional amount for postage, and your taxes on gasoline, and every other one of these nuisance taxes that plague your souls and bother the pocketbooks of the consuming public of America—these are yours, yours to provide an excuse for; and still you told the people last year before the election of 1936, you told them that there would be more intelligence exercised in connection with the revenue bill during this present year. I want to know where there is evidence of more intelligence?

Mr. DOUGHTON rose.

Mr. DITTER. As I have been challenging the Ways and Means Committee, and out of my profound respect to the distinguished chairman of the committee, I yield now to him.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We did not say we would submit this to your side to be the judge of the standard of intelligence. We submitted that to the American people. They are the judges of intelligence, not you.

Mr. DITTER. My distinguished sir, might I answer you by saying that I am in no way setting myself up as the one to measure the degree of intelligence; and had the gentleman been here earlier in my presentation I would have said to him as I did say to the House that I wanted an evidence not for myself but for the taxpayers of the country of more intelligence, and evidence of the assurance which the distinguished gentleman of the Ways and Means Committee made to the country last year that there would be more intelligence applied to a revenue-raising measure in this present session of the Congress.

Mr. DOUGHTON rose.

Mr. DITTER. I referred to the words and quoted verbatim from the report of the distinguished chairman when he brought in the revenue bill of last year.

I now yield again to my distinguished colleague to ask him if he can point out when bringing in this tax bill, where, in these nuisance taxes is the degree of more intelligence that was promised by the Ways and Means Committee before the election of 1936 when they tried to put a sugar-coated pill over on the American people with respect to this revenue matter? Now I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The question of intelligence——

Mr. DITTER. Those are not my words; they are the gentleman's words.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Let me finish my statement, if the gentleman yields.

Mr. DITTER. I should be happy to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The question of the intelligence of the two parties and their capacity and trustworthiness to govern the country was submitted to the electorate last year, not to the gentleman, not to myself, and we had a very positive verdict as to the question of intelligence as judged between the Republican Party and the Democratic Party. We had a verdict, we had a referendum, and a judgment upon the record last fall, and we shall have another one a year from next fall.

Mr. DITTER. But, my dear sir, that still does not answer me as to the phrase "more intelligent." "More intelligent" is the phrase that is used here. The phrase "more intelligent" implies that last year's revenue bill did not come as a result of careful, painstaking study on the part of the Democratic Ways and Means Committee to bring out a justifiable tax bill; and you promised more intelligence this year. I am in no way castigating, I am in no way questioning the supreme degree of intelligence of the distinguished gentleman and his very able committee. I am asking for evidence to support the promise of "more intelligence" than you exercised last year. I should like to have evidence of that word "more." I should like my very able and distinguished colleague to point it out to me.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Nothing could be done that would convince the gentleman that anything that we would do would be more intelligent. That is the trouble; the gentleman wants to be judge and jury both on what is more intelligent.

Mr. DITTER. May I categorically ask the chairman whether he means to say that this nuisance tax is more intelligent than anything else that could be brought out in the way of a revenue bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We did not set any exact time. We have this entire Congress in which to deal with the tax question. The gentleman himself wants to be the judge of intelligence.

Mr. DITTER. Is that the gentleman's answer, then?

Mr. DOUGHTON. In other words, the difficulty about submitting the question of intelligence to the gentleman and his party is that he is so politically minded that his intelligence is overshadowed by political zeal.

Mr. DITTER. My dear distinguished sir, I want to know whether, when we have another tax bill, there will be an evidence of more intelligence?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is trying to be the judge of what is more intelligent.

Mr. DITTER. I am not in any way, sir; I am leaving that to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is what the gentleman is doing.

Mr. DITTER. I leave that entirely to the judgment and the confession of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I am asking the gentleman about this "evidence of more intelligence." If this is not it, when is the gentleman going to bring us something that will be an evidence of more intelligence?

Mr. DOUGHTON. This is much more intelligence than has ever been manifested by the gentleman and his party. There is no comparison. When we compare this with the intelligence exhibited by the gentleman's party, of course, it is more intelligent.

Mr. DITTER. The present resolution is before us because of the persistent policy of profligacy pursued by the administration now in power. Billions and billions of dollars have been squandered without regard to the taxpayers and without regard to the merit of the expenditures. These nuisance taxes are to saddle on the consumers the cost of New Deal extravagance. It is a pure sales tax—a sales tax that falls on the shoulders of the consumers of America. The responsibility for its continuance rests squarely on the shoulders of the majority. As you go to your people for their support, tell them that you forced upon them for a further period of 2 years the pleasure of paying for your extravagance. Tell them you favor Uncle Sam dipping into their pockets day by day as they make their purchases for their contribution. Tell the men of whom the President once so eloquently spoke, the men who pay taxes out of the sweat of their brow; tell the housewives and all who are required to watch the pennies for family needs; tell them that you are in favor and that you supported the bill to continue these consumer taxes.

As I have already pointed out, the promise made last year was that the tax question would be handled this year "more intelligently." That was the assurance of the Democratic Ways and Means Committee. Of course, it must be admitted that the statement was an unfortunate admission, or should it be said that it was a boastful promise. It implies that last year's tax bill was intelligently drawn.

That is a matter of opinion on which some of us do not agree with our spending specialists on the Democratic side of the House. The statement is at least an admission that more intelligence could have been shown than was evidenced last year. And it cannot be denied, nor has my challenge been answered, that the statement was a promise of the evidence of more intelligence; mark you, not a promise for intelligence but more intelligence than that which was shown last year. The reenactment of these consumers' taxes is the fulfillment of that promise.

By advocating this tax bill the majority claims that it has shown more intelligence. What a profound degree of mental effort has been shown? With what diligence and with what painstaking care and with what untiring endeavor more intelligence has been directed. What sleepless nights and early morning toil more intelligence must have required. All of us should sympathize with the majority in their poring over textbooks on taxation, in their cramming exercises, in their burning of midnight oil to present the reenactment of these nuisance taxes as an evidence of more intelligently dealing with the revenue question. Again, of course, this may represent more intelligently under brain-trust guidance, and someone has ventured the suggestion that more intelligently was only a facetious phrase to fool the people.

It is difficult to understand the philosophy which permits this bill to be called a more intelligent revenue measure. The only reasonable conclusion which can be reached is that the majority persists in its conviction that it can perpetuate itself on the theory that "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise." [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, taxes, taxes, taxes, taxes! More taxes, more taxes! More expenses, more expenses! More appropriations, more appropriations! That seems to be the thought that goes into the consideration of this measure by the House. [Applause.] You just do not use good sound judgment and common sense in spending, thus the taxes, taxes, taxes; yes, more taxes.

Let me call attention again to the statement of June 8 of the Treasury Department, which shows that the revenues this year up to June 8 were $4,577,412,885. The expenses were $7,121,468,000. The Government is in the red to the extent of $2,422,000,000. You on the Democratic side promised to balance the Budget in 1938. You promised economy. Your promises are certainly not taken seriously by the President and the Congress.

Members of Congress, just remember that you have appropriated up to this time, during the present Congress, over $8,000,000,000 for 1936, and the end is not in sight at this session. Think of it, $8,000,000,000 has been appropriated thus far. When will you ever get anywhere near balancing the Budget if you do not cut down the expenses of government? You can bring in a tax bill for $688,000,000 as you figure this one will bring in, but you will never approach balancing the Budget the way you are increasing the amount of expenditures three times faster than income is increased. That is the sad part of this Congress. You do not know how to economize, so far as Government expenditures are concerned. You do not know how to balance the Budget. You do not know how to consolidate bureaus. The Congress is not a responsible Congress. A committee has been formed with instructions to bring in a bill to consolidate and eliminate bureaus, but I venture the assertion that committee will not report during the present session of Congress. If it does not, God have pity on this country. You will wreck this Nation financially.

I told the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee a year ago I would vote for that tax bill if it had not contained that iniquitous undistributed income-tax proposition, which every member of the Ways and Means Committee today wants to change. I congratulate you on any effort to change that ridiculous tax bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this tax bill. Why? Not because I want it or because I like it. I do not. But because I have to try to increase the Government income, if possible, to meet the increased expenditures until the present Members of Congress on the majority side acquire sense enough to know we cannot go along and appropriate money for everything the bureaucrats want. May God help you Members of Congress see the errors of your way. I hope some of you on that side will oppose these big appropriation bills. I am going to vote for this bill because I think more of my country than I do of any votes I might receive in my district if I voted against it. Too many Members of Congress think of that first and the country after that.

Mr. Chairman, I do not like a tax bill and there are lots of things in here I would not vote for individually, but I am compelled to vote for it to save that grand Old Flag up there behind the Speaker's chair. [Applause.]

Let me try to drive this thought home: Every time someone brings in an appropriation bill from a department and wants you to pass it, let us get a little bit of common sense and a little American red blood in our veins and say: "Gentlemen, you have gone far enough, and we cannot give it to you"; we must economize in Government spending.

We must economize, I tell you. If we do that and do not bring in increased appropriations, eventually we might get some place, but we will never get any place if we do not carry out the policy emphasized in the Democratic platform of 1932, in which they promised, time after time, they were going to economize so far as Government expenditures were concerned.

The President of the United States and the past two Congresses have been the most extravagant set-up this country has ever known. Your appropriations for next year are now over $8,000,000,000. Why does not Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt do as he said he would do in his acceptance speech on July 2, 1932, and I quote:

> For 3 long years I have been going up and down this country preaching that government * * * costs too much. I shall not stop that preaching.

It seems as if the President of the United States has forgotten that preaching, and has also forgotten that he made such a statement. I further quote from Franklin D. Roosevelt's acceptance speech:

> I propose to you, my friends, that government * * * be made solvent and that the example be set by the President of the United States.

If there is any man in the history of the world that ever had a reputation for doing just the opposite than what he preached, Mr. Roosevelt certainly has that from his record of the past 5 years. Let me give you the facts to substantiate this statement: His deficit from March 1, 1933, to June 30, 1933, was $892,600,000; to June 30, 1934, $3,629,000,000; to June 30, 1935, $3,001,000,000; to June 3, 1936, $4,361,000,000; and estimated to June 30, 1937, $2,600,000,000; making a total of over $14,400,000,000.

Now, let me give you the greatest joke of all time—the statement made by Postmaster General Farley at Salt Lake City on August 1, 1934:

> You are having the most economical Federal administration you have had for years.

The joke is too serious to laugh at.

We need men in public office that are sound. We want to get rid of the political leeches; we want to stop playing politics in all departments of the Government. The civil service, which is supposed to be nonpolitical, is only a subterfuge under Mr. Farley's administration. If Mr. Roosevelt, since he is elected to be President until 1940, does not get sound and sane advisers, this country will never survive.

Mr. Farley wants the continuation of the 3-cent postage in this bill, which will amount to $122,000,000. The Post Office Department was $88,000,000 in the red last year. Cut out the 3-cent postage and Mr. Farley will have the Post Office Department $210,000,000 in the red. No wonder he wants the continuation of the 3-cent postage. It would show him up if not passed. His administration of the Post Office Department would show the inefficiency of his administration. Think of it—it would be $210,000,000 in arrears if it were not for the 3-cent postage.

CUT DOWN GOVERNMENT EXPENSES

People have been forced by oppressive laws and excessive taxes from other countries to seek new homes here in America. These pioneers of our country did not arrive with pockets bulging with money, not wet nursed by any bureaucracy, although they failed at home, they were willing to work, and they did succeed here.

Of course, there have always been failures who look for easy money. About the only source of easy money in this country now is through the New Deal administration here in Washington, and so everyone who is a misfit at home or has made a failure out of life now journeys here to Washington and puts the pressure on the New Deal and the bureaucrats to get on the Federal pay roll. And they do succeed.

We have nearly a million of Government employees on the rolls, not counting the "brain trusters", half of whom ought to be returned to their homes. Instead of passing new appropriations and tax bills, it is time we demobilize the bureaucratic army hanging like leeches to the Federal patronage trough, and enlist, if necessary, a few workmen willing to work their way through life instead of chiseling on their fellowman. Spend less, tax more, or bust.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, on December 24, 1936, the Secretary of the Treasury showed on his statement gold in the general fund inactive, $14,835,000. That was the first report we had of gold being purchased under the present plan of sterilization.

On June 8, 1937, we find that $14,000,000 has since grown to $878,000,000. Under date of December 22, 1936, the Secretary of the Treasury made an announcement with reference to the policy he would pursue so far as the purchase of gold was concerned. I hope every Member of the House will get this, because it is a new angle to the tax feature that has not been discussed today, and I have not heard it mentioned in recent discussions. He announced on December 22, 1936, that he proposed, whenever it was deemed advisable in the public interest to do so, to take appropriate action with respect to net additional acquisitions or release of gold by the Treasury Department. This was to be accomplished by the sale of additional public-debt obligations, the proceeds of which were to be used for the purchase of gold.

Mr. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, on his return from Europe, when he was talking the other day about this gold policy, stated:

> It is all in the hands of the Government and should not be talked about outside. It is a very delicate situation.

As I understand it, we are one branch of the Government so far as legislation, taxation, and buying gold are concerned, because we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make the purchase. I feel we should talk about it here.

Since we started this policy the value of the gold mines in South Africa alone have advanced in price from £70,000,000 to £400,000,000, or a net gain to them of $1,600,000,000 as a direct result of our gold-buying policy. All this in addition to their profit on sales of gold to us.

London press reports say Canada and South Africa are now proposing to withdraw their objections to a trade agreement between the United States and Great Britain provided we will continue to purchase gold at $35 an ounce from British provinces. June 9 the London News Chronicle says:

Sir John Simon intends to let the Americans go on carrying the baby, however big the baby may grow.

The Washington press, June 4, says:

President Roosevelt today said once more that the Government's gold policy will remain unchanged despite the continued heavy inflow from abroad. He denied all knowledge of a statement on gold from the nations of the tripartite monetary agreement and in forceful language advised his inquirers "not to worry about gold."

Coupled with yesterday's new borrowing, which indicates among other things that the Government's gold-purchase program will continue to make heavy drains on Treasury balances, the statement itself is expected to serve as a reassuring factor to the jittery London gold market.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Michigan 4 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. London is wondering just how long we can continue this policy. She takes the position that—

The whole world—

As said the city editor of the News Chronicle, of London—

now knows that there is not the slightest chance of any further increase in the dollar or sterling price of gold. Why, then, should anyone wish to go on holding gold in preference to dollars and pounds?

What does that mean? It means that if the Secretary of the Treasury is to continue his gold-buying policy the hoarders of gold throughout the world will dump as they have never dumped before their hoarded gold, and in addition they will continue to mine gold and ship it to us. If gold now is at top price, why hoard? Refer to the Treasury statement under most recent date, in which it is proposed to continue our gold program. If this is to be the policy, how are you going to balance the Budget next year, when you are buying gold at the rate of a billion six hundred million dollars a year? These purchases have not been considered in the figures which have been submitted here today. This policy of an open market on gold and our offer to take all gold offered us places our Budget in the hands of those who have "gold for sale." The gold changers have now taken us over.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Will the gentleman tell us why it is that within the last week England has raised the price of gold 9 cents plus per ounce in order to prevent its outflow?

Mr. CRAWFORD. My opinion, based upon the research work I have been doing on this question, is that Canada and South Africa want us to continue our gold policy. The gold market became very jittery here a few days ago when there was some talk of our discontinuing our policy. Pressure was put on the Bank of England and the British Exchequer to start purchasing gold and to raise the price so gold would go there for a few days instead of coming to the United States, to the end that some of the pressure would be taken off us to purchase the gold which was then being dehoarded in London at the rate of about $20,000,000 a day. The President reaffirmed our gold-buying policy, and since then we have issued or sold another half billion of tax-exempt bonds to buy more gold for the benefit of other countries.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Would the gentleman agree with me that evidently it was the agreed policy of the British Empire that the increase in price was for their benefit, to prevent the exportation of gold?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The increase in that price was for the specific benefit of Canada and South Africa, because the amount of gold which the British Empire, including Canada and South Africa, has shipped to us amounts to $1,742,000,000. Why would they not raise the price a few more cents in order to get us to continue this policy? We have a standing offer to buy all gold offered. London has not met our price. We are at the top.

I am in favor of balancing the Budget. In that respect, I voted against the $1,500,000,000 appropriation the other day and voted against the $350,000,000 appropriation a few days before that. I propose to continue to vote against these extravagant appropriations until I am eliminated from this House or until the Federal Budget is balanced. If my people do not like this policy, they know where they can get other men to send down here. The course we are following will wreck us, and there is no dodging the issue. The Members of the House know that. It is not necessary for me to stand up here as a new Member and try to tell you that; but any man who knows anything about the finances of the country should take this whole economic map and look at it. We can balance the Budget if we cut appropriations and get control of our gold policy. I favor such a step and not more taxes on our people.

Another thing: How are you going to diffuse this gold when you get through buying it? Then you will begin buying goods which are produced in other parts of the world and which will be shipped to us in return for the gold we ship back to them. They will thus profit on both ends of the trade and at our cost. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, during the consideration in committee of the resolution now before the House I tried my level best to amend the resolution to provide for an extension of the taxes known as nuisance taxes for but 1 year. I propose to offer an amendment later to accomplish this purpose.

The so-called nuisance taxes, in my estimation, are grossly unfair. Their continuance for a time beyond 1 year is absolutely without any justification whatever. Here is what the Congress and the Nation are faced with. If we extend these taxes for a period of 2 years, of course, we do not know what we may be confronted with after that time or when we may expect repeal of these taxes. However, if we amend the resolution and permit the extension of the so-called nuisance taxes for but 1 year, it means one thing for a certainty, that the promise we have had on more than one occasion that a comprehensive tax plan would be presented to the Congress will be realized.

Why in the world should two of our great industries—the automobile and oil and refining industries, which are so dependent upon the automobile industry for existence—be singled out to be taxed for practically three-fifths of the expected tax revenue in this bill for the year 1938? There is absolutely no justification for it. And it is not a nuisance tax in this instance, it is a downright discriminatory and burdensome tax amounting to $349,900,000.

I remember very distinctly talking over this matter of repeal with distinguished members of the Committee on Ways and Means in 1933, and I received assurance at that time that the extension of 2 years at that time would be the finale so far as this method of taxation was concerned. At the expiration of that time we extended the tax for 1 year, and then again extended it for another 2 years. Now we are facing an additional 2-year extension.

If we are to have a comprehensive, honest tax plan brought in here, there is only one way Members on both sides of the House can help to bring it about, and that is to stand by me on this amendment for the extension of the nuisance taxes for a period of but 1 year. Then, I assure you, the Committee on Ways and Means will go into a huddle late this fall and early this winter and, with the advice of its experts, will bring in a comprehensive, uniform, general, and just plan of taxation which will take care of this situation. There is absolutely no reason why the oil industry, the gas industry, the refining industry, and the automobile industry should be singled out and penalized by this or any other Congress.

I am mindful this is not entirely our fault. We have perhaps inherited this method of taxation. However, we are to blame for retaining these unjustified nuisance taxes. I hold it is high time we got away from them.

Whom do these taxes affect? Not necessarily or directly the automobile industry, which is centered largely in my

State, because when the manufacturer pays the tax he passes it on to every purchaser of a car within your districts. For this reason the tax is borne by the purchaser of an automobile and not by the manufacturer.

There is no reason in the world why this administration should insist upon maintaining this tax any longer.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman tell me whether or not the committee has given any consideration to the advisability of increasing the gift and inheritance taxes to take the place of these nuisance taxes and also decentralize some of the enormous wealth in the country?

Mr. DINGELL. I have no knowledge that there has been any special consideration given to that particular question, although the question was considered during the preparation of the last tax bill which was brought in here during the last session.

The anticipated revenue for 1938 from gasoline and oil taxes is $237,300,000, and the anticipated tax from the automobile industry is $112,600,000, out of a total of $502,000,000.

This is purely and simply a sales tax. If we are going to go in for a sales tax, Mr. Chairman, I believe the committee should go into a huddle and bring out a uniform and general sales tax instead of penalizing one industry. The automobile industry has led the Nation in recovery. Why should it be penalized or why should we try to penalize it? Why should we try to drag it back into the doldrums? If we need this revenue—and I feel certain we do—let us tax some other available source. Why not go in for a comprehensive study of the entire tax structure instead? We have been working under a hodgepodge system that is absolutely wrong. We ought to go in for a careful consideration and study of the matter; we should put our tax experts to work. And I understand they are at work now, but we have no assurance of a new tax bill unless you go along with me on the amendment which I propose. Change the provisions of this resolution to 1 year instead of 2 years and we will get some action. We will get a new tax bill, and I may say to my friends on this side, as well as on the other side, you need not fear the political effect of bringing out a tax bill in a campaign year. Personally, I am willing to take my chances with my constituents at any time on a tax bill. I do not care a continental rap whether we bring it out in 1937 or 1938, in an off year or election year, if it is a just plan and if we must have the revenue. If the Government renders a decent, honest service to the taxpayers for the money spent, I am quite ready to vote for a tax bill at any time and shall make no apologies for doing so.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, the issue that confronts us today is not whether the payment of taxes is pleasant or a nuisance but whether we are willing to do what we can here today to protect and preserve the financial integrity of our Government.

I find in the minority report a sentence, in the second paragraph, which reads:

> The present proposed extension constitutes a third breach of faith on the part of the administration.

But in the next to the last paragraph my colleagues from the minority side state:

> This, however, could not be sincerely done in view of the acute financial condition of the Treasury.

Our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], for whom I have great admiration, said, with better grace than I could possibly say it, what I had in mind to say to my friends on the Republican side: "I will vote for this resolution today." "I would rather", said he, "protect my country than get a few votes in my district." "I", said he, "owe a duty to that flag." I am confident that, regardless of what my friends on that side of the aisle may put in the RECORD, when the time comes to protect the financial soundness of their country it is not a Democratic country, it is not a Republican country, but it is our country; they will vote with us in doing whatever is necessary to accomplish that purpose.

I am not going to call the names of the 49 on that side of the aisle who voted against the appeal that some of us made here just a few days ago to keep down relief expenditures. They voted to increase by 50 percent the report of the subcommittee that $1,000,000,000 was not only a sufficient amount but a liberal amount.

I wish now to read a letter just received by special messenger from the Acting Director of the Budget, which shows the absolute necessity for the continuation of the five-hundred-and-odd million dollars we will raise through the continuance of these emergency taxes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Before my friend starts in on that very interesting discussion, may I insert for the RECORD the figures I have just obtained from the Director of the Budget with regard to expenditures and receipts up to June 9?

Expenditures, $7,019,253,164.39; receipts, $4,597,401,047.90; or an excess of expenditures over receipts of $2,421,852,116.49.

This is in substantiation of the statement I made with respect to an anticipated deficit of $2,600,000,000 for the present fiscal year.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I quote from the letter just received from the Budget Bureau:

> Reference is made to your letter of June 7, 1937, in which you request certain information relative to revised estimates of revenues for 1938, together with a statement of appropriations for that year.
> There is enclosed a copy of House Document No. 234, Seventy-fifth Congress, which contains under date of April 20, 1937, the latest statement of the President regarding estimated receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1938. It will be noted that the total receipts are estimated at $6,906,000,000. This amount includes all taxes levied under the Social Security Act, as well as about $500,000,000 estimated revenue from temporary taxes expiring June 30 or July 31, 1937, extension of which is now pending before the Congress. The expenditures are estimated at $7,324,000,000, exclusive of any provision for statutory debt retirement, thus showing a net deficit of $418,000,000.
> I am also sending you herewith a summary of the estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1938 submitted to Congress by the Bureau of the Budget and appropriations for that fiscal year as carried by the several appropriation acts in their present status.
> You will note that the President has submitted estimates of appropriations to the Congress aggregating $6,982,694,470.25, on which Congress has taken some action and reduced to $6,848,798,613.63, a reduction of nearly $134,000,000. You will also note that other estimates of appropriations have been or will be submitted aggregating $631,470,020, on which there has been as yet no congressional action.

According to that letter, if we continue the revenue of approximately $500,000,000 that we receive from this emergency tax, we will still have a deficit estimated for 1938 at $418,000,000. That depends, however, upon the future action of this House in not increasing over Budget recommendations the pending bills for a public-buildings program, for the nonmilitary purposes for the War Department, for flood relief, and various other activities in the last deficiency appropriation bill. If we increase those estimates, the deficit will be more than $418,000,000.

I also call attention to the fact that that letter stated that the $6,906,000,000 of revenue includes the taxes under the Social Securities Act. It should be apparent to you what that means. We passed an act to impose a special tax for a special purpose. So far as I can ascertain, we have appropriated only one item to carry out the purposes for which the act was passed, the $500,000,000 item of appropriation for the purchase of Government bonds in the Treasury Department appropriation bill, and we have the pay-roll taxes going into the Treasury of about $325,000,000 in 1936, $525,000,000 for 1937, and it is estimated we will have about $700,000,000 for 1938.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, that is a little over a billion and a half dollars that will go into our Treasury for a specific purpose. Are we going to appropriate for general purposes money that we do not have and take it out of the fund of these workingmen on whom we have imposed a tax for a specific purpose?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Would the gentleman be opposed to an amendment which would say that this act shall not become operative until the inactive gold fund in the Treasury Department is used to defray Federal expenditures?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I would be opposed to that.

Mr. DIES. Would the gentleman explain why?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have not time to go into that; that is a technical question.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman believe that we are justified in using this gold that we are buying with tax-exempt bonds and then imposing nuisance taxes upon the people?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The purpose of buying the gold bonds, as the gentleman knows, was upon the theory of Professor Warren.

Mr. DIES. I am not talking about that gold, not about the gold to stabilize the currency, but this new idea of buying gold to prevent credit inflation, sterilizing the gold.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We are just carrying out now a policy that we started of giving a boost to commodity prices by increasing the price of gold. That was Professor Warren's theory, and it worked to a certain extent.

I have in my hand a number of regular appropriation items which I have not the time to read. There have been no major disputes concerning any one of them, and they are one hundred and thirty million less than the Budget recommended. Nobody has pointed out, except on the relief expenditure, how we can make a major saving.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I understand that money appropriated for social security has been diverted from social security for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I did not say that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand that to be the case. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I say that in 1938 there should be in the Treasury a billion and a half dollars under that act, and we have appropriated $500,000,000, and we must put taxes on enough to save to these workingmen that other billion dollars. We have not got it to use. That presents our financial picture in a very serious light. We owe a duty to them, and I am looking for my Republican friends to join with me in putting on enough taxes to protect those workingmen.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It seems too bad if the money has been diverted from social security purposes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I did not say it had been diverted. I say we must not spend and use it as if it were in the general fund. The following tables show the Budget recommendations, the items that have been disposed of, those that have been acted on by the House, and those yet to be acted on by the House. These tables indicate the absolute necessity for the revenue to be produced by the pending resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

IDLE GOLD

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, heretofore whenever the Government possessed gold, it would issue gold certificates, deposit those gold certificates with the Federal Reserve bank and receive Federal Reserve notes which were placed in the Treasury's general fund and used for general purposes. Since December, however, the gold that has been acquired has been set aside and not used. In order to set that gold aside it has been necessary to issue more tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds to the amount of the idle gold. Today we have outstanding in that inactive gold fund $878,001,200.77.

SEVENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS' INTEREST ON IDLE GOLD

The interest on the bonds necessary to sterilize this gold amounts to $70,000 a day. The question I want answered by this Committee, and I hope some member of the Committee will answer it is, why we should levy these nuisance taxes, which will cost the people a million and a half dollars a day for every business day, and continue to pay $70,000 a day interest on these tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds in order to permit that gold to remain idle. It does not make sense to me. Possibly it does to somebody else and I would like to know the reason why. Of course, if we need the idle gold and need these taxes too, that is an answer, but certainly we should use that idle gold. That gold does not include the $11,000,000,000 and more in gold that is held by the Treasury. It occurs to me that this gold could be used.

COMMITTEE SHOULD SEE THAT GOLD IS USED

I think the Ways and Means Committee, in its future hearings, if it was not permitted to do so this time, should insist that this Government, the Secretary of the Treasury and all connected with this, should use our idle gold, unused, unallocated, unpledged. It is money in the Treasury, laid aside, upon which we are paying interest instead of using it. So I am hopeful that in the future deliberations of the Committee on Ways and Means it will give consideration to this enormous amount of money before it levies any more taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true that since last December, or during the past 6½ months, we have thus purchased nearly $850,000,000 worth of gold through general-fund expenditures?

Mr. PATMAN. Eight hundred and seventy-eight million.

Mr. CRAWFORD. At that rate, then, we must include in our budget in the future, if that policy is to be continued, $1,600,000,000 for the purchase of gold alone. Is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, when the gold revaluation bill was passed, authority was given to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of creating a stabilization fund to purchase and use gold to stabilize American currency on foreign exchange. There was not any authority in that law to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire gold for the purpose of stabilizing or preventing credit inflation. The gold that my colleague [Mr. PATMAN] is talking about is not gold purchased for the purpose of stabilizing our currency but it is in pursuance to a suggestion by Mr. Eccles, as I recall, that it was necessary to sterilize this gold in order to prevent banks from accumulating gigantic reserves upon which credit could be issued.

I submit that it is absolutely unjustifiable for the Treasury of the United States to issue tax-exempt bonds and acquire gold, not for the purpose of carrying out the Gold Revaluation Act, not for the purpose of stabilizing currency, but to carry out some idea with reference to credit inflation.

Let me tell you what we are doing. In the first place, when we issue these tax-exempt securities, regardless of what anyone may tell you, we are offering an incentive to those who have capital to withdraw that capital from private industry and put it into securities. Figures were published a few days ago that a man who has a million dollars can buy tax-exempt bonds and derive a greater return from those bonds than if he took the million dollars and invested it in an industry that would produce continuing and productive labor. Under that situation you are defeating all of the objectives of the income, gift, and inheritance taxes.

Talk about distributing wealth; talk about decentralizing gigantic combinations of wealth, when you offer an avenue of escape that enables a man who is being subjected to these taxes to escape all of your efforts by hiding behind tax-exempt bonds. Some people will deny that. Recently I had occasion to read an exhaustive and illuminating book dealing specifically with the whole question, and as far as I am concerned I am convinced by absolute figures that in times when income taxes, gift taxes, and inheritance taxes are high, those who have wealth can more profitably invest that wealth in tax-exempt securities. Now, who is going to pay this back?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in the short time allotted to me I wish to make a brief statement about the renewal and extension of the excise tax on copper. I am interested in other sections of the bill, but this one is of vital interest to me and all the people of the Southwest. We placed in the revenue bill of 1932 an excise tax of 4 cents per pound on foreign-produced copper. That act would have expired in 1934 but was extended for 1 year by Presidential proclamation. The tax was included in our bill of 1935 and will expire at the end of this month unless we take prompt action.

In my judgment, this legislation has actually saved the copper industry in this country. There is more reason today for its continuance than ever before. Those in this country engaged in the business cannot compete with cheap peon labor in foreign countries, enormous foreign ore reserves, and the subsidizing of the industry by many foreign nations unless we have some measure of protection.

Five years ago the copper industry was at the lowest ebb in its history. Mines, smelters, and refineries all over the country were closed down. Thousands of men had been left without employment. Many companies were either in bankruptcy or on the verge of it. This country was flooded with large surplus stocks of foreign copper produced with peon labor that was not being paid more than 25 cents a day.

I have some personal knowledge of the situation because in my home city of El Paso there is a large smelter, as well as a fine, modern copper refinery. These great plants were practically closed until the present tax law became operative, resulting in the advanced price of copper. Today these industries are running almost to capacity and providing work at good wages for hundreds of men who were formerly on relief. This same condition prevails in Arizona, New Mexico, and throughout the mining section. When the smelters are doing a good business it means the mines are being worked, which provides even more employment, to say nothing of business for the railroads, truck lines, merchants, jobbers, and a greatly increased purchasing power along all lines. The mining business is almost the lifeblood of the great Southwest.

I do not contend the excise tax is the sole cause of the revival of the industry, but it has certainly been the largest contributing factor. A healthy condition has been brought about because it has reserved the United States market to our own producers without increasing the price of the metal to our own consumers. The tax last year produced more than $2,000,000 in revenue; but, more than that, it revitalized and stabilized one of our greatest industries. Large surplus stocks that had been "dumped" into this country from foreign nations have been liquidated. The duty on foreign copper has not hurt our own people. It is true the price is better, as it should be, but is in line with the world price which has been brought about in part by world conditions. The tax was originally imposed to equalize the cost of production at home and abroad, which is in line with good Democratic doctrine. Opposition to this tax comes largely from those outside the United States who want to work peon labor and cannot sell their cheap foreign-produced copper in this country or those Americans who have made foreign investments in copper mines.

I hope, as the chairman of the committee says, that the time is not far distant when these strictly nuisance taxes can be done away with. I am opposed to a sales tax, and especially to a tax on gasoline, toilet articles, fur clothing, and other items in the bill, which are more or less a sales tax. I am sure that just as soon as the financial condition of the Treasury will permit, these taxes will be repealed. But this tax on copper is neither a sales or nuisance tax. It is only sound business that will provide a measure of protection for a great American industry and give employment to thousands of good citizens at fair wages and working under decent conditions. I feel sure that this provision of the bill will receive the almost unanimous support of the Members of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK].

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this bill because I have advocated on numerous occasions in this House that we ought to increase taxes or decrease expenses. Everybody knows that the taxes that we are collecting each year are not sufficient to pay the expenses of the Government. I want to give you a little picture of the real tax situation and I want to make the prediction that we do not know anything yet about what taxes we are going to have to pay.

I think everybody knows, and it is an acknowledged fact, that the per capita debt of this country is about $270. In my home State of Ohio, in 1936, we paid to the Federal Treasury $189,000,000. Had we paid the amount of taxes we should have paid in order to balance the Budget, Ohio would have been compelled to pay $400,000,000. The State of Ohio for State purposes collected last year $226,000,000, and the political subdivisions in Ohio, the cities, the towns, the townships, and the school districts collected about $375,000,000. So, if the people of my State—and I assume that this is typical of every other State—had paid the taxes that we will some day be compelled to pay, the people of Ohio would have paid last year about $1,000,000,000.

The income of Ohio in 1936 according to the best information I have at hand was about $3,000,000,000. I want you to think of this for a minute: That the percentage of income for taxes that the people of Ohio had to pay last year was about 33⅓. When anybody states that we can defeat this bill without having some substitute, it seems to me he has made a foolish statement.

I would repeal all of these nuisance taxes if I could, but I would substitute something more sound for it. I am assured by our committee and by the taxing officials of the Government that before the next session of Congress adjourns in 1938 we shall be able to outline, define, and pass a real tax bill which will probably make it possible to repeal such nuisance taxes.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. Then the gentleman would favor an extension of these taxes for 1 year rather than for 2?

Mr. LAMNECK. I would favor an extension of the taxes for 1 year, because I am assuming that when we pass a new tax bill it will be possible to repeal these taxes. Whether that will happen or not I do not know, but I cannot understand how my Republican brethren, who I am sure believe that the Budget ought to be balanced, could advise anybody on either side of this aisle to vote against this tax bill without having something to take its place. That to me is a silly proposition.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Even though we extend these taxes for 2 years, when this real sound tax bill, of which the gentleman speaks, comes in at the next session there will be nothing in the world to prevent us from repealing every tax levied in this bill. In fact, we could do so before this session adjourned if the Congress desired.

Mr. LAMNECK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I have said about all I have to say. I urge the Members to pass this bill substantially in the form in which it was presented by the committee. I advocated, as the chairman and members of the committee know, certain changes in this bill, but I do not think I shall press them, even though I would like to change the bill in certain features.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, we were all greatly interested at the beginning of this debate in the remarks made by our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. He gave us a very complete résumé of the history of taxation and of the tax laws extending back for a good many years. My hearing is none too sharp. Perhaps his voice is none too loud. Between these two difficulties I was not able to hear much explanation, if any, of the pending bill. He made some complimentary remarks, facetious, I am sure, but complimentary remarks about me. It may not be out of place, therefore, for me to make a few references to some of his remarks as I heard them.

He said he had never heard the gentleman from Massachusetts say anything about reduction of a tariff. He is absolutely correct in that statement, he never has, and he never will, as long as either, or both of us, remain in this House.

A reduction of tariff rates would ruin this country. We have talked about that and discussed it so much that it is a waste of breath to bring it up again. At every committee hearing where anyone interested in business appears testimony is submitted that the tariff reductions proposed and carried out by the reciprocal-trade treaties are absolutely ruining the business of this country. We had some of that testimony only recently. Of course, the administration and the Democratic Members deny it, but I prefer the practical information and testimony of men in business rather than the idle talk of men like Dr. Sayre in the Secretary of State's office. I will not make any motion to strike down the tariff rates, because they are the bulwark of American agriculture, labor, and industry today.

What little reference the gentleman made to the bill at all was aimed at the minority views as expressed in the report. He could not say much about the majority views because all the majority did was to fill up the report with the provisions of law that are being extended and with tables and letters. They did not make any argumentative statement in justification of the extension. We did make a statement, and we will back every word that appears in the minority view as set forth in the report on the resolution.

The gentleman referred to old-age pensions and connected me with a certain movement that has been going on for some time. I am going to repeat to him exactly what I said last October during the campaign, and I hold in my hand the statement I issued in the campaign. I will tell the gentleman exactly what I said:

> I have been interrogated by those interested in old-age security and have made a very definite statement about it which I desire briefly to supplement here. My position is in no way new, nor has it changed. I was a delegate to the Republican National Convention and voted for the platform which contains a plank on security. It advocates:
> 1. A pay-as-you-go policy, which requires of each generation the support of the aged and the determination of what is just and adequate.
> 2. Every American citizen over 65 should receive the supplementary payment necessary to provide a minimum income sufficient to protect him or her from want.

Mr. Chairman, I am for the platform indicated above and I am for aid to the aged over 65. The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina and his associates on the Ways and Means Committee refused to give the people of this country an opportunity to be heard before the Ways and Means Committee on the old-age pension proposition. In my opinion, when a large number of American citizens ask for a hearing, we should grant it. I am also for that proposition.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will be very brief. I do not want to get into an argument with him today because my time is very short. When we get going he says I bellow, and I guess I can bellow louder than he can, but go to it, Brother DOUGHTON.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I want to state that doubtless there will be some consideration given.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Let me complete my statement.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. There will be consideration given to the present social-security law, for which the gentleman voted.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is fine. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that. But when is he going to give consideration to the amendments offered by the Social Security Board? Where are they today?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Just as soon as I get to it. The gentleman will find out where they are in plenty of time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Have not those amendments been sent to the gentleman?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have not read them myself.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not asking whether the gentleman has read them. Has not the gentleman had them for a week or 10 days?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; but I have not had time to read them.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is a most important matter now pending before Congress and it has been pending since the Congress began. Why does not the gentleman take time to read them? If those amendments are in the gentleman's possession, he should let us have them for our information.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not have the time to go around and play golf.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will read them if given the opportunity. The gentleman has them in his pocket and he has had them for some time. The gentleman has no interest in the old folks. He would rather follow instructions from the White House as to what to do here. He would rather pick out these tax evasions covering yachts, and so forth. He is in a hurry on that, but he does not care a rap for the old people of the country. He has no time. Let us take a little time. Give the amendments to me and I will read them and I will publish them if the gentleman gives me a chance. Put them in the RECORD. If the gentleman has not the time to read them himself, let him put them in the RECORD and let us see them. We would like to know about those social-security amendments the gentleman has been carrying around for 2 weeks or more.

Mr. Chairman, where has the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee gone? I thought I was having a little argument with him. A one-sided argument is no good. He has run out on us.

Another thing the gentleman talked about this morning, was his "hope" about balancing the Budget. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] gave some figures on the Budget. They do not indicate that there is much hope of balancing the Budget when every year the Government is running behind to the extent of two and one-half billion dollars or more. It is a great "hope" to go backward instead of forward. There could not be a better illustration, if they are sincere in that hope of balancing the Budget, than the old expression, "Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think I have a solution for balancing the Budget.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman better tell the Democrats on the majority side.

Mr. KNUTSON. Get the President to autograph 6,000,000 copies of the Democratic campaign book and put them out at $250 apiece. That will secure some $1,500,000,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why not get more than that? They need all they can get and more if they are going to balance the Budget.

Mr. KNUTSON. That suggestion does not cost a thing.

Mr. TREADWAY. The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee made another remark this morning. He said that the Congress made the appropriations. The gentleman knows that is not true. We do not do the legislating here.

Why, we have not had before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I doubt if there has been before any other committee, a bill which has not first been passed on at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue and sent up here. They have written most of the legislation down there, of course.

Then the gentleman states there was no unfaithful action on the part of the Democrats in regard to the extension of these taxes, which were originally imposed for only 2 years. I hold in my hand a report of the Committee on Ways and Means on the revenue bill of 1932, and I read the following:

> The special excise taxes provided for in the bill are, in most instances, automatically to go out of operation on June 30, 1934. It is the hope of your committee that the financial condition of the country at that time will warrant a corresponding revision of income and estate taxes, provided for in this bill as an emergency measure.

Mr. Chairman, if those words were not intended to encourage the American people to think these taxes would expire in 2 years, I do not understand plain English. It is just as much a promise the Democratic Party should have kept as many of the platform planks they have made and have not pretended to keep. They are all in the same category. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this extension resolution constitutes the third breach of faith on the part of the administration with reference to these nuisance taxes.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] referred to how necessary it was to get this extension passed immediately, because these taxes expire the 30th of June. Why, we have had all winter here to take up this extension resolution. The Committee on Ways and Means was without business for weeks at a time. We did not have meetings—that is, not that we of the minority were called in on—anyway. Possibly the gentlemen of the majority met by themselves, but the Committee on Ways and Means, as such, did not meet for weeks at a time. Why could not we have had this matter up at that time, particularly in view of the fact that Mr. Morgenthau and the President recommended it at the opening of the session.

I was referring to haste. They are in such haste now that we have not had a hearing of any kind open to the public on these tremendous taxes. Are not the people entitled to be heard if they are going to be charged up with $600,000,000 of taxes? No; the Democrats call in some understrapper from the Treasury Department, who tells them to put it through, and that is the end of it.

The real reason for this measure being before us is this phrase which I find in the statement of Mr. Morgenthau contained in the letter to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means transmitting the President's recommendations:

> In view of the Treasury's urgent need of the substantial revenues which these temporary taxes are producing.

They urgently need the money. Why? Because they have not followed out their promises to the American people to reduce the expenditures of government by 25 percent. That was the party pledge of 1932, and practically the same pledge was made in 1936. Instead of this 25-percent reduction, what do we find the Democratic Party has done? It has increased expenditures 50 percent above the 1932 level.

These are facts, and this is the reason Mr. Morgenthau says there is "urgent need" for money in the Treasury. I will vote to reduce all expenditures that we can possibly reduce within reason without curtailing the essential activities of the Government. When this is done you will need neither these nuisance taxes nor any other addition to the tax roll. Why, you have been led to think you are going to have a tax bill next year. If there is, it will not be a bill which the Democratic Party will want to go before the American people on next November, at least if it is to be a bill to reduce the deficiency in the Budget.

I enjoyed the letter we received from the chairman of the Committee on Rules this morning. The gentleman samples out one item, fur; but his argument against that tax is just as appropriate for every item in this nuisance-tax bill. This is the third time the so-called temporary nuisance taxes have been extended. Why try to fool the people any longer? Why not say you want to make these taxes permanent?

There is a reason why the pending resolution provides for a 2-year extension instead of 1 year.

That reason is this: In case it is found desirable to continue these taxes beyond June 30, 1938, a resolution providing for only a 1-year extension at this time would bring up the tax issue next year just before the congressional elections.

You Democrats want to avoid that for good and sufficient reasons.

On the other hand, if it is desired to let these taxes drop next year, a 2-year extension at this time will enable you Democrats to come forward next year with a repeal bill just before the election and take credit for lifting the tax burden from the poor.

Mr. Chairman, I intend, when the time comes, to offer a motion to recommit this measure to restore the 2-cent rate on first-class postage. The extension of the 3-cent postage rate is the most absurd extension in the whole bill. It goes all down the line, affecting everybody who uses a postage stamp. The first-class postage at present is paying over $120,000,000 in excess of the actual cost of its handling and transportation. There is no justification for the present 3-cent rate.

Mr. Chairman, on June 7, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] made a speech before the North Carolina Merchants' Association on the subject of taxes. This speech was inserted in the Appendix of the daily RECORD for June 8.

It is a rather interesting speech, and I would like to use a few extracts from it as a text for my remarks here today on the nuisance-tax resolution.

Among other things, the gentleman referred to—

> The growing inclination of legislators to soften the impact of additional tax levies by hiding and intermingling the tax itself in the purchase price of goods.

Mr. Chairman, with the possible exception of the levies on gasoline and theater admissions, these nuisance taxes are of that variety. They are hidden in the increased cost of what consumers have to pay for the goods on which the tax is imposed. These taxes are imposed in the first instance on the manufacturer or producer, but they are passed on by him to the jobber, and the jobber passes them on to the retailer, and the retailer passes them on to the consumer. They are included in the purchase price without being separately listed.

The administration prefers to use this hidden form of taxation rather than direct levies so that the great masses of our people will not realize how much of the cost of government they are being asked to bear. It lets the people believe that the taxes to pay for New Deal waste and extravagance are all coming from the wealthy. Of course, that is all nonsense. The people at large are paying the bill all along the line.

The gentleman from North Carolina concedes this in his speech to which I have referred.

He admits that the impression has been created that the ultrawealthy are paying the greater part of our taxes, but says emphatically:

> This is far from true. Even if it were desired to lay the bulk of the tax burden on their shoulders it would be impossible to carry out such a plan, for the fact is that there is not enough income from wealth in the top brackets alone to provide the necessary revenue even if it were all taken in taxes.

He then goes on to say:

> It is obvious that the great middle class of American citizens is now bearing, and must continue to bear, the bulk of the tax burden.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the gentleman from North Carolina make this admission, because it is what I have been contending all along. I hope his speech will be given wide publicity throughout the country, so that the people will get from the highest authority the statement that they are really bearing the major part of the tax burden. I think it would be well if the Republican Party circulated the gentleman's speech as a campaign document. It contains just the information which we wanted to get to the people about taxes.

Let me quote another passage from the gentleman's speech. He says:

Experience has taught us that the fairest method of taxation is that which is based on ability to pay.

The nuisance taxes which the pending resolution seeks to continue are not based on ability to pay. Hence we must conclude that they are unfair. Being consumption taxes, they naturally fall heavier on the poor than on the rich. There is no graduation in the rates. Every man who buys a gallon of gasoline pays the same tax, whether he is a millionaire or a day laborer. The machinist's son pays the same tax on a baseball bat as does the son of the richest man in town. The same tax is hidden in the price of a tube of toothpaste or a cake of toilet soap, whether it is purchased by millionaire or pauper. So it cannot be said that nuisance taxes are levied on the basis of ability to pay.

The gentleman from North Carolina, in the speech to which I have referred, stated that legislators failed in their duty unless they strove to distribute the tax burden as equitably as possible and to give the taxpayer "his money's worth in the spending of his tax dollar."

That is an amusing statement to come from the gentleman from North Carolina, who three times has voted to continue these nuisance taxes and who has voted for all the spending schemes which the President has sent up here to be rubber-stamped.

On the other hand, it would seem that we of the Republican minority have been performing a distinct public service by protesting against the continuance of this unfair method of taxation and by calling attention to the waste and extravagance of the administration. However, until the electorate gives us a sufficient representation on this side of the House, our protestations will be in vain and the Democratic majority will continue to permit the taxpayer's dollar to be wasted and squandered and his future income mortgaged for years to come.

Mr. Chairman, this tax bill would be wholly unnecessary if the President had carried out his promise to reduce expenditures. In fact, it would be unnecessary if he had merely refrained from increasing expenditures over the 1932 level, when it cost only five billions to run the Government.

According to the most recently revised estimates of the President our total revenues in 1938 are estimated at $6,906,000,000. This means that had the President not increased expenditures we would now be looking forward to a surplus in the Treasury next year of nearly two billions.

With a few scratches of his pen the President could easily save the entire amount raised by the nuisance taxes if he would merely eliminate a few items of unnecessary expenditure. He could save hundreds of millions more by eliminating waste and extravagance. There are opportunities for savings on every hand. But instead he has continually asked for more and more taxes, without making any effort to save or to get value received for the taxpayer's dollar.

Mr. Chairman, the name of former Secretary of the Treasury Mills has frequently been mentioned here today. Let me call your attention to the statement which he made before the Ways and Means Committee in 1932, which I think is particularly apropos today. He said:

I cannot overemphasize the importance of retrenchment. Without real economy there can be no balanced Budget. We are fully justified in calling on the people to make further sacrifice in order to supply their Government with adequate revenue, but—

And this is what I want to call particular attention to, Mr. Chairman—

but we are only justified in making this call if at the same time we eliminate every unnecessary expenditure, and that just as enforced economy prevails in every home in the land, so must it be observed in every operation of the Federal Government.

I fully subscribe to that admirable statement, Mr. Chairman.

I am absolutely opposed to adding any more to the tax burden, or to continuing the nuisance taxes, until the administration first makes a determined effort to balance expenditures within revenues. After that, it will be time to talk taxes, but not until then.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to continue this discourse indefinitely, but I realize it has been a long day, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, after the bluster and storm which emanated from Massachusetts has passed, perhaps we can now get down to a consideration of this bill.

The time is limited and many demands have been made for time, and of necessity I must only ask your indulgence very briefly. I shall endeavor to confine my remarks to a consideration of the bill now pending before the Committee.

It is interesting to observe the attitude assumed by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee and other minority Members who have expressed themselves on this measure. We have been hearing day in and day out the appeal made by these gentlemen to balance the Federal Budget and to see to it that the Federal revenues and Federal expenses are brought into balance, and yet today we have an excellent opportunity presented to take a very definite step in that direction, a step which the President of the United States says is essential, and we find them here opposing this measure.

The pending resolution is in response to the message of the President of the United States of January 8, 1937, in which he definitely recommends and requests the extension of the present excise taxes, and it is for that purpose that the pending resolution is now presented to the House for consideration. I commend to the Members of the House the message of the President and also the report of the Ways and Means Committee on the pending resolution.

If the temporary taxes and the temporary increased rates or decreased exemptions as provided under existing law, as well as the temporary increased rates on first-class mail matter, are permitted to lapse at this time, the Treasury faces a total annual loss of revenue of nearly $650,000,000.

You will bear in mind that all of the present excise taxes are sought to be extended for a period of 2 years by the pending resolution. By reference to page 3 of the committee report, Members can readily see the specific items covered by this resolution and the amount of revenue that has been yielded by these items and the estimated revenue that will be yielded during the year 1938. It will be observed that taxes expiring on June 30, 1937, total $372,310,000. Those taxes expiring on July 31 of this year total about $112,000,000, making a total of about $502,000,000. Then on page 4 of the committee report it will be observed that certain taxes, subject to change in rate or base, after June 30, 1937, yield about $41,000,000. Certain other items sought to be continued by the pending resolution will amount to about $44,000,000. In the letter presented by the Acting Postmaster General it is shown that an extension of the present 3-cent postage rate on first-class mail, other than local mail, will yield between $80,000,000 and $90,000,000, and by considering these various items it will be seen that a total amount of approximately $650,000,000 will be yielded by the extension of these taxes.

It has been indicated here that some gentlemen do not like this particular tax on the other particular tax. I believe we can all readily agree that if we had our preference about the matter we would like to see all of these excise taxes which have been popularly termed "nuisance taxes" repealed at the earliest possible moment. I shall not go into detail, but explanation has already been given as to the origin of these taxes under the Republican administration in 1932. It was my privilege to be a Member here then and to see the enactment of these excise taxes. They have been continued from then on down until now. I feel sure we are all anxious to see them eliminated as soon as possible, yet the President of the United States states to us that it is essential for us to continue these excise taxes or else provide other revenues to take the place of the amount yielded by them.

It is now definitely recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, which appears in the report of the committee on this resolution, that the extension should be for a period of 2 years because, as is pointed out there, it is not known definitely whether the Government can get along without this revenue or not; but, certainly, we can all rest in the assurance of the fact that if it is found we can get along without this revenue or any part of it, we will be in session and we can repeal the items we can do without as readily as we can extend them. So, certainly, it is within the control of the Congress as to whether or not these taxes are carried on.

It will be seen that this list of excise taxes includes many items that are objectionable, perhaps, to all of us. Certainly, we take no pleasure in levying the taxes embraced in the list of items which includes taxes on gasoline, matches, soap, and many of the articles that are recognized as necessities of life, but it is necessary to provide this revenue in order to finance this Government of ours.

The President has recommended that these taxes be continued. The responsibility rests upon him to fashion the financial policies of the Government. For my part I deem it is my duty and my responsibility to support him in that effort and to go along with the administration on this important measure.

Reference has been made here to the fur tax. We have had that matter before us all along, year after year, when this matter came under consideration. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has shown diligence with reference to that item. Many members of the Committee on Ways and Means have shown diligence and great interest in that particular item. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN], the ranking majority member of the committee, has been diligent all of the time with reference to that item, and it has been due to his efforts and the very high esteem in which he is held by his colleagues on the committee that we have made changes three different times on that particular item; but I say to you frankly that as for my part, as long as we levy taxes on these necessaries of life, such as matches that a man has to use to start his fire in his home in the morning, and soap that he has to use to wash his face and hands, and many other items here, for my part I am not willing to take the tax off furs, which I consider a luxury of life. I believe anybody able to pay $500 or $600 for a fur coat is able to pay the tax which was originally imposed, amounting to about $50 or $60, to the Government on that coat. The tax itself is more than I ever paid for a coat. Anybody able to indulge in a luxury of that kind can certainly be able to meet this responsibility to the Government.

Therefore the committee recommends that this resolution be passed as presented to you and in response to the message of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That title IV, as amended, and parts I, II, III, and IV, of title V, as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1939." Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "1937" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "1939."

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DINGELL: Page 1, lines 6 and 12, strike out the figures "1939" and in lieu thereof insert the figures "1938."

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is very simple. It has for its purpose the reduction of the tax period in this bill from 2 years to 1 year. In other words, if we pass this amendment, you will limit the nuisance taxes to an existence of 1 year, and you will bring about as a result of that the consideration of a general tax bill that will be just and equitable. We will eliminate this discrimination against automobiles and against the producers of gasoline and oil. We will relieve two of our great industries of a tax which they have unjustly carried ever since the tax has been in effect. Supposedly the nuisance tax was a temporary thing, and yet we have gone on and on since 1932. I call the attention of Members, particularly those who represent oil-producing States, and Members who come from all districts of this country, to the fact that these taxes bear heavily upon ever purchaser of an automobile and upon every user of an automobile.

These may be nuisance taxes insofar as they are applicable to the chewer of gum or the user of cosmetics, but they are a positive burden upon the user of an automobile. An automobile is not a luxury; it is an absolute necessity, and it is high time that we struck down any further attempt to cripple these great industries.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is the price of an automobile today as compared with 2 years ago?

Mr. DINGELL. I have no comparative figures on that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it cheaper or dearer?

Mr. DINGELL. I should say that the automobile producer adds the tax, and therefore to that extent the automobile is more expensive.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not much cheaper today than it was 2 years ago?

Mr. DINGELL. The automobile?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. I would not think so; I do not think there is any difference in the last 2 years; but that is entirely beside the point. The question is whether this House proposes to permit the continuance of a tax on the automobile industry and upon the refining industry and upon the oil industry generally and permit all other manufacturing industries to be free of this discriminatory tax. That is the sum and substance of what is before us. A vote for the amendment means that the Ways and Means Committee will, without question of doubt, go into the consideration of a general tax measure this fall which will be just and equitable and fair to all industries. That is all I have to say on the subject. I ask your support for the amendment.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this motion was presented to the Ways and Means Committee and was considered, and, for very patent reasons, was voted down. I have the greatest affection for the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]. I know the interest he has and the effort he has put forth to eliminate the tax on automobiles, trucks, tires, and accessories. He certainly has made a valiant fight in this respect. He is one of the able men on the committee. I am so fond of him that I actually dislike to oppose his amendment.

I know of no article which is taxed that receives more benefit from the Federal Government than automobiles, trucks, tires, and accessories. The relief bill carries $415,000,000 for roads, highways, and things of that kind. There is a $214,000,000 authorization, as I understand, for the next fiscal year, that totals $629,000,000 for roads. The expenditure of huge Federal sums improving roads means not only longer life for the taxed items referred to but greater comfort and utility to their users.

But, aside from that point, this is what the Democratic side of this House has to think about. I will grant that our friends on the Republican side may vote en bloc in favor of this motion, but were this amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan to pass, it would mean we would be confronted with this problem next year. That is the point that certainly must be made clear.

I sincerely hope we can have a comprehensive tax bill, including consideration not only of these items but of corporation taxes and other tax items. I want to pass it along that if my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIN-

GELL] makes a successful fight here now, the tax upon automobiles, trucks, tires, and accessories can be readjusted just as well with the provision for a 2-year extension as with a provision for a 1-year extension.

I trust that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, is that just on this amendment?

Mr. COOPER. Just on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please state his request again?

Mr. COOPER. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment now pending, offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], and all amendments thereto, close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, how will the time be divided?

Mr. COOPER. It is in the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that the Chair may deal fairly in the matter, the Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] will be recognized for 5 minutes on his motion to strike out the last word; the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] will be recognized for 2 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] for 3 minutes.

The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] will be adopted. I do not think I am violating any confidence when I say that a similar proposal was defeated by a very narrow majority in the committee. In fact, there was no partisanship in the vote. As I recall, the vote was 11 to 14. If we do not put a time limit on this bill, it will be in effect for 2 years, you take my word for it; whereas if we fix a time limit at 1 year, the committee will realize the necessity for bringing in a general tax bill next year; and we should have one. We should have had one this year. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is absolutely sound, and there should not be a dissenting vote against it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 3 minutes.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, about three-quarters of an hour ago the gentleman from El Paso [Mr. THOMASON of Texas] made my speech. He indicates the vital importance of protecting the copper industry. That industry is the economic basis of my State. I heartily second his remarks. Now, I want to speak a word with reference to this particular point of a 1-year extension only. I am opposed to extending this measure for only 1 year. We must have time to frame a new and adequate tax system before discontinuing this act. I want to make myself clear on this before discussing Arizona's interest in the copper duty.

When I left my district to come here a very sage politician said to me, "Young man, let me give you a formula by which you can always be reelected." This was his simple formula. Said he, "Always vote for an appropriation and never vote for a tax measure."

Since I have been here I have voted for several appropriations, so that I am politically only 50 percent efficient, according to his standard, but I declare to you that we must consider, when we vote for these enormous appropriations which we have been making, that we are under some obligation to vote for a reasonable, sane tax measure to replenish the Treasury. That is what I want to speak of. I do not like all these nuisance taxes. There are several of them I would like to change if I could. For instance, the 3-cent postage and also the gasoline tax. I have frequently lost my religion at service stations. When I traveled 25,000 miles last summer I had to pay to the Federal Government 1 cent per gallon on the gasoline used and 5 cents to the State of Arizona, but when I recall the millions of dollars that have been spent on the roads of the country to make it possible to travel on "rubber toes" I am willing to pay my tax.

I would like to have 2-cent postage, but I never expect to see it. Perhaps we ought not attempt to return to it to the detriment of the Postal Service. I believe our Post Office Department must continue to expand and in so doing continue its splendid work of developing this country.

Now, it is suggested we ought to have a wise, safe, and sane tax policy inaugurated at once; that if we had such a bill we could do away with these nuisance taxes. Granted that, it will take more than 1 year certainly to get this wise, safe, and sane new plan of taxation which we have heard mentioned.

We should continue this tax for 2 years and not less than that amount of time. When I say this I know I express a view that is not concurred in by some of my constituents, but I am willing to go home and say to them that not only did I vote to appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury but I also voted even for these necessary nuisance taxes, which I hate as much as you do, in order that we can carry on this Government. Two years is the very minimum of time for us to make preparations for that better scheme of taxation which some of our colleagues on the Republican side said we ought to have. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, several times we have heard the taxes covered in this measure called "nuisance taxes." Such they may be in one aspect. In another aspect they are "existence taxes", considered together and for the Nation as a whole. So far as my State is concerned the extension of the 4 cents per pound on copper is an existence tax. It is necessary for the very existence of Arizona's reasonable prosperity.

This provides for but a continuation of taxes started under another administration. Neither Democrats nor Republicans seem proud of this lot. My feeling is that this collection will have to serve until something better can be devised. Certainly, in the Committee of the Whole is no place to try to work out a rational measure touching on so many controversial subjects. I, too, should like to afford ample protection for the laborers in the anthracite coal fields of Pennsylvania. I, too, should very much like to modify the tax on furs insofar as they enter into the working girl's wardrobe. I also should like to remove the tax on cosmetics, for I regard such a tax as more than a nuisance—it is an abomination, in view of the fact that cosmetics are absolute necessities of civilized life.

I am as much displeased with some of these taxes as any of the opponents of the measure, but I am supporting the whole resolution vigorously for two reasons—the fiscal necessities of the National Government and the peculiar economic necessities of my own State of Arizona. In a complicated measure like this we must take the good and the bad together until such time as we can arrive at the good only.

COPPER, OUR CINDERELLA AMONG METALS

In the far Southwest we have named certain States after the mineral which they produce most abundantly. For instance, we speak of California as the Golden State. In like manner we may well call Nevada the Silver State. Now, Arizona produces both gold and silver, although she is preeminent in the production of copper. Therefore we may well call Arizona the copper State, and this may be done without casting reflections upon several other States which also produce the red metal abundantly.

Two decades ago Arizona furnished great supplies of copper, not only to the domestic trade but for the uses of the world, both in war and peace. The "Infant State" of Arizona had a brief reign of prosperity during and following the World War, when the demands for copper were great and prices high. The young State, the youngest in the family, started off its existence under statehood with the copper mines furnishing the largest share of taxes to the support of State and local governments. As a consequence, we built fine public buildings, modern schoolhouses, and many miles of good highway over vast stretches of our great open spaces connecting or lying between our towns and mining camps.

Then came a change. Vast deposits of copper were opened up in Africa, South America, and Canada. These foreign holdings have been developed and they have been worked, at least in the first two instances, with cheap labor or with slaves. In two decades the production of these foreign copper mines has increased between 300 and 400 percent. At one time a great deal of this foreign copper was dumped in the United States at a price below our cost of production.

MORE GHOST TOWNS?

My business as a schoolman has taken me up and down all over the State of Arizona during the past half dozen years of this depression. I have traveled many times through every one of these great copper camps, sometimes at noon and sometimes at midnight. My heart has ached because of the change I have seen come over these camps during this devastating period of depression. Arizona already had a score or more of romantic ghost towns whose heyday was a half century ago when the mineral wealth of that territory was first exploited. Now, it seemed to me that these copper camps, which for nearly two decades had been thriving industrial centers and humming beehives of activity before the great collapse, were about to join the score or more of ghost towns in Arizona and thus be relegated to song and story.

In some of these camps, 2 years ago and 3 years ago, more than half the people were on relief. Splendid and noble plants were closed down; fat pay rolls were discontinued; and an army of trained men who formerly drew five, six, or more dollars a day were turned loose as tramps; and white-collared executives were retained by humane corporations in a few instances as guards, night watchmen, and caretakers. That was exactly the picture of practically every mining camp in Arizona in the midst of this terrible depression.

Today, I am happy to report, the scene has changed. This small tax of 4 cents per pound has nearly canceled the difference in cost between production at home and production abroad. The copper market has recently revived and now practically all these Arizona camps have opened up again. Let it be said to the credit of some of our biggest corporations, even those that have holdings abroad, that they have not fought this excise tax, though in some cases it would have been profit to the company to ship in their foreign copper and allow the Arizona plants to lie idle and deserted. I am reliably informed at this moment that production in the Arizona camps is getting back toward the predepression level, and that wages are higher today in those camps than have heretofore been paid at any time.

ONLY PROTECT OUR LABORERS

Now, Mr. Chairman, we do not ask that copper mining be subsidized at the expense of the consuming public in this country. Nor are we thinking chiefly of corporation profits. Our great copper companies have, even during this period of depression, taken advantage of all the steps of progress made by science. They have let slip no invention or discovery that would enable them to produce cheaply. This reduction in cost of producing copper, however, has not been at the expense of labor, for I know of no great industrial employers who have been more considerate and humane in dealing with the laborers. This applies all along the line to the extent of high wages, hospitalization and safety provisions, and especially with educational facilities for the children of those laborers.

I am sometimes asked whether 4 cents per pound is sufficient. I know that my colleagues from copper-producing States insist that it should be more. I am willing that this tax should be increased, but I would not want to see such a tax placed so high that the price of American copper might be shoved up to such a point that sales would fall off and aluminum or some other metal be substituted for copper in the trades. I plead with Congress to continue this protection which American copper now enjoys, and although it may be a trifle too low, I feel that it will tend to maintain that beginning of modest prosperity which has so lately come to Arizona.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the views of the gentleman from Arizona who just took his seat do not accord with the logic of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. They favor a 2-year extension of these taxes, but they assure us that we are going to have a general revision of the tax laws within a year. Surely that will make the extension of 2 years unnecessary. The gentleman from Arizona knows, and you know, and I know—we all know—that you cannot reduce any of these taxes within the next 2 years and come anywhere near balancing the Budget unless you are going to cease this spending.

Mr. Chairman, I rose to support the amendment of the Democratic member of the committee from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], providing that these taxes be extended for but 1 year. I say that if the committee is sincere, if you are going to bring in the tax bill that you say you are going to bring in next year, then there is not any reason for placing upon the books this extension of these nuisance taxes for 2 years when you will only need them for 1 year. There is no use trying to deceive the country. There is no use trying to make the country believe that we are not going to have more taxes and at the same time keep on spending as we are spending.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman realizes that the next session of Congress may run beyond the 30th of June, and we may need the full session if we are to undertake to revise the tax structure. These taxes might lapse if they were extended for only 1 year.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman's committee will commence now and pass the tax law by next March, there will be plenty of time; but if you follow the custom you have been following for the last 2 or 3 years, you will not bring a tax bill or any important piece of legislation before the House until you think you have the votes to pass it, and then you will bring it before the House at the close of a week or at the close of a session and ram it through without consideration. If necessary, keep the committee here and the House here until 12 o'clock at night and make the Members vote, and without mature consideration.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the second distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman's estimate as to time may very properly apply to action by this body, but I am sure that he is mindful of the fact that any tax bill has also to pass another body, in which time is usually consumed to considerable length.

Mr. MICHENER. That is absolutely true, and if the House Ways and Means Committee will bring in a bill on the first day of the next session, or even in this session before we adjourn—we are going to be here some little time—this procedure would provide a great deal of information about the proposed tax bill to be considered, and with this information the Senate can act on it that much more quickly.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield to the third member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. March 15 is the date for filing income-tax returns. We would have to introduce the bill, hold hearings, pass it through the House and through the Senate, and through conference, before March 15 before we would know what that phase of the tax program would be. I am certain that my friend would not want to cramp the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate in that way.

Mr. MICHENER. The "three horsemen" of the Ways and Means Committee have now interrogated me. I only wish these capable gentlemen would write a tax bill without outside dictation. I think they all know my position, so far as that is concerned, but we were told last year that we would not need new taxes; we were promised there would be no additional taxes, because the income was going to exceed the outgo. We are, however, still spending $2 for ever $1 we take in. I have received many letters urging the repeal of these nuisance taxes, especially the taxes on gasoline and automobiles. These taxes will never be repealed as long as blank checks are given to the President. These newly created spending agencies will spend every dollar available. They have the habit. Various groups of recipients of Santa Claus money have tasted that which seems to them like something for nothing. It is difficult for them to let go of the teat. You farmers know that it is not easy to wean the sucking calf. It takes determination. I stand ready to vote necessary taxes to balance the Budget just so soon as the Congress again determines where, when, and how the taxes are to be spent. If the Congress continues to make appropriations which are not necessary and refuses to have any regard for the taxpayers, I shall refuse to vote for additional taxes. The Congress has the constitutional duty of raising the revenue, and it is also supposed to control the purse strings. Lump-sum appropriations handed over to these spenders will eventually ruin our country. One year is long enough to continue these taxes. Give the spenders notice that this additional sum will not be available for more than 1 year at least. Let us encourage economy, at least.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DINGELL) there were—ayes 50, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York: Following the period in line 6, strike out the remainder of the joint resolution.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the gentlemen on the Democratic side are in a very difficult position and it will not be my purpose to discuss politics. We have a tax bill before us that is very unpleasant, and one to which we on our side are opposed. You are undertaking the impossible, and if it were left to the individual judgment of the Members on that side they would vote down this bill. But you Democrats are in an awkward position, and one to which you are so far committed that you cannot escape.

Some of us who come from New York understand the situation far better than you do; at least, far better than you did sometime ago. At one time we had the gentleman who is now in the White House as our distinguished Governor of the State of New York.

Some men are born with certain proclivities. Their early training has been such that they cannot escape from that early experience and indulgence. We had that distinguished gentleman as Governor and when he came in as Governor the State was blessed with a surplus in its treasury. During his term as Governor of the State of New York, following the same inclination with which apparently he was born, he opened up a program of spending, and during his incumbency in office increased the bonded indebtedness of our State $200,000,000 and left the State with a deficit of $114,000,000. Our State is still struggling under that bonded indebtedness and deficit. The taxpayers are squirming under that load. They are reaching out for revenue, trying to unburden themselves of that debt that was caused by unlimited spending.

Mr. Chairman, I say you were undertaking the impossible just so long as you on that side are willing to listen to seductive tones urging you to appropriate more money, whether it is for Passamaquoddy, canals across Florida, outhouses in North Carolina, sunken gardens in small villages, or for resettlement. All of these things are advocated by a certain group of people who have no responsibility. They were never elected by the American taxpayers. They were never entrusted with the expenditure of a nickel by the people. But they will spend this money, and you on that side will find yourselves going deeper and deeper into national debt.

The time has come to stop. I have offered an amendment that touches everybody in the country. There is no excuse for handing this money over to the spendthrift to burden every individual and all business. I am asking that the postage rate be reduced to 2 cents, and there is no reason why that should not be done. It ought to be done. This increased postage rate is nothing but a war tax and it should be removed. I hope the gentlemen on this side will support the amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Can the gentleman or any Member from the State of New York advise the House whether or not the Constitution of the State of New York enables the Governor himself to increase the bonded indebtedness of that State, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] would lead us to believe?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is my understanding that one branch of the general assembly has been under the control of the Republicans for some time. Certainly the Governor could not make appropriations or authorize appropriations unless agreed to by the legislature. If these appropriations have been authorized, the responsibility is as much on the party represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] as it is upon the President of the United States.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. The same gentleman who is in the White House today had the same seductive tones which he used over the radio; he had the same appeal for spending money; he had the same splendid art for political manipulations that he has now, and the same power over the legislature.

Mr. DOUGHTON. And he even convinced the Republicans to the extent of a hundred million dollars. We raise our hats to a leader of that kind.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, the State of New York can only increase its bonded indebtedness through the people of the State by constitutional amendment. The Governor has absolutely no power to increase the bonded indebtedness. Any other assertion is absolutely misleading.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is not so much what the President of the United States did while he was Governor of New York with reference to the Republican Party in the State of New York, but what he has done to the Republican Party throughout the country. That is what we are interested in.

Mr. REED of New York. And what he has done to every other self-respecting citizen.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I should like to state that both branches of the State legislature were Republican while he was in office, and after he put over that legislation he received the largest vote ever given to any candidate in the State of New York.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is adopted it will reduce the postage revenue about $90,000,000. In other words, we will have a postage rate of 2 cents on first-class mail matter rather than 3 cents.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is rather interesting to note also that the amendment comes from the Republican side, and the present taxes were put in on the recommendation of Secretary Mills.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, yes. If the present rate of 3 cents is not continued there will be imposed upon the Treasury additional burdens to the extent of approximately $90,000,000. I do not believe anybody is in favor of doing that. The waste of money that the gentleman has mentioned is not in the Post Office Department.

Mr. REED of New York. Oh, yes. Mr. Farley has increased the expense of the Post Office by the amount of revenue produced by this increased rate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REED of New York) there were—yeas 31, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KENNEY moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is called a nuisance tax bill. As a matter of fact, it is a consumers' tax bill. I am glad to see the Republicans opposed to this bill after having inflicted it upon Congress, but I am very much surprised that the Democrats will continue this nuisance tax, this tax on the consumer, indefinitely.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] very well pointed out this afternoon that it was in the contemplation of the Committee on Ways and Means to deal more intelligently with the raising of revenue in this country. There is no necessity for this bill. You are taxing the consumer and have invaded the field of gasoline taxes, where you have no business. In New Jersey now gasoline is being sold at less than 13 cents a gallon. The dealer is paying 12 cents at the tank car. There is on top of this a 3-cent tax by the State of New Jersey, and then you down here put on 1 cent. The businessmen up there cannot continue to exist under such circumstances.

I am against this bill, the Republicans are against it, and the Democrats apologize for it. You want more revenue and we must have more revenue. You talk about a tax bill. Why, there is no need of raising any more taxes. You can pass instead a bill that is now before the Committee on Ways and Means, a bill that would permit every mother's son in this country to chip in to help balance the Budget, and you ought to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I call upon the members of the Committee on Ways and Means to abandon this bill, let the Committee rise, go back to committee, and report back here the bill for a national lottery. Mind you, this will not take any money out of the pockets of our people, because our people are sending their money now to other countries. If we could only use such moneys, we would be in a position to raise far more than could ever be raised by such a bill as this.

Only yesterday, in the city of Boston, there were confiscated by the Postmaster General thousands and thousands of dollars worth of lottery tickets. Where do you think they came from? Not Ireland, not France, not Italy, or other European countries. They came from Egypt. We have been sending money to Egypt to support worthy causes there.

When will this Congress wake up? Who has a better plan than I now suggest? If he has such a plan, let him stand up. Republicans, sign petition 15 on the Speaker's desk. Democrats, do our duty, sign the petition, and pass that bill. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I can suggest a better plan—to take the loopholes out of the tax bill.

Mr. KENNEY. Take the loopholes out, plug the loopholes, but quit plugging the poor taxpayer if you have a plan.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there are two ways to balance the Budget. One way is to reduce expenditures and the other way is to continue our taxes and increase them.

The resolution before us is to continue the life of a disowned, discredited, degenerate, and dying offspring of an unknown parentage. There is a certain stigma attached to these nuisance taxes. Today we have had a partisan sparring match in an attempt to apply that stigma to one of the leaders of the Republican Party or to the Democratic majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. May I point out that if Congress votes to breathe the breath of life into this dying child the stigma will be attached to this Congress and to the Members on both sides of the aisle. I do not propose to have any of that stigma attached to me, therefore I am opposed to the bill.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] stated that these taxes were properly named when they were named nuisance taxes. The gentleman from New York is a first cousin of the gentleman from Illinois in that he has Irish blood, and I have Welsh blood, and the two are first cousins. Because of that, his statement started a train of thought in my mind. What is a nuisance, a public nuisance? When we think of a public nuisance, we imagine a stench arising, we think of an open sewer, a slaughterhouse, the stockyards, garbage, or of city ordinances which are passed to do away with public nuisances in the cities of a certain kind of outhouses. Part of the money raised by these nuisance taxes has been spent to erect hillside pergolas, and because of that these nuisance taxes are a stench in the nostrils of the American people and should not be continued.

These nuisance taxes are inequitable, unjust, and bear most heavily upon those least able to pay. They should not be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion by the gentleman from New Jersey to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KENNEY) there were—ayes 20, noes 93.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THURSTON: After line 12, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Subsection (c) of section 601 of title IV of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(9) Agricultural products and provisions, as specified in schedule 7 and in paragraphs 1101, 1102, 1105, and 1106 of schedule 11 of the Tariff Act of 1930, a tax equivalent to 25 percent of the price for which so sold, except that in the case of pork (fresh, chilled, or frozen), bacon, hams, and shoulders, and other pork, prepared or preserved, the rate of tax shall be 6 cents per pound: Provided, That the tax on the articles described in this paragraph shall apply only with respect to the importation of such articles and shall not be subject to the provisions of subsection (b) (4) of section 601 (prohibiting drawback) or section 629 (relating to expiration of taxes).'"

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, earlier in the day I called attention to the discrimination which time has brought to agriculture through forces over which, of course, it did not have control or did not bring about. When the Tariff Act of 1930 was passed, fairly adequate rates were placed upon the importation of foreign products, both farm and industrial, but in the excise-tax law passed in 1932 we provided for a high tariff on lubricating oils, crude petroleum, coal, lumber, and copper. Increased mechanization of industry has brought a greater output per man-hour, and then, through current legislation, which has as its objective the shortening of hours and the increasing of wages in industry, there has been brought about a situation where the price of practically every commodity the farmer is obliged to purchase has been increased from 10 to 15 and even 30 percent.

In the last few years we have witnessed a very definite increase in the importation of certain canned meats. In the last 5 or 5½ years we have purchased almost exactly $1,000,000,000 more of foreign produce, farm products, than we have exported, leaving this tremendous balance against the farming industry. As this disparity has increased, we have taken care of different industrial products through direct legislation, the excise taxes mentioned. We all know that there has been substantial increase in the price of all industrial commodities, and that has worked an injustice and destroyed the balance that was created by the Tariff Act of 1930. So I have prepared this amendment which would increase the excise taxes 25 percent on foreign farm products brought into the United States. If it is logical that the increase in taxes in these commodities by one-fourth may diminish imports somewhat, we know then that the American farmer will have increased his output, and if his output is increased, it logically follows that he will be a taxpayer to a greater extent, and he may join that very generous caravan that we have in this country of some 2,000,000 people who pay income taxes. So the reduction of imports would enhance and better the economic farmer's position and place him more nearly on a parity with these changes that have been brought about in the past 6 years. Members of the House are familiar with this growing inequality. They know there has been a widening gap between the purchasing price of the farmer's products and the commodities that he must purchase in order to support his family and to continue his farming operations. So I trust that we may add this excise-tax provision in favor of the farmer just as it has been granted to those who produce oil and copper and lumber.

If this amendment is adopted, we can repeal the present Federal tax of 1 cent on each gallon of gasoline and reduce first-class postage from 3 to 2 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. THURSTON) there were—ayes 44, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this resolution and all amendments thereto close not later than 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I wonder if that will give us ample opportunity to debate these different amendments.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I think so.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to withhold that for a few minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman let debate run on for a little while. It might not take that long.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: After line 12, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Section 612 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is further amended by striking out the words "except that in the case of paper matches in books the tax shall be one-half of 1 cent per thousand matches and."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, at the present time there is incorporated in this nuisance-tax group a tax on matches. All matches are taxed. The common large house match is taxed at one rate, and the fancy-colored and stained matches are taxed at another rate. The small paper matches and the small wood matches that compete with the paper matches are taxed at two different rates—the small wood match is taxed at the same rate as the large wood match, but the paper match is taxed at a different rate. In other words, the wood match, which is in competition with the paper match, is taxed at 2 cents a thousand matches, the same as the large matches, but the little paper match is taxed at the rate of one-half of 1 cent per thousand, and is therefore given a 4-to-1 chance. There is no reason for this discrimination. This works out to an 8-to-1 advantage. In fact, the paper match has one other great natural advantage over the wooden match in addition to this differential in tax. The advantage is that it is used as an advertising medium. My amendment will have this effect: It will not reduce but will increase the taxes by at least $1,000,000 a year. The total taxes on matches run between six and seven million dollars a year. This amendment will result in this tremendous increase in taxes. This is a strange situation, and you will ask why. It is more strange than that, even when it is known that those who pay the tax are willing to pay this increase. Not only are they willing but they are anxious for the increase, and their reason for asking for this change is that, although it will cost them a million dollars, there is no question but that the match industry will profit more than the extra million dollars for the reason that it will tend to stabilize the business. The large advertisers have gotten hold of these matches and they have gotten them away from the match industry. The match industry will sell the matches at the same price. There will be no additional cost, but the Government will get a million dollars more.

Mr. SHORT. The President in his Budget message to Congress last January said that he wanted Congress to maintain the current rate of those taxes which would otherwise be reduced next June, but nowhere in his message did he express opposition to any increase that would bring additional revenues, and it is a mystery to me why the Committee on Ways and Means did not equalize these taxes before they reported the bill out.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The Committee on Ways and Means came very nearly approving this amendment, and it should have done so. The vote was 12 to 13. I am sure those 13 were actuated more by a spirit of subservience toward their patron saint at the other end of the Avenue, and I do not believe he ever expected that, because in his messages he has always been ready to encourage additional taxes. The way he spends money is a sure sign that he needs all he can get.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have always been extremely suspicious of any man who comes along and wants to pay an extra tax. Any time a fellow comes along and asks me to levy a tax on him, I get suspicious right there. Certainly we should not take the position here of employing the strong arm of the Federal Government in favor of one group of people in an industry as against another group of people in the same industry, favoring one group and being detrimental to the other.

The fact remains that this matter was considered by the committee, with the very meager information that was presented, and voted down. If there is some adjustment that is proper to be made, it certainly should be carefully investigated and gone into in the proper manner, so that we might have information to advise you intelligently on a matter of this kind.

Now, it appears that one real purpose to be served is to try to eliminate the kind of matches that are being given away to people. In other words, it will affect the interests of the consumer and will try to fix it so that the practical result will be he will have to pay more for his matches. In view of this situation, and the fact that sufficient data and information has not been presented on it, the members of your committee appeal to you to vote down this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, I voted in committee for this amendment. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] I cannot remain idle and let the statement go unanswered.

This amendment does not mean that one group of business is being given an advantage over another. As a matter of fact, under existing law one group has an advantage over another. [Applause.] We are now taxing the man who produces wooden matches 2 cents per thousand and the one who produces the paper match one-half cent per thousand. No difference in price will result. The real purpose of this is to produce a different situation than that expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]. Personally I do not care whether the amendment is adopted or not, but I am interested in the justice of it. I voted for it in committee and the vote was 13 to 12, as one of the preceding speakers stated. Now, what is the real purpose? Under the present situation foreign paper matches are being imported into the United States and they are underselling the paper matches produced by American business. That is the real story, and the reason they want the tax increased to 2 cents a thousand is so that the tax will operate against the imported article and protect American paper match manufacturing industry. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Is the wooden match the one which is paying 2 cents a thousand, the match that is called the "honest man's match", that you strike on your overalls and do not need a paper box to strike it?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know about that. All I know is that is the situation that presented itself, and the ultimate purpose of this amendment would be to equalize the tax, and it would be to protect the American manufacturer and American laborer against the cheaply manufactured imported paper matches that are coming into the market and undermining American industry and American labor in the match industry, and preventing them from selling their product in the American market.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. As I understand the gentleman, there would be no difference in the competitive situation between the paper match and the wooden match if this tax is put on. I just cannot get that. Now, if you put a tax on any commodity, it seems to me it is going to affect its movement in commerce. In my opinion, from the meager information I have received, it looked to me that they wanted to increase the price of the paper match to the price of the wooden match, so that the paper match, with the advertising feature, could not be given away.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I understand it, the main purpose was to protect the manufacturer of paper matches in the United States from the foreign imported match which pays simply one-half cent per thousand, and which is able to undersell, not the wooden match produced in America but the paper match produced in America.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Can the gentleman give any information as to the amount of paper matches imported? I have not heard the argument presented by my friend until now.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the argument that was presented. That is the reason why the paper-match industry in the United States is willing to pay an extra tax, in order that they may obtain protection from the imported paper match, which, paying one-half cent per thousand, is able to come into the country and undersell the American product.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Of course, I have no doubt that such information might have been presented to the gentleman; but it certainly was not presented to the committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. It certainly was discussed in the committee.

Mr. COOPER. I attended every moment of the session, and this is the first time I heard of it. It was not presented in the committee. The chairman says he never heard of it.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman is raising the question about something in the committee, there was nothing discussed publicly, and I approve of not having public hearings, but it was discussed in executive session at the time of the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio) there were—ayes 57 and noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PATMAN, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. FLANNERY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state in this regard that amendments have been offered and sent to the Clerk's desk in the following order, and in a spirit of fairness the Chair will try to recognize the Members in this order: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY], the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE], and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this resolution and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour, at 5:30.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how many amendments are pending?

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments pending there will be six amendments to be disposed of within the hour. This would allow 5 minutes for and 5 minutes against each amendment.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLANNERY: Page 1, line 6, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That section 601 (c) (5), part IV, and title V of such act (relating to tax on coal, coke, and coal or coke briquets) is amended effective July 1, 1937, by striking out '10 cents per hundred pounds' and inserting in lieu thereof '25 cents per hundred pounds.'"

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, last year there was imported from Russia between 400,000 and 500,000 tons of Russian coal. Up in Pennsylvania, in my county for one, there are now over 50,000 people on relief because the American market cannot absorb the coal which we produce. This condition prevails in the so-called five anthracite counties of Pennsylvania.

Down in the dim recesses of this bill there is a tax of 10 cents per 100 pounds on coal imports. That applies in practical effect only to Russia, because its application is excluded from those nations with which we have treaties containing the most-favored-nation clause. The result is that Russia can and is sending her coal over here under a tax of 10 cents per 100 pounds, competing with domestic coal, leaving our mines idle, and sending it to the extent of between 400,000 and 500,000 tons within the past year, and it is still coming in in increasing quantities.

My proposition is to raise that import tax which affects Russia from 10 cents per 100 pounds to 25 cents per 100 pounds. It does not affect the American consumer, because the supply exceeds the demand as it is, but it does protect American industry and American labor. [Applause.] If you, my friends, vote against this proposed increase, you will be voting for Russian labor and you will be voting to keep Pennsylvania labor on relief. Remember that, gentlemen. [Applause.]

Up in my county, as I have said, 50,000 people are on relief. We have an industry in Pennsylvania that is in a state of collapse; it has gone beyond chaos. Disorder is certainly rampant. The Governor of Pennsylvania appointed a coal commission to examine into the conditions and the so-called bootlegging of coal. The authorities of the State of New Jersey have inquired into the conditions of bootlegging coal. The authorities of the State of New York have done likewise. These miners are hungry; these miners are starving. They have in the lower counties taken the mines over into their own hands and are mining the coal. Law and order cannot stop them or prevent them.

Mr. Chairman, many things must be done before this problem can be solved. One is a readjustment of the freight rates, and that shall be considered at another time. We may be coming to the nationalization of the industry as intimated by Governor Earle, and recently adopted in England, but until that time we can make a contribution, a step in the right direction, by increasing the tax which I ask you to do now. Afford those men up there work, help us cut down relief rolls in Pennsylvania, restore law and order to our State. I ask of you men of Pennsylvania, you men of Virginia and West Virginia, you men of Kentucky where you have coal, you out in Illinois where you have coal, to vote for this bill. I have heard the cry: "Follow the committee." Gentleman, the members of the committee do not "follow the committee" when they see fit or when opposition serves their own interests. I ask you to forget the committee but to remember the American workmen, remember the American anthracite and bituminous industry, remember the welfare of this Nation, and vote this little tax.

Mr. SHORT. All that the gentleman has said about the importation of coal from Russia is absolutely true. The same thing can be said of the importation of lumber and petroleum from Soviet Russia.

Mr. FLANNERY. I have the figures here. This is an opportunity to do something.

Mr. KNUTSON. And manganese.

Mr. FLANNERY. Now, gentlemen, let us view this coal problem in all its aspects.

THE ANTHRACITE-COAL INDUSTRY

General problem

The anthracite-coal industry is, as I have said, a sick industry. The production of anthracite coal and consequently employment and pay rolls have continuously and steadily declined since the World War. Domestic production of anthracite coal in the 7-year period from 1924 through 1930 averaged 68,548,000 long tons. From 1931 through 1936 average domestic production for the 6-year period totaled 48,348,000 long tons. During this 13-year span domestic production ranged from 79,000,000 tons in 1924 to 44,419,000 tons in 1933. As a result of a very extreme winter in 1934, anthracite-coal production totaled 51,576,000 long tons, but another slump occurred and production for 1935 and 1936 totaled 46,571,000 and 48,893,000 long tons, respectively. A comparison of anthracite-coal production for the first quarter of 1937 with the similar period of 1936 reveals a further decline of 21 percent, or from 13,722,000 long tons in 1936 to 10,863,000 long tons in 1937. It is thus apparent that this industry has not participated in the increasing prosperity of 1936 and 1937.

Financial position of coal companies

On February 16, 1937, the Governor of Pennsylvania, the Honorable George H. Earle, appointed the anthracite coal industry commission to make a study covering the subject of illegal mining of anthracite coal and the general economic dislocation of the industry. This report reveals that the current net assets of companies producing 90 percent of anthracite coal have decreased about $100,000,000 in 10 years. In 1935 the working capital of companies producing 90 to 95 percent of the total output was only $9,000,000. This is a decline from $70,000,000 in 1929 and from $111,000,000 in 1926. The consolidated income report of such companies shows a deficit in net income for each of the years 1932 through 1935 in the amounts, respectively, upward of $10,500,000, $8,500,000, $1,600,000, and $10,200,000. The largest company in the industry applied recently for relief under section 77B of the Federal Bankruptcy Act. The report further states:

Other companies will likewise soon join the unhappy procession to the bankruptcy courts unless some quick and drastic change takes place.

Employment

In the year 1914 upward of 179,000 persons were directly employed in the production and processing of anthracite coal in and about the mines, and the average number of days per year worked by these persons was 245 days. When production reached its highest point in 1917, 154,000 men worked on an average of 285 days. During the years 1924–28 upward of 160,000 men were at work well over 225 days. In 1929 and 1930 there was a decline to a level of around 150,000, the average number of days worked being still upward of 200. By 1933 the number of men employed had dropped to but 104,633, the average number of days worked to 182. The year 1934 showed a slight upward trend, but by 1935 a record low of 100,000 men, working an average of about 180 days per year, was reached. There were less men at work in the anthracite fields in 1935 than in 1890. If the total present output of coal were produced by persons working the full annual complement of working days, approximately 60,000 persons would be employed.

The bootleg problem

During the last few years there has developed a situation which is symptomatic of the demoralization of the industry and specifically related to the serious unemployment problem, namely, illegal mining of coal. It is estimated that about 12,000 persons are engaged in stealing coal from other people's property in the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania, particularly the southern region, and about 6,000 engaged in the preparation and marketing of bootleg coal. A substantial percent of these persons are licensed miners out of legitimate work. Recent estimates indicate that 50 percent of those engaged in bootlegging were engaged in mining at one time or another. Quite a number are actually on the public-relief rolls. It is estimated that the total production of stolen coal has risen from one and a half million tons in 1933 to 4,000,000 tons in 1936. Those engaged in actually breaking ground and retrieving coal in this unlawful manner are probably making less than those engaged in ancillary branches of the bootleg industry, such as processing the product, shipping and distributing it.

The report of the Pennsylvania Anthracite Coal Industry Commission further states:

There is no dispute on the legal standing of bootlegging. The bootleg miners are trespassers and are stealing property, and the bootleg breakers and truckers are handling stolen goods. It is alleged in defense, however, that the right of human beings to live is superior to legal property rights, strictly construed. This defense is valid in principle but does not apply in full to the present circumstances. It is true, however, that Government relief, W. P. A., and similar payments have frequently been very low on a per-capita basis, and often wholly inadequate to support what the miner regards as a minimum decent standard of living. It is also obvious that receiving relief in return for doing nothing must be distasteful to any self-respecting able-bodied man. Nor is employment in other local industries, which are relatively few and small, available in sufficient volume to absorb more than a small fraction of the idle miners. It is therefore not impossible to understand how men who are otherwise honest and law-abiding citizens, but who found themselves thrown out of work through no fault of their own, came to resort to bootleg mining. The mining and sale of stolen coal is merely one acute symptom among many of a depressed condition throughout the whole anthracite industry which has been cumulative since 1926.

Efforts to stop bootlegging in the Schuylkill fields by resort to the ordinary legal processes have thus far been almost wholly unsuccessful, except where surface buildings and roads or the operations of adjacent legal mines were in immediate danger. This break-down of the legal process is explained both by the fact that a majority of the community affected and even the local judiciary have apparently been sympathetic to the bootleggers, and by the real threat of mass violence in certain cases.

RELIEF AND WORK RELIEF

Almost 99 percent of anthracite produced in the United States is mined in 14 counties in Pennsylvania, and over 90 percent is produced in the following 5 counties: Luzerne, Schuylkill, Lackawanna, Northumberland, and Carbon. The total obligations incurred for relief, not including Works Progress Administration expenditures, as reported by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration for the five above-mentioned counties in Pennsylvania, are as follows:

Total obligations for emergency relief[1] for the period April 1933 through December 1936

County	Total obligations	Federal funds
Luzerne	$25,821,956	$15,482,344
Schuylkill	12,927,840	8,677,556
Lackawanna	17,239,132	11,138,881
Northumberland	7,342,821	4,482,651
Carbon	2,011,589	1,254,229

[1] The above figures include general relief, extended cases, nonrelief wages, and materials incident to work-relief projects conducted by State and local relief administrations and cost of administration.

Works Progress Administration in the period July 1, 1935, through March 31, 1937, expended the following amounts in these counties:

County:	Obligations incurred[1]
Luzerne	$19,973,098
Schuylkill	10,782,602
Lackawanna	11,346,051
Northumberland	5,764,574
Carbon	2,377,379

[1] These figures do not include State-wide or district-wide projects which have been operating in these counties.

ANTHRACITE COAL

Tariff duties and excise taxes

The Tariff Act of 1913 placed all varieties of coal on the free list. The Tariff Act of 1922 continued all coal on the free list, but provided that—

> If any country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government imposes a duty on any article specified in this paragraph [1548], when imported from the United States, an equal duty shall be imposed upon such article coming into the United States from such country, dependency, Province, or other subdivision of government.

The conditional-duty provision in the Tariff Act of 1922 was reimposed by the Tariff Act of 1930. This conditional duty, however, was repealed by the Trade Agreements Act which became effective June 12, 1934.

The Revenue Act of 1932, section 601 (c) (5), provided for an import excise tax of 10 cents per 100 pounds on coal imported into the United States from countries to which exports of coal from the United States did not exceed in the previous calendar year the imports of coal therefrom, "unless", as provided in section 601 (a) of the act, "treaty provisions of the United States otherwise provide." Treaty provisions which do otherwise provide are those arising out of the most-favored-nation clause, such as exist in commercial treaties of the United States with Belgium, the United Kingdom, and Japan. Imports of coal enter the United States tax free when the coal is imported from a country to which the United States exports more coal than it imports therefrom, or when the coal is imported from a country with which the United States has exchanged most-favored-nation commitments. The only important sources of taxable imports of coal into the United States at present are the Soviet Union and Germany.

The excise tax on imported coal imposed by the Revenue Act of 1932 has been extended to June 30, 1937 (Public, No. 36, 74th Cong.; June 13, 1935).

Domestic production, imports, and exports

Production averaged 59,225,000 long tons during the period 1924–36. It reached a peak of 79,135,000 tons in 1924, and a low point of 44,419,000 tons in 1933. In 1936 it amounted to 48,893,000 tons. Anthracite is used chiefly for domestic heating rather than for industrial purposes. The decline in domestic production, therefore, may be accounted for in part by the increased use of gas and oil for heating purposes.

Imports of anthracite coal have amounted to approximately 1 percent, and exports to from 3 to 5 percent, of the quantity produced domestically. Imports have come chiefly from the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and Canada. They are entered principally at ports in New England, which consumes approximately 10 percent of domestic shipments of anthracite. Exports are shipped largely to the Canadian Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Transportation charges play an important part in influencing the marketing of this commodity, particularly in New England. European anthracite has a lower ash content and sells at a higher price than does domestic anthracite. Since 1931 imports into New England have amounted to from 9 to 11 percent of the shipments of domestic anthracite to New England. Most of the foreign anthracite is imported from the Soviet Union and is subject to the import excise tax previously mentioned.

Prices

The price structure of coal is complicated by a number of variables. Among these are varieties or types of coal, sizes or grades of each type, and special marketing conditions in each of the distributing centers. Transportation charges, for example, are important factors contributing to the variation in prices between centers. Moreover, there is a seasonal trend in the price of coal; prices tend to rise during the fall and winter and to decline during the spring and summer. Because of these variables, any composite price for coal is of little value except to show broad trends for a considerable period of time.

Prices of anthracite coal are influenced less by industrial activity than are prices of bituminous coal. Prices were relatively high during the period 1927–31, but declined during 1932–35. Since 1935 prices have advanced slightly.

Inasmuch as imports of anthracite are entered principally in New England, the price of domestic anthracite at Boston becomes especially significant. Tables F and G show the wholesale prices of three grades of domestic anthracite at Boston and the unit value of imports, inclusive of ocean freight and import excise taxes. In table F the costs to dealers in Boston are calculated by adding transportation costs from Scranton to Boston to the average sales realization per net ton at the mines. Table G shows the quoted wholesale prices of anthracite f. o. b. cars on tracks in Boston. The comparison of wholesale prices of domestic anthracite with the unit value of imports, however, is not particularly significant, inasmuch as imports are not classified by grades or sizes.

During the years 1933, 1934, and 1935—the years for which comparative data are available—the wholesale price of domestic anthracite quoted by dealers in Boston exceeded their costs by from 6 to 11 percent. Beginning in 1933, after the import excise tax was imposed, the unit value of imports plus ocean freight and excise taxes also exceeded the cost of domestic anthracite to dealers. Moreover, after 1933 the estimated wholesale price of imports exceeded the wholesale price of domestic anthracite.

I believe I have covered in a general way the conditions that prevail in the anthracite industry, and it must be obvious that immediate and drastic steps are necessary if it is to be saved. The amendment I have proposed increasing the import tax from 10 cents per 100 pounds to 25 cents is a small contribution, but it is an important one. Other contributions must and will follow. Under the leadership of Pennsylvania's great Governor, George H. Earle, the problem is receiving analysis and consideration as never before. Let us cooperate to this extent now. Let us increase this tax. Let us help save a great industry.

Acknowledgment is made to the Tariff Commission, Bureau of Mines, and Pennsylvania Anthracite Coal Industry Commission for statistics and data.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FLANNERY) there were—ayes 81, noes 56.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. FLANNERY to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 84 and noes 76.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerks' desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. HONEYMAN: Page 1, after the period in line 12, insert the following: "The tax imposed by section 603 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended (relating to the tax on toilet preparations), shall not apply to articles sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer after the date of the enactment of the joint resolution."

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment at the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], who waited all afternoon to offer the amendment herself, but within the last few minutes she received notice of a death in her family and has left the floor. She has requested me to offer the amendment in her stead.

I will read what the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] intended to say:

I am asking that this tax be repealed as a matter of simple justice to the average American woman. It is an established fact that cosmetics are absolutely necessary to the well-groomed woman. Just as necessary as razor blades and shaving cream are to a man.

As toilet preparations and cosmetics, under the customs existing in all civilized countries, are necessities and not luxuries, this 10-percent tax is resented by the women of the country as a discriminatory tax, and it should not be continued.

I believe that this is a discriminatory tax, falling almost entirely upon the pocketbooks of the women of the country.

The April 1, 1930, census of the United States shows that there were 37,056,757 adult males residing in the United States and 35,886,867 adult females so residing.

Practically none of the cosmetics taxed in this bill are purchased by our male citizens, and almost the entire tax, therefore, falls upon the women of the country. Such a tax, it must be conceded, is discriminatory.

It is the only one of these special taxes which is discriminatory.

All the other special taxes fall upon all of the people of the country, male and female alike. Taxes on oil, fish, furs, automobiles, boats, radios, mechanical refrigerators, sporting goods, firearms, cameras, chewing gum, telephone, theaters, stocks and bonds, safety-deposit boxes, checks, and tobacco are paid by every class of citizen of the United States, and the Government is entirely justified in imposing such taxes if it needs the money. But the tax on cosmetics and toilet preparations cannot be justified because it is class legislation and class tax.

And the larger part of cosmetics are purchased by the working-women of the country.

While I am not interested in the manufacture of toilet preparations as such, because like any other manufacturers they must bear their fair burden of taxation if taxation is required, I wish to call your attention to the fact that the statute is so drawn because of the taxing of containers as to result in an unfair discrimination between manufacturers of the same competitive products. This discrimination directly affects the consumer.

I respectfully direct your attention to the following facts:

In the toilet-goods industry manufacturers may be grouped in the following classifications:

(a) Those who manufacture the taxable article and themselves place it in containers which have been bought for that purpose.

(b) Those who purchase the taxable commodity at arm's length from others in bulk and place such commodities in containers prior to sale.

(c) Those who supply containers to the actual bulk manufacturer of the taxable article retaining title to the containers and have the articles delivered in finished form by the manufacturer of the goods.

Resulting economic discrimination:

It is a group (a) which suffers as a result of the tax advantages accruing to groups (b) and (c). This is how it works out:

The manufacturer who makes his own taxable preparation and himself installs it in the container pays a tax of 10 percent upon his first sale to his customer. This tax is calculated on a large base representing not only the cost of the toilet preparation profit, cost of containers (which varies from comparative cheapness to a high relative cost), but also the tax is on selling expense, etc., which we will not here consider, but which varies in each individual case. On the sum total of the foregoing, including the container item, a 10-percent tax is computed.

Now, consider the case of the manufacturer who comes under group (b) or (c). A group (b) manufacturer, for example, pays a tax of 10 percent (passed on to him) upon the cost of the bulk material to him and pays no tax upon the container in which such material is installed by him. A case can be presented in this industry where an important manufacturer sells a commodity to two classes of trade: One buys it from him in bulk and the other buys it already packed in bottles. Those who purchase his commodity in bulk and themselves put it into containers actually sell the completed product at less than the original manufacturer is able to sell the product bottled by himself. The tax largely accounts for the competitive disadvantages. This situation doubtless exists in a number of other instances.

This taxing situation, so far as I know, does not exist in any other industry except the toilet-goods or cosmetic industry.

I would like to call your attention to the fact that the census of 1930 shows there were more than 37,000,000 males and more than 35,000,000 females residing in the United States, and as most of the cosmetics are bought by women, this tax is paid principally by them. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, in rising in opposition to this amendment I simply want to call attention to the fact it is estimated that substantially $16,000,000 is affected by this amendment. Certainly we cannot afford to lose that considerable item of revenue, and I therefore ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to speak in favor of the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN].

Mr. Chairman, more and more the women of the United States feel that they are the forgotten man. Only today I learned of a proposed cut in the women workers on relief. It will cause great suffering and hardship in my home city of Lowell and in other cities and towns of my district. The housekeepers are beginning to realize that the prices of various commodities are going up. My district is largely industrial, and the New Deal measures have not been helpful to New England. There is much unemployment there. The price of clothing and everything else is going up; as the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN] said for the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] the price of toilet articles is going up and will continue to go up.

It is generally agreed that the girls and women of today feel that cosmetics are a necessary part of, shall we say, their raiment or apparel. They get a little bit of cheer from these things. This tax will hurt the women with small incomes the most.

I believe that the women of small incomes will wonder why this administration, professedly devoted to the interests of the working classes, should remove the 10-percent tax from diamond tiaras and pearl necklaces, which belong only to the rich, while continuing a 10-percent tax on the toilet necessities of the women who work in the industries for a weekly rate or who are on relief.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members of the House to think of the women and eliminate this tax. There is not a Member of Congress who addresses an audience during his campaign for Congress who does not appeal to women in that audience. I hope the men will consider the women today and vote for this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCFARLANE) there were—ayes 46, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: Page 1, line 12, after the figures "1929", insert "Provided, however, That this act shall not become operative until the inactive gold fund of the United States Treasury is used to defray expenditures."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, as I stated earlier in the afternoon, we have accumulated an inactive gold fund of approximately $873,000,000. We have acquired that gold fund by the issuance of tax-exempt securities. When under the silver bill we acquire silver we do so through the issuance of non-interest-bearing silver certificates. We have issued approximately $750,000,000 of silver certificates in the acquisition of silver, whereas we have already issued $873,000,000 of tax-exempt securities to acquire gold. When we issue these tax-exempt securities, what happens? We pay approximately $74,000 a day interest for the privilege of doing what? For the privilege of acquiring foreign gold, bringing about a dislocation economically in foreign countries and producing a maldistribution of this essential medium of international trade. After having acquired the gold, what do we do? Do we put the gold to work as we do with silver? Do we put it into circulation? No. We hoard it. We place that gold in expensively maintained vaults. In the meantime we propose to tax the average man and woman in the United States under this measure to acquire approximately $500,000,000.

We talk about consistency. We are preparing to pass a measure which will raise $500,000,000 from the sweat of the brow of the average man and woman of the United States when at the same time we pay foreign countries to acquire gold, not to be put into circulation or use, but for the purpose of hoarding. That was not the purpose of the Gold Revaluation Act. That was not the objective of our monetary policy. We said when we revalued our gold that the Treasury would be permitted to acquire gold in collaboration or cooperation with foreign nations for the purpose of stabilizing the American dollar in relation to foreign exchange.

However, we have departed from this policy, and in order to maintain a credit economy which exacts its toll every hour from the American people, we are substituting credit dollars, dollars which are fictitious to a large extent, which are created by bookkeeping entries and bookkeeping manipulations. We propose to maintain a credit economy in the United States at the expense of a cash economy. France long ago saw the wisdom of substituting a cash economy for a credit economy.

Men talk about inflation and deflation. The real underlying cause of alternate booms and depressions can be traced to the credit system, to a system under which a thousand dollars of fiat money is created through a bookkeeping process by a banker who in the exercise of his judgment sees fit to loan a thousand dollars. There is a thousand dollars of credit money. It is here today and gone tomorrow. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to this bill.

In support of the point of order, I invite the attention of the Chair to the fact this resolution provides for the extension of certain excise taxes levied under two specific statutes, the act of 1932 as amended, and the act of 1933. It has no relation whatever to the gold question or the subject matter of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the proposed act seeks to extend the tax provisions for a period of 2 years. All this proposed amendment seeks to do is say that the act shall not be operative until certain conditions occur. The amendment does not seek to force the Treasury to utilize gold but is simply the exercise of an undoubted prerogative on the part of Congress to say that until certain conditions happen the act shall not be operative. I submit it is wholly within the power of Congress under the rules of the House to place a limitation upon a bill. The wording in this amendment is not a different kind of limitation than if it were a time limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The purpose of the amendment has been sufficently explained to make its restatement unnecessary.

The Chair finds certain decisions directly in point and cites the following decision by former Speaker Gillett in the fourth session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, found at section 3037, volume 8, of Cannon's Precedents:

An amendment delaying operation of proposed legislation pending an unrelated contingency was held not to be germane.

A similar holding was made by Mr. Graham, of Illinois, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, in the first session of the Sixty-eighth Congress, as follows:

A different subject from that under consideration may not be proposed under the guise of a limitation.

This decision is found in section 3035 of volume 8 of Cannon's Precedents.

Upon these and related authorities the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 1, line 12, after the period, insert "Provided, however, That the taxes herein imposed shall not be levied or collected until the Secretary of the Treasury has utilized for currency purposes all the inactive, unpledged, and unallocated gold owned and held by the United States Treasury."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

INACTIVE GOLD SHOULD BE USED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is, of course, very similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to invite the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means to certain things I think should be considered in connection with tax matters. One is this inactive gold. We have $878,000,000 in the inactive-gold fund. The only thing in the world which would be necessary to enable us to use that money would be for the Secretary of the Treasury to allow it to go into the fund as an asset, then issue gold certificates under the law now permitting such issue. He would issue gold certificates, deposit the gold certificates with a Federal Reserve bank, and receive Federal Reserve notes in return for them, which could be paid out in any way the Treasury pays out money. If we needed only $878,000,000, I presume those of us who believe in using this gold would be justified in voting against this bill, but since we need the $878,000,000 and also the amount embodied in this bill, I presume we would be justified in voting for the bill if this amendment is held not germane or defeated.

SOCIAL SECURITY RESERVE FUND

I desire to congratulate the Committee on Ways and Means on the provision in the social-security law relating to a reserve fund. Eventually this reserve fund, if it remains intact, and I hope this committee holds the line and will not permit the reserve-fund law to be changed, will own all the Government bonds in this Nation. When all Government bonds are owned by the reserve fund we will continue to pay interest on the bonds, but the interest will go to the old people of this country and will not go to the holders of Government bonds.

TAX-EXEMPT BONDS

Our principal problem today is Government obligations. We have outstanding approximately $35,000,000,000 of obligations which are tax-exempt and interest-bearing. People are escaping taxation by purchasing these bonds.

WHO DOES GOVERNMENT OWE?

I think some committee which has jurisdiction of this problem should bring in a resolution or a bill to force the names of our creditors to be made public. Who are our creditors? Do you know whom we owe? People like to know whom they owe. I would like to know whom this Government owes. We would like to know if certain families are using Government bonds for the purpose of wholly escaping taxation. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] brought out earlier today the fact that a man with $1,000,000 can better afford to invest the money in Government obligations, although the interest rate is small, than go into a business which will pay him a 6-percent net return each year, for the reason he will make more by having his money invested in Government bonds. We should not have a situation like this. If our bill passes which will cause the Government to own the 12 Federal Reserve banks, these Government obligations can eventually, not quickly, be purchased by these banks and the Government saved $800,000,000 a year in interest. We should work in the direction of getting rid of these tax-exempt interest-bearing Government obligations. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas upon the grounds previously stated, and upon the further ground of the sound and excellent decision of the Chair, just made.

The CHAIRMAN. In addition to the authorities cited by the Chair in the former ruling, the Chair calls attention to sections 3033 and 3034 of volume 8 of Cannon's Precedents, the first holding that an amendment is not necessarily germane because presented in the form of a limitation, and the second holding that it is not in order to propose by way of limitation propositions on subjects different from that under consideration.

The pending resolution has to do with providing revenue, whereas the amendment has to do with the use of gold for currency purposes.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts: After line 12, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Section 609 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, relating to the tax on sporting goods is hereby repealed."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would eliminate the 10-percent tax on sporting goods. The revenue raised was only $5,531,122 last year—mere car-fare money for an administration spending annually more than $8,000,000,000. But it is a heavy and unjust burden upon a number of struggling industries; and, furthermore, it is a discriminatory tax.

There is no valid reason to single out a half dozen industries in the country, like the sporting-goods manufacturer, the furrier, the maker of cosmetics, and say they must bear a larger burden than the great industries of the country.

We love to orate in behalf of youth; to testify our appreciation of the value of healthy boys and girls to the country. And then we penalize youth by exacting from them a 10-percent tax on the articles which would contribute to the upbuilding of health and character.

Every time a boy or girl buys a tennis racket, a baseball, a pair of skates, a fishing rod, or a football a 10-percent tax must go to the Treasury.

This tax was originally inaugurated as a hasty grab for new revenue, and the impression was given it was to be temporary. The present continuance gives evidence of our intention to freeze these taxes permanently.

The manufacturers of the articles in my district are willing to pay their fair share of taxes, but they do feel as if they should be treated as well as others who are engaged in the manufacturing business. Equal treatment is the only honest standard to be set up.

The manufacturers of the articles upon which tax extensions are being imposed today are in fields where the average concern is a small one; a field where it is easy to enter business, and consequently the competition is keen.

Some, like the tennis-racket manufacturer, are being crowded to the wall through the increasing imports from Japan. I plead for justice to these small manufacturers and ask for the elimination of this tax.

The Treasury will suffer little, and it will be doing the right thing by an industry which has been in jeopardy now for 6 years. It will give relief to the youth and the purchaser of sporting goods. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I remind the Committee that this item involves an estimated revenue of more than $8,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the Committee say $5,000,000 in their report?

Mr. COOPER. This yielded $5,531,000 in 1936. The estimate for 1937 is $7,620,000, and the estimate for 1938 is $8,050,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, if the Treasury is not any better in its estimate than it has been in the past, it might well be near the $5,000,000 mark.

Mr. COOPER. On this side we take the estimates of the Treasury, which have been found far more accurate than the estimate made under the previous administration. The gentleman called attention to the bats and balls used by the small boys. His amendment would also cover the golf balls and all the other sporting equipment used by the millionaires and others of this country. We feel that this item should be continued, and ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Under the bill you are taxing sporting goods of all kinds. The amendment proposes to strike out that section. I do not think we ought to jump on the cripples, and we ought not to jump on the boys and girls and those who have to buy sporting goods, skates, tennis rackets, and so forth. We have had plenty of opportunity to put a fair tax on the wealth of the Nation, and, as I pointed out on the floor the day before yesterday, and at other times, all the national banks within the United States in 1933 paid only $552,000 in income taxes. Why? Because this committee from time to time have brought in legislation that exempts the bankers of the United States from paying income tax. Yet you are willing to jump on the cripples, so to speak, and put these nuisance taxes on all athletic goods, cosmetics, oil, gas, stamps, and so forth.

I think it is high time we ought to defeat this kind of legislation. I cannot see any reason that will justify it at this time. For the last several years we have been asked in this Congress to extend this or that provision for just 1 more year, and then comes another just 1 more year and another just 1 more year, with the promise that they would try to eliminate it, but every time a tax bill comes in here we find it is full of more loopholes for the rich of the country through which they may escape paying taxes. Now we find our tax laws full of loopholes through which wealth escapes more taxes annually than it pays, and all the time wealth has thus indirectly defeated our income-tax laws and have forced raising a majority of our revenue through sales or excise taxes. We find as time goes on that the sales taxes are increasing, that we are today paying more than 60 percent of the revenue of this country through sales taxes of different kinds, while loopholes are being written in our income-tax laws through which the rich could escape the payment of taxes based on income.

We should recommit this legislation at this time and insist that the Ways and Means Committee report legislation taking the loopholes out of our tax laws, which they themselves largely placed in the law. If and when they do this, there will be no necessity for placing this $500,000,000 additional sales-tax levy on the poor, for we can easily raise several times this amount by stopping the known loopholes in our tax laws as I have previously pointed out. I think it is time to call a halt. I think you ought to adopt this amendment. I think you ought to see that the boys and girls of this country who buy all kinds of sporting goods that you pay for ought to get them tax free. I do not think you ought to tax chewing gum and all of these other items mentioned in this bill. In fact, I think you ought to send this bill back to the committee and request this committee to bring forward the bill to take the loopholes out of our revenue laws, and we ought to adopt this amendment as a start in the right direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN) there were ayes 59 and noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWYNNE. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GWYNNE: Page 1, line 6, after the period, insert the following as a new section:

"Section 609 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the words 'and uniforms' wherever those words occur in said section."

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendis to exempt from taxation imposed in section 609 athletic uniforms. It is offered for the purpose of removing a great injustice that has grown up under this section. There are certain athletic uniforms that are distinctive in character. There are others which are not. For example, it is possible for the players of certain games to fabricate their own uniforms from goods which they buy from clothing stores. For example, a sweater. The same sweater may be bought out of a sporting-goods store and it will be subject to a tax, but if bought at a clothing store it is not subject to the tax.

This amendment is very mild and I trust will not unbalance the Budget to the extent of the $5,000,000 complained of regarding the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], because the entire amount of revenue collected from the sale of uniforms is small and is being made constantly smaller because of the operation of this very law.

If it were possible to devise an amendment which would tax all athletic uniforms, I would support that amendment; but it seems that such an amendment cannot be drawn. Therefore I think in justice to the manufacturers and to the retailers of athletic uniforms this amendment should be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana: Page 1, line 12, strike out the period at the end of the line and add the following proviso: "Provided, however, That paragraph (7) of subsection (c) of section 601 of Revenue Act of 1932 is amended to read as follows:

"'(7) Copper-bearing ores and concentrates and articles provided for in paragraphs 316, 380, 381, 387, 1620, 1634, 1657, 1658, or 1659 of the Tariff Act of 1930, 9 cents per pound on the copper contained therein: Provided, That no tax under this paragraph shall be imposed on copper in any of the foregoing which is lost in metallurgical processes: Provided further, That ores or concentrates usable as a flux or sulphur reagent in copper smelting and/or converting and having a copper content of not more than 15 percent, when imported for fluxing purposes, shall be admitted free of said tax in an aggregate amount of not to exceed in any one year 15,000 tons of copper content. All articles dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1930, not provided for heretofore in this paragraph, in which copper (including copper in alloys) is the component material of chief value, 3 cents per pound. All articles dutiable under the Tariff Act of 1930, not provided for heretofore in this paragraph, containing 4 percent or more of copper by weight, 3 percent ad valorem, or three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, whichever is the lower. The tax on the articles described in this paragraph shall apply only with respect to the importation of such articles. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this paragraph.'"

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to increase the excise tax on copper from 4 cents to 9 cents. The purpose is mainly that the present tax or excise tax on copper has hardly brought in enough to pay for the administrative purposes of the act. Further, because it has not provided the protection that the copper industry in the United States ought to have.

The Anaconda Copper Mining Co., which is one of the largest producers in the world, has two-thirds of its holdings in foreign countries, principally South America and Poland. The Anaconda Copper Mining Co. in this country, particularly in my State, has now become a consuming company, because it is also a fabricator as well as a producing company. In the city of Butte alone, in which is the richest hill in all the world, many of the shafts are closed down and thousands and thousands of miners are on relief. In the city of Anaconda, where one of their smelters is located, the same situation exists. In the city of Great Falls, Mont., where there is also a smelter, the same situation exists. The entire State of Montana, all of the farmers, and all of the rural population depend upon what the copper industry in Montana does as to its prosperity. The only way they can have any prosperity in the State of Montana is by the purchasing power of these miners and the smelter men. I think you should protect American labor against South American cheap labor and against the cheap labor from Europe. You ought to take those men off of relief. You ought to give them a chance to go back to work. You ought to say to the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. and the other copper companies in the United States, "You went into our country and you took over this wonderful natural resource, but now you find some place to produce it cheaper and you throw all these men out of employment."

You ought to say to them that they should come back into the United States, where they made their money originally; that they should come back here and provide employment for these miners and smeltermen and others who are on relief. I have not time to go into it exhaustively, but I sincerely hope and trust that you will disregard the committee's recommendation. If you want revenue, here is a good chance to get it. The 4-cent tax brought in only a little over $2,000,000. If we have any more imports you will get additional revenue. Practically nobody but the producers themselves is opposed to this tax. All the smaller mining producers want it; practically everybody out there in the West where copper is mined wants this tax increased. Some of them want it increased to as much as 15 cents, but I have struck what I believe is a fair compromise at 9 cents, and I sincerely hope and trust that the committee will see fit to adopt my amendment and that the Committee of the Whole will go along and increase this tax to 9 cents.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is typical of amendments that do not have committee consideration; and I can say that that statement goes for the amendment increasing the tariff on coal offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Neither the latter amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole nor this copper amendment, if it be adopted, would benefit coal producers, coal miners, copper producers, or copper miners one single thin dime.

Let us take copper, for instance: The world price of copper has been higher than the domestic price of copper in recent weeks and months. The crying need has been for more copper. Now, it may be all right for the Anaconda Copper Co., which have plants and mines, and fabricate their own copper—they may have a supply of copper, but there are independent fabricators that have been unable to get copper even at the unprecedented high prices.

This matter has been presented to the members of the committee, and it is a very serious proposition. In my opinion, I do not believe that the present tariff on copper today, which is continued in this bill, under existing circumstances is of any consequence. I think that, under normal conditions, the present rate on copper of 4 cents a pound, a figure which the many Members who represent copper districts and copper States desire to have continued, may be of some benefit.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. I did not say that Anaconda wanted it. Anaconda does not want it, because two-thirds of its holdings are in foreign lands.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I misunderstood him. It has been my understanding that the Anaconda Co. did not want the present rate continued.

Now, in regard to the coal amendment, increasing the rate from $2 to $5 per ton, I do not represent a coal district, but you all know I have the interest of the coal country at heart. I have spent much time and effort in the endeavor to stabilize the coal industry. I want to say to you that this amendment is not worth a tinker's damn. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is merely shadow-boxing. There has been no hearing on it.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLANNERY. It is shadow-boxing to the extent of 6,000 needy families in that coal region and brings in $5,000,000 of revenue.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I again state that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is shadow-boxing. To listen to the gentleman from Pennsylvania when he discusses about the conditions in the anthracite fields, which is the character of coal produced in his district, you would think that every ton of anthracite that is brought into this country under the existing laws deprives his anthracite miners of their market and that if this tax rate were increased that immediately the sun would shine for the distressed families who depend upon anthracite production for a livelihood. I do not doubt that the anthracite miners are in need of additional markets, but the importation of coal into this country is so insignificant that it plays no substantial part in their distress.

I insert herewith a table showing summary of production, imports, and exports of anthracite coal during calendar years 1924–36 (in thousands of long tons). This report is contained in the report of the United States Tariff Commission for May 1937:

[1] Preliminary.

It should be noted that there was more anthracite coal imported in the year 1930 than in any year since the tax of $2 per ton was imposed. The 7-year average, ending in 1930, was 380,000 tons; the 6-year average, ending in 1936, was 488,000 tons. The 4-year average during which the present tax was effective is 473,500 tons, which, in my mind, is conclusive that the tax on anthracite has in no wise been effective, and an increase in rate would likewise be ineffective.

Anthracite production averages 59,225,000 long tons during the period 1924–36. It reached a peak of 79,135,000 tons in 1924, and a low point of 44,419,000 tons in 1933. In 1936 it amounted to 48,893,000 tons. Anthracite is used chiefly for domestic heating rather than for industrial purposes. The decline in domestic production, therefore, may be accounted for in part by the increased use of gas and oil for heating purposes.

Imports of anthracite coal have amounted to approximately 1 percent, and exports to from 3 to 5 percent of the quantity produced domestically. Imports have come chiefly from the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and Canada; they are entered principally at ports in New England which consume approximately 10 percent of domestic shipments of anthracite. Exports are shipped largely to the Canadian Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Transportation charges play an important part in influencing the marketing of this commodity, particularly in New England. European anthracite has a lower ash content and sells at a higher price than does domestic anthracite.

Many Members might think that it would be of benefit to the bituminous coal country. Nothing is further from the facts, and, as information, I insert herewith a table showing summary of production, imports, and exports of bituminous coal during the calendar years 1924–36—in thousands of long tons. This report is also contained in the report of the United States Tariff Commission for May 1937.

[1] Includes slack, culm, and lignite.
[2] Preliminary.

The 13-year average, as shown on the above table, of domestic production of bituminous coal is 397,267,000 tons; the total imports during this same period is an average of 319,000 tons per year which is less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the annual domestic production. It is easily seen that there was practically the same amount of bituminous coal imported per year in 1931–32, before the effective date of the act, as has been imported since the effective date of the act. The 13-year average of exports of bituminous coal is 13,637,000 tons or approximately 43 times more than the 13-year average of imports of bituminous coal.

Domestic production of bituminous coal averaged 397,267,000 long tons during the period 1924–36. Production reached a peak of 511,900,000 tons in 1926 and a low of 276,500,000 tons in 1932. In 1936 it amounted to 385,670,000 tons.

Exports have generally amounted to about 3 percent of the domestic production. In all years exports have exceeded imports. Imports have entered principally from western Canada to the States of Montana, Idaho, and Washington; exports have been shipped principally to the central Canadian Provinces. Proximity and the charges for transportation have been the principal factors accounting for the trade in coal between Canada and the United States. Under the existing law, as well as the proposed amendment, the tax rate would have no effect whatever as to Canadian imports under the express terms of the act.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the coal amendment has been passed, that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the pending amendment.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. I am using the figure on coal for the purpose of illustrating the futility of the copper amendment, to show that there is nothing of benefit in either one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Now, get that, about 1 percent of anthracite imported, and less than one-tenth of 1 percent bituminous coal imported.

The original $2 rate carried in this bill was adopted by a floor amendment. There had been no hearing on the tax on imported coal and when we got through in the House it was found that it was actually detrimental to the coal industry because it was found that we exported much more coal than we imported, and it had to be fixed up by making it only applicable to those countries where we imported more than we exported to that particular country.

If anything were needed, other than the official figures which I have inserted hereinabove, I would call your attention to certain testimony which took place before the joint committee of the House and Senate which was holding hearings on the Wagner-Connery bill, the wages and hours bill. Mr. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, was testifying before the committee. Mr. Lewis was interrogated by Representative William Connery, as follows:

Representative CONNERY. Mr. Lewis, right along the line, so that they will not have to come back to it when I reach my own questions—if Mr. Thomas will yield—in the first 6 months of this year there were about 400,000 tons of Welsh coal came in here from Wales and from Russia and can be delivered in the port of Boston for $3 a ton less than your anthracite coal from Pennsylvania can be delivered in the port of Boston after all of the landed costs have been paid on the foreign coal. If this bill comes into effect, suppose they went to a 30-hour week in the mines—I don't know what your ordinary wage is—but certainly your wages in Russia and Wales are far below what they are here, and we opened the market that way to the foreign coal. Don't you think you are going to suffer here unless something would be put in, either permissive or otherwise, to allow this board or to allow the Tariff Commission after advising with the President, to take care of that situation of foreign imports?

Mr. LEWIS (John L. Lewis). Are you speaking of the Welsh importations or the Russian?

Representative CONNERY. Both. About 400,000 tons since January.

Mr. LEWIS. Three hundred and eighty-eight thousand tons of that was Russian coal which paid $2 a ton import tax. The Welsh coal comes in duty free under the favored-nation arrangement. The imports from Wales are insignificant. The total production of anthracite in Wales is only three and one-half million tons per year as contrasted with our present 50,000,000 tons. Obviously, England could not export her entire production of anthracite, and the amount that will be exported from Wales, I think, is not in itself substantially important.

Now, the question of the Russian importations—that ran up from about 250,000 tons in 1935 to 388,000 tons in 1936. That coal paid the import duty of 10 cents a hundred pounds or $2 a ton. As a matter of fact, that is the only country against which the coal tariff runs—Russia. That $2 a ton does not stop the importation of Russian coal. Five dollars a ton would not stop the importation of Russian coal if Russia wanted to export that tonnage to build up its trade balance in America. Russian coal has no cost of production that can be translated or compared with our costs. One cannot find a cost of production in Russia and measure it against any tangible equations.

The answer to the question of Russian coal is not through the application, in my judgment, of a greater coal tariff.

Here it is seen that the $5-per ton rate, which is the subject under discussion here, was also the subject of discussion. We submit the statement of Mr. Lewis that this rate would have no beneficial effect for the coal miner or coal producer of this country.

My friend FLANNERY, in the course of the debate, has referred to the fact that there was an element of $5,000,000 in revenue. I am unable to see where he gets those figures and, for the purpose of clarity, I insert herewith a statement of revenues derived since the present tax rate was imposed:

Tax on importation of coal

[Importation excise tax imposed by sec. 601 (c) (5), Revenue Act of 1932]

Revenue:
Period from June 21–Dec. 31, 1932	$589,823
Calendar year 1933	1,341,324
Calendar year 1934	978,293
Calendar year 1935	801,026
Calendar year 1936	968,916

The increase of 150 percent of this tax, as proposed by the amendment, would bring the total revenue derived from such source up to 50 percent of his figure, or approximately $2,500,000. The point is that the amendment is not offered for the purpose of revenue, but for the benefit to the anthracite-coal miners and coal producers and we submit to you that we have shown that it would be of no benefit to them and of no benefit to the bituminous producers and the bituminous-coal miners.

The copper-tax amendment, as well as the coal-tax amendment, demonstrates the danger involved of attempting to write a tax or a tariff bill on the floor of the House when no hearings have been held. We ask that the increase in the copper-tax amendment be voted down.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

So far as the copper amendment is concerned, I represent a district that probably uses more copper than the rest of the country put together. In 1932 this tax was put on. It was called at that time an excise tax. Actually it is a tariff. When that tax was put on the price of copper was 5 cents a pound. Our mines were closing down. They were filling up with water. Our producers had a great deal of copper above ground. There was not enough work, either domestic or foreign, to keep the copper mines going. The manufacturers as well as the miners wanted to keep them going, so they joined in asking for this tax of 4 cents a pound. As I say, the price of copper at that time was 5 cents a pound.

Within the last year there has been a great demand, particularly in Europe, for copper for war purposes. It has run the price up until it has been above 17 cents a pound. It is now back to 14 cents a pound, both here and abroad, although the price abroad is slightly higher than the domestic price at present, and has been for some 10 months. The price is about 14 cents now, as I stated. When the tax was put on it was 5 cents.

At the time the tax was put on production was negligible, being around 200,000 tons, as I remember. We were not using as much as we were producing. We were not making a dent in the supply we had above ground. We needed the tax to keep our mines from closing up altogether, because the cheap copper, principally from Africa, could come in with the price then prevailing in the world market. Today we are using more copper than is being produced. We have used up most of the stocks above ground. The price is around 14 cents, and that is about as high as we can profitably use copper in fabrication. If it gets much higher, substitute metals are used. We lose the business of the fabricating companies. We cut down employment, not only in the factories but also in the mines. In other words, we cut off our own nose to spite our face if we try to keep the price of copper higher than 14 cents.

We are not importing any material amount under the 4-cent tax. That can easily be noted when it brought in only $2,000,000 a year. It is a very minor part of the amount we are using. Last year we produced in this country some 613,000 tons of copper. This year we will use in fabrication in this country about 1,100,000 tons of copper. We will not get the production up to a million tons.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Is that not a good argument why there ought to be more production in the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. But not at a price above 14 cents. It would ruin our industry. We do not want these mines to close down, but neither do we want to close the manufacturing plants.

Here is what has happened. Anaconda and certain other companies control both mining and fabricating units. If there is a shortage, as there may be even with the 4 cents tax, the mine-controlled factories would receive supplies first, and not the independents. We do not want to foster monopoly by a high tax.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LUCE moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the enacting clause stricken out.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the greater part of the debate today in the hope I might find out a reason why this bill should pass instead of resorting to the other method of baring the condition of the Treasury. Nobody has met squarely the issue of whether we shall raise more by taxes or spend less money.

We were told by the President on the 20th of April that there should be economy. Already I have called the attention of the House to some of the results of his advice. I bring that record up to date.

Within 4 hours after the message of the President was delivered to the House it voted to give away $5,000,000 to a profit-making enterprise in New York, an exposition, a world's fair. Fortunately the President saw fit to veto the bill, and therefore it will not be found in the total.

The next day there came along, and was approved, a proposal to add to the expense of our Government a million dollars a year for taking care of water pollution. That was a million dollars added the day after the President gave us to understand he did not want additional expenditures.

Two days later the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee having charge of the Agricultural Department appropriation bill secured an increase in the coming year's expenditure over that of this year of $143,402,000.

A week later the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the War Department secured an increase of $27,706,000 over this year's expenditure.

Five days later the House voted $2,500,000 to grow trees and give them away.

Then came the Department of Interior appropriation bill which, taking into account $33,000,000 reappropriated, increased this year's expenditure of the Government by $39,626,000.

Mr. Chairman, since the President asked us for economy we have, as far as I have observed, increased the appropriations for the coming year by $213,234,875. Today we are being asked to continue taxes in the amount of $500,000,000 which you on the Democratic side might have lessened to the extent of two-fifths if you had followed your President, two-fifths if you had stopped voting to spend more money for the next fiscal year than will have been spent in this fiscal year.

I am wondering what is going to happen. There remain weeks, perhaps months of the session, with further opportunities to spend more money, to spend more money needlessly, to spend more money foolishly. Are you going to keep on discarding, flouting, scorning the request of your President, and meet the occasion only by extending tax laws as you are doing in this instance? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having assumed the chair, Mr. LANHAM, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the joint resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, moved that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, did that express the sentiment of the gentleman who made the motion?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman knows better than that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot answer the inquiry. That was the report the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union made.

The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. SHORT)—ayes 91, noes 100.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-six Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 156, not voting 125, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. HOUSTON was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

AMERICAN SOCIETY FOR CONTROL OF CANCER

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD concerning the wonderful work of the field army of the American Society for the Control of Cancer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to call to the attention of this House the great humanitarian work being done by the women's field army of the American Society for the Control of Cancer. This is one of the finest movements ever instituted for the relief of suffering humanity.

Medical authorities estimate that 300,000 women in this country have cancer. About 80,000 will die of it this year. It is the Nation's second most common cause of death. It is a horrible, painful, slow-killing disease, and science knows but little of its causes. Those, for instance, who have entered this ward called "no man's land" at Hines Veterans' Hospital at Chicago, Ill., know the terror that must be in the minds of those men whose cases have been taken up too late. They also know the courage with which those men bear their cross of pain. It does know, however, that about six women get cancer to every five men, and that most cases of cancer, when taken in its early stages, are curable. Cancer is the greatest public-health problem before us today. Its death rate is nearly three times that of tuberculosis. Each year the total deaths from this scourge are increasing. In 1910 cancer was sixth in the list of deadly diseases. Today it is second. According to reliable figures, no less than 153,000 persons died in 1935 of cancer. It is terrifying to think about. The sad part of it is that many people believe cancer incurable and give up in hopeless despair without attempting a cure. That is the chief problem confronting the women's field army—to educate the people, to make them realize that early cancer is definitely curable in a great majority of cases.

The organization sponsoring the women's field army is the American Society for the Control of Cancer, a national educational body formed in 1913 by representatives of 10 medical societies concerned in one way or another with cancer, and by outstanding physicians, research workers, and laymen. The society had had for years field representatives covering the country, conferring with physicians, surveying existing cancer facilities, collecting data on the problem at hand. This year, after requests from medical men throughout the country, the society decided to launch a Nation-wide drive to interest the general public, and particularly women, in the problem of cancer control.

Thus the women's field army was organized. It is already active in some 38 States. The army is particularly fortunate in having at its head Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, past president of the General Foundation of Women's Clubs, and now dean of Stoneleigh College, in Rye, N. H. Mrs. Poole has waged an active fight against cancer for years, getting club members to cooperate with medical societies in bringing into the open the known facts on cancer control. She has a magnetic personality, a wonderful capacity for work, and a persistency of purpose that is so much needed in the tremendous task she has undertaken.

Her assistant is Mrs. Margaret B. Illig, of Onset, Mass., who before her marriage was a trained radiologist who specialized in cancer cases. She also has held high office in the General Federation of Women's Clubs and is a forceful speaker upon medical and biological subjects.

Outstanding women have been selected to head the organization work in each State. These are the State commanders. They appoint vice commanders, captains, and lieutenants, so that the organization of the women's field army reaches right down into every community in the State. All of these officers are volunteers, generally contributing their energy and their time to the cause of saving human life.

The educational work has been endorsed by and will be carried out under the direction of the cancer committees of the State medical society. The task of the army is to form an intelligent and alert audience for cancer education which will be supervised by competent physicians. The doctors will deliver the lectures and answer the medical questions. It is the work of the army to see that the physicians get the ear of every man and woman in every community.

Eminent surgeons are in agreement on the fact that education of this kind will really save lives. It is fitting to quote the opinion of an eminent surgeon, former president of the American College of Surgeons, and now president of the American Society for the Control of Cancer, Dr. Robert B. Greenough, of Boston. Dr. Greenough said recently:

> It is my humble opinion that in all probability more lives have been saved in the past 10 years by reason of public education, which has diminished the delay in the application of treatment, than by the utilization of all the advances which have been made in our knowledge of cancer and of the many improvements in our methods of treatment of this disease.

Women everywhere in this country are becoming more and more interested in the subject. The field army is consolidating this interest and showing them how to use it constructively in the war that must be fought against the insidious menace. The organized women of America can do much to drive the scourge from the land. It is hoped, and not without reason, to attain the same success in the fight against cancer as was attained in the campaign against the white plague—tuberculosis.

The women's field army is receiving splendid support from organizations of all types in the States and nationally. The national advisory board is headed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and includes the heads of the following organizations: The National Organization of Public Health Nurses, the Association of Women in Public Health, the National Association of Colored Women, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women, the Zonta International, the National Council of Women, the International Federation of Business and Professional Women, the National Council of Jewish Women, the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the National Woman's Relief Society, the American Association of University Women, the Catholic Daughters of America, and, last but not least, the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

It is an admirable movement. You and I are sure to hear more and more of its activities as its representatives reach out into the cities and towns of our districts. I ask each Member of this House to give encouragement and help to this worthy cause. It needs your help and the help of every one of our citizens. It is the first organized campaign against cancer. To win, it must have the active cooperation of each one of us. We must stop this alarming increase in cancer deaths. I know of no better way to do so than to support this campaign of education—to educate the general public to the belief that early cancer is curable and that they should seek medical advice at the first suspicion of danger.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made today by inserting a letter which I addressed to the Members of the House and also about four telegrams received by me in reference to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McNARY. What bill is it, Mr. President?

Mr. POPE. Senate bill 2555, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], dealing with power and other matters.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE (REPT. NO. 710)

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a privileged report and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Privilege and Elections, to which was referred the petition of H. C. Lowry, a citizen of Tennessee, petitioning the Senate to withhold the oath of office from GEORGE L. BERRY as Senator from the State of Tennessee and to declare that the said GEORGE L. BERRY is not entitled to a seat in the Senate, having considered the same, submit the following report:

1. The allegations as made are insufficient to show jurisdiction in the Senate or warrant action by the Senate.

2. The committee recommends that no further action be taken upon the petition or memorial.

Mr. GEORGE. I move the adoption of the report.

I may say it was a unanimous decision of all members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections who were present, the decision having been reached after a careful investigation of the entire matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Georgia to state that the report was unanimous?

Mr. GEORGE. It was a unanimous decision reached after careful investigation of the charges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

STEEL STRIKE AT MONROE, MICH.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I present for the RECORD a resolution adopted by the City Commissioners of Monroe, Mich., with respect to the present strike situation there. Attached to the resolution is a report upon a municipal election held for employees of the Newton Steel Co. plant, which is in controversy. I call attention to the results of the vote as recorded by the city clerk.

To the question, "Are you in favor of the strike?" the vote was—yes 30, no 782.

To the question, "Do you desire to return to work now?" the vote was—yes 836, no 20.

I ask that the resolution and exhibit be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the city of Monroe has been most unfortunate in having its share of labor disputes which have resulted in a shut-down of our local steel mill, the Newton Steel Co.; and

Whereas the employees of the said steel mill are members of a local union of their own and some members of C. I. O.; and

Whereas the mayor of the city of Monroe has done everything in his power to avoid a conflict between these two organizations; and

Whereas our mayor, through the medium of a secret ballot, has attempted to ascertain the views of the great majority of the employees of the said steel mill in relation to the so-called strike now in existence here; and

Whereas the mayor of the city of Monroe has likewise attempted by every possible means to have this controversy adjusted and settled peaceably for the benefit of all of the citizens of Monroe: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this commission wholeheartedly and unanimously approves of every step taken by the mayor in connection with this controversy and that we further assure the mayor of our wholehearted support in any steps that he may take in the future to help bring about an early settlement of this dispute.

I hereby certify that the above resolution was passed at the regular meeting of the commission of the city of Monroe, Mich., held Monday, June 7, 1937, at 7:30 p. m.

[SEAL] D. A. SOLEAU,
City Clerk.

PROPOSED INCOME TAX ON GOVERNMENT SECURITIES

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary a copy of a letter written by me to the Secretary of the Treasury and his reply thereto on the subject of tax-exempt securities, together with certain data relating to the subject.

There being no objection, the letters and data were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 4, 1937.

Hon. HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury, Treasury Department,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SECRETARY: I will appreciate a report from you within a few days stating whether the Treasury is in favor of immediate action by Congress on legislation to provide for a tax on the income of future issues of United States Government securities which are now exempt and on future issues of securities by States and subdivisions thereof.

In view of the current program to avoid tax evasion and otherwise to provide for an adequate national revenue, I suggest that a definite position by the Treasury on this important question should be taken immediately.

For several years the Congress has had bills and resolutions before it which would provide for such a tax. I personally introduced such measures in the Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Congresses, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 16, 1934, Senator ROBINSON, the Democratic Senate leader, inserted a comprehensive study which I prepared on this subject, with recommendations that income from future issues of all Federal securities should be taxed by passage of a private bill, but that a constitutional amendment would be necessary to enable the Federal Government to tax future issues of securities issued by the States, and likewise to enable the States to tax income from Federal securities.

In principle the Treasury has been favorable to a tax on securities now exempt since September 23, 1921, when former Secretary Mellon in a report to the Committee on Ways and Means in the House stated that "The ever-increasing volume of tax-exempt securities (issued in the most part by States and municipalities) represent a grave economic evil, not only by reason of the loss of revenue which it entails in the Federal Government but also of its tendency to encourage the growth of public indebtedness and to divert capital from productive enterprises." Mr. Mellon was also on record on numerous other occasions in support of such a tax.

On December 6, 1923, the late President Coolidge, in his annual message to Congress, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, said: "Another reform which is urgent in our fiscal system is the abolition of the right to issue tax-exempt securities."

Also on record in 1923 is former President Hoover, who was then Secretary of Commerce, who, in a communication to the Senate, said, among other things: "It is an extraordinary thing for a commercial nation like ours to have developed a form of taxation which puts a premium on nonproductivity and a blight on productivity itself." This was in connection with general recommendations for a tax on income from both Federal and State securities generally exempted.

Former Secretary Mellon is again on record on the subject in his annual report to the Sixty-ninth Congress, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, with the following statement: "Looking at the proposition logically there is no reason for the existence of tax-exempt securitites. There ought to be no refuge to which the wealthy man can go and avoid income taxes at times when the Federal Government needs the money. A constitutional amendment to make these securities taxable should be passed. The Treasury has consistently been the advocate of such reform."

Again, in 1928, in his annual report, Mr. Mellon was on record favoring such a tax, and in 1930 he took a very vigorous position in his support.

The present administration has made reports to congressional committees, by the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows:

On March 6, 1934, you notified the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee that—

"Although as a matter of principle the Treasury is favorable to the elimination of all tax-exempt securities, it would be opposed to the enactment of S. 1892, which would eliminate the tax-exempt feature of future issues of Federal obligations only.

"To require that future Federal obligations be issued on a fully taxable basis in competition with tax-exempt securities originating elsewhere would be likely to react unfavorably on the market for Federal securities, increasing the cost of the Government's borrowing and complicating the heavy financing operations which must be effected in the near future."

On March 19, 1935, you notified the chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance that "The Treasury has already stated that it favors the adoption of a constitutional amendment permitting the taxation by the United States of the interest on future issues of State and municipal securities; and by the State on future issues of Federal securities. In the absence of such a constitutional amendment the Treasury is opposed to enactment of S. 201, a bill to provide for a tax on income from Federal securities only.

The latest report from your Department to Senator HARRISON, on legislation pending in this Congress, dated February 5, 1937, summarizes the Department's previous recommendations and adds:

"The Treasury has already stated that it favors the adoption of a constitutional amendment permitting the taxation by the United States of the interest on future issues of State and municipal securities; and by the States on future issues of Federal securities. In the absence of such a constitutional amendment the Treasury is opposed to the enactment of S. 16, a bill to provide for a tax on income from Federal securities only."

I desire to point out that my resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 5, for a constitutional amendment as referred to is now pending in the Senate Judiciary Committee. It was introduced in conjunction with S. 16, referred to above, to provide for a tax on Federal securities.

Very truly yours, AUGUSTINE LONERGAN.

[Copy of letter from Treasury Department]

JUNE 10, 1937.

MY DEAR SENATOR LONERGAN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of June 4, 1937, in which you request a report within a few days stating whether the Treasury is in favor of immediate action by Congress on legislation to provide for a tax on the income of future issues of United States Government securities which are now exempt, and on future issues of securities by States and subdivisions thereof.

As your letter recognizes, the Treasury Department has on numerous occasions, during the present and former administrations, gone on record unequivocally as favoring the adoption of a constitutional amendment which would permit the taxation by the United States of the interest on future issues of State and municipal securities; and by the States on future issues of Federal securities. The Department continues to adhere to its previous position upon this question.

If this result could be achieved by legislation alone, the solution of the problem of the tax-exempt security would be relatively simple. Unfortunately it seems perfectly clear under the decisions of the courts that the desired result cannot be attained in the case of State and municipal issues by any action short of the submission and ratification by the States of a constitutional amendment. For the reasons stated in my letter of March 6, 1934, to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, from which you quote, the Department is compelled to oppose the enactment of legislation which would eliminate the tax-exempt feature of future issues of Federal obligations, while State and local issues would continue to enjoy their constitutional immunity from Federal taxation. It is further believed that submission of a constitutional amendment should precede legislative action with respect to the tax-exempt status of future issues of Federal securities in view of the uncertainty as to the ratification of such an amendment by the States.

Sincerely yours,

ROSWELL MAGILL,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

REIMBURSEMENT OF EXCHANGE LOSSES TO CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

There is transmitted herewith a report of the Secretary of State and a proposed draft of legislation designed to extend the act approved March 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 466), to authorize the reimbursement of exchange losses sustained during the period July 1 to 14, 1933, by officers and employees of the United States in foreign countries, due to the appreciation of foreign currencies in their relation to the American dollar.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 11, 1937.

[Enclosures: Report of the Secretary of State. Proposed draft of legislation.]

EVERETT P. SHERIDAN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 665) to credit the account of Everett P. Sheridan, which was to amend the title so as to read "An act for the relief of the estate of Everett P. Sheridan."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. THOMASON AND ROBERT SLOVER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1112) awarding a Navy Cross to John W. Thomason, which were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Corps", to insert "and Robert Slover, gunnery sergeant, United States Marine Corps"; on the same page and line, to strike out the word "he" and insert "each"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act awarding a Navy Cross to John W. Thomason and Robert Slover."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED SAN JUAN NATIONAL MONUMENT, P. R.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to establish the San Juan National Monument, P. R., and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

CLAIM OF BROOKS-CALLAWAY CO., ATLANTA, GA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of Brooks-Callaway Co., of Atlanta, Ga., against the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to enact bill H. R. 4009, which proposes to appropriate $50,000,000 to cooperate with the States of the United States in the eradication of noxious weeds, and urging the Secretary of Agriculture to expedite consideration favorable to said bill

Whereas during recent times numerous noxious weeds, such as Bermuda grass; nut grass; Canada thistle; perennial sow thistle; quack grass; Johnson grass; wild morning glory, sometimes known as the creeping jenny, or field bindweed, the Russian Knapp weed; leafy spurge; and many others have invaded the farm and agricultural lands and gardens in most of the States of the United States, including the State of California; and

Whereas little organized effort has been made to control such noxious weeds; and

Whereas it has been estimated that noxious weeds are costing the United States $3,000,000,000 every year; and

Whereas a definite effort made in the State of Idaho to check such weeds has clearly demonstrated that the work can be successfully accomplished; and

Whereas there was introduced in the House of Representatives by D. WORTH CLARK of Idaho a bill known as H. R. 4009, which has as its purpose enabling each State to furnish financial assistance as far as practicable for the control and eradication of noxious weeds within such States and the appropriation of $50,000,000 by the Federal Government to aid in such work; and

Whereas H. R. 4009 is well designed to accomplish the following purposes:

(a) It will make possible the eradication of noxious weeds in the State of California and thereby bring inestimable benefits to California agriculture.

(b) It will cause the employment of numerous deserving citizens of this State who at present, through no fault of their own, are unemployed.

(c) It will hasten economic recovery:

Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully urged to enact legislation proposed by bill H. R. 4009, and that Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, is also urged to expedite consideration favorable to said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and to each member of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, and to Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in Congress, and that such Senators and Members from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, favoring the adoption of agricultural and tariff policies in furtherance of the welfare of the Wisconsin farmer, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the petition of Adam Th. Drekolias, of Los Angeles, Calif., praying for an investigation into the merits of a new mechanical system devised for inexpensive generation of electric energy, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from Jonathan Eddy, secretary, embodying a resolution adopted at St. Louis, Mo., by the American Newspaper Guild, favoring an immediate appropriation of not less than $3,000,000,000 for the continuance and expansion of the Works Progress Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Association of Former Internes of Freedmen's Hospital, of Washington, D. C., protesting against the transfer of Freedmen's Hospital from the Department of the Interior to the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia, or to the trustees of Howard University, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Aurora, Ill., favoring the prompt enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the annual convention of the Pacific Coast District, International Longshoremen's Association, at Seattle, Wash., favoring the enactment of the so-called American youth bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Gale Grange, No. 282, of Forest Grove, Oreg., favoring an amendment of the Constitution to provide a referendum on the question of a declaration of war, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the annual convention of the Pacific coast district, International Longshoremen's Association, at Seattle, Wash., favoring amendment of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act so as to provide adequate care for injured longshoremen and enforcement of the provisions of the act relating to the determination of the average weekly wage, and also the enactment of antilynching legislation, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial of sundry citizens of West Hartford, Conn., and Rochester, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I ask leave to present numerous memorials that were gathered by Martin Luther Thomas, D. D., L. L. D., of Los Angeles, Calif., among the citizens of California. The memorialists, aggregating in number 75,000, remonstrate against the proposed reorganization or enlargement of the membership of the Supreme Court. I ask that the memorials may lie on the table and be filed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the memorials presented by the Senator from California will be received, lie on the table, and be filed.

Mr. LONERGAN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1270) to regulate barbers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 257, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, of Springfield, Mass., favoring the enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE presented a resolution adopted by the First Annual Conference of the Massachusetts State Branch, American Federation of Teachers, favoring the enactment of the so-called American youth bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE also presented a resolution adopted by the First Annual Conference of the Massachusetts State Branch, American Federation of Teachers, protesting against the enactment of legislation providing for the conscription of labor in time of war, and also against the adoption of the War Department's so-called industrial mobilization plan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE also presented a resolution adopted by the First Annual Conference of the Massachusetts State Branch, American Federation of Teachers, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 367, prohibiting compulsory enrollment in Reserve Officers' Training Corps units in civil schools and colleges, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE also presented a resolution adopted by the First Annual Conference of the Massachusetts State Branch, American Federation of Teachers, favoring the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE also presented a resolution adopted by the First Annual Conference of the Massachusetts State Branch, American Federation of Teachers, favoring the enactment of legislation providing more effective programs of public education through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the Youth Council of St. Martin's Church Center, of New York City, favoring the continuance and extension of appropriations for the National Youth Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Federation of Settlements at Bloomington, Ind., favoring the extension of the National Youth program and its development to include health service, practical and realistic education for a vocation and a living, and vocational placement, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of William Lescaze, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the pending low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive board of the Italian Dress and Waist Makers' Union, Local No. 89, of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, of New York City, favoring the enactment of pending low-cost housing legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Washington Heights Peace Committee, of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 25) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Westchester County Committee, the American Legion, of Yonkers, N. Y., favoring the enactment of certain immigration legislation in accord with resolutions adopted by the 1936 national convention of the American Legion, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Traffic Club of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of legislation that would materially increase the cost of maintenance and operation of the railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Washington Heights Peace Committee of New York City, N. Y., favoring amendment of the Constitution so as to provide a referendum on the question of a declaration of war, and also the enactment of antilynching legislation, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House memorial relating to the continuation of the functions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works

To the President and the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

The Congress of the United States of America has extended the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works from time to time since its creation and has augmented the original appropriation to further the policy of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works by financing and aiding the construction of worthy and necessary public projects, and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works has effectively and officially discharged the public duties with which it has been entrusted.

The construction of projects of the type financed by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works is not solely a means of reemploying citizens of the State who are without employment, but is a means to stimulate industry in general by the construction of sound and useful public projects designed to meet social and economic needs, and the continuation of its program is necessary in order that unemployment may be reduced and absorbed by private industry.

The records of the Arizona State director of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works discloses that in excess of 50 applications are now pending in his office for the construction of public projects under the direction and supervision of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, prays:

1. That the Congress of the United States of America continue the functions of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, and authorize appropriations necessary to adequately provide for a continued program of public improvements.

2. That the secretary of state is authorized and directed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Secretary of the Interior as Director of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Arizona in the Congress of the United States of America.

Mr. DUFFY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint resolution petitioning the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, to adopt agricultural and tariff policies in furtherance of the welfare of the Wisconsin farmer

Whereas Wisconsin is the leading State of the Union in the production and sale of cheese, milk, cream, and other dairy products, and also rates high in the production of cattle, poultry, potatoes, apples, and cherries; and

Whereas the President of the United States from time to time enters into reciprocal-tariff agreements with foreign nations in an effort to stimulate trade; and

Whereas these agreements may concede tariff reductions on imports of above-mentioned products which will result in large increases of such imports having a tendency to flood and destroy favorable home markets to the great prejudice and damage to the Wisconsin farmer; and

Whereas the reciprocal-tariff agreement made with the Dominion of Canada reduced tariffs on imports of cheese and brought an increase in such imports from this nation alone of 769,839 pounds in 1935 to 11,155,518 pounds in 1936; and

Whereas hundreds of thousands of Wisconsin farmers and their families, as well as the entire business interests of many counties, are dependent for their livelihood on the production and favorable marketing of these products and must rely upon the administration to protect their home markets by adopting favorable foreign-trade policies and tariffs which will retain this market: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions the President of the United States to adopt and maintain foreign and domestic trade policies to the end that home markets for the Wisconsin farmer be restored and protected; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. DUFFY also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution relating to the need for retaining Civilian Conservation Corps camps on State and county forests

Whereas certain Civilian Conservation Corps camps on State and county forests are to be discontinued in the near future; and

Whereas there still remains unlimited useful conservation work yet to be completed in these localities, including the protection of 12,000,000 acres of forestry and recreational lands from forest fires, the planting of thousands of acres of unproductive forest lands, the expansion of forest nursery facilities, the development of fish hatcheries, rearing ponds, water reservoirs, and certain park areas; and

Whereas the Civilian Conservation Corps has made a major contribution to the advancement of conservation, restoration, and upbuilding of our natural resources: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives in Congress be urged to make every effort to secure the retention of the camps in Wisconsin and to support legislation removing the relief requirements for enrollment in the Civilian Conservation Corps so that the corps may be brought up to full strength; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives in Washington and to Robert Fechner, Director, Emergency Conservation Work, at Washington.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred letters and resolutions endorsing the pending low-cost housing bill.

There being no objection, the letters and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROOKLYN CHAPTER OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS,
Brooklyn, N. Y., June 9, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Brooklyn Chapter, American Institute of Architects, requests that you assist in the passage of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill and sends you herewith the resolution as adopted at the annual convention of the American Institute of Architects at Boston to that end, as follows:

"Whereas the American Institute of Architects assembled for its sixty-ninth convention in Boston has unanimously approved the report and resolutions prepared by its committee on housing; and

"Whereas the passage of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill is essential to the continuation of the Government's efforts to provide adequate shelter for a large portion of the American people: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the American Institute of Architects endorses the basic features of the Wagner-Steagall bill and urges its passage at this time."

Your support of this important measure will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

STEPHEN W. DODGE, President.

AMALGAMATED LADIES' GARMENT CUTTERS' UNION,
New York, June 8, 1937.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: At a meeting of our organization, comprising 9,000 members, held on Thursday, June 3, 1937, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas the housing situation in certain parts of the city of New York is deplorable and many houses are dangerous and injurious to life and health; and

"Whereas within the last 6 to 7 years, because of the stoppage of new building, and for many other reasons, living conditions for the workers of this country have become intolerable—in all cities, and also in many rural sections, the workers are compelled to live in filthy, airless, and sunless shambles which impair their health and the physical and moral welfare of their children: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That new housing for the people of the United States be put on a par with education, public health, and public roads, and that the disgrace of slums and blighted areas be eliminated; be it further

"Resolved That we petition the Congress of the United States to pass as soon as possible the Wagner-Steagall housing bill."

We therefore urge that you lend your support toward the adoption of this measure.

Respectfully yours,

SAMUEL PERLMUTTER, Manager.

ITALIAN DRESS AND WAIST MAKERS' UNION,
New York, June 5, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Italian Dress and Waist Makers' Union, Local 89, of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, a labor organization composed of 40,000 members of Italo-American extraction, at a meeting of its executive board, adopted the following resolution urging the Congress of the United States to pass the Wagner-Steagall housing bill:

"Within the last 6 or 7 years, because of the stoppage of new building, and for many other reasons, living conditions for the workers of this country have become intolerable. In all cities and also in many rural sections the workers are compelled to live in filthy, airless, and sunless shambles which impair their health and the physical and moral welfare of their children.

"We demand that new housing for the people of the United States be put on a par with education, public health, and public roads, and that the disgrace of slums and blighted areas be eliminated."

Respectfully submitted.

[SEAL] LUIGI ANTONINI,
General Secretary.

WILLIAM LESCAZE, ARCHITECT,
New York, June 10, 1937.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: As a member of the American Institute of Architects, I would like to call your attention to a resolution passed by the sixty-ninth convention of the American Institute of Architects in Boston on June 4.

The resolution was as follows:

"Whereas the A. I. A. assembled in sixty-ninth convention in Boston, Mass., has unanimously approved the report and resolutions prepared by its housing committee; and

"Whereas the passage of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill is essential to the continuation of the Government's efforts to provide adequate shelter for a large portion of the American people: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the A. I. A. endorses the basic features of the Wagner-Steagall bill and urges its passage at this time; be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be sent to the President of the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That the members of the A. I. A. send copies of this resolution to their respective Congressmen and Senators."

May I urge you to make every effort to secure favorable action on this very important bill at this session of Congress?

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM LESCAZE.

CITY OF AURORA, ILL., June 8, 1937.

Senator WAGNER,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

HON. SENATOR WAGNER: Enclosed is a copy of a resolution passed by the city council of the city of Aurora on the 7th day of June A. D. 1937.

The city council wishes that you favor the passing of Senate bill 1685.

Very truly yours,

D. D. RICKER.

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States of America a bill "to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes", which said bill is also known as Senate bill 1685; and

Whereas it is believed that the enactment of said bill into a law of the United States of America is of utmost importance to the welfare of the citizens of this city of Aurora as well as for welfare of all citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by this the City Council of Aurora, Ill., in regularly convened assembly, That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America to enact into law Senate bill 1685, as hereinbefore described; be it also

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States of America; the Vice President of the United States of America; Hon. HUGO L. BLACK, Senator for Alabama; Senator WAGNER; Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, Congressman for Alabama; and to all Members of the Congress for Illinois.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY (REPT. NO. 711)

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, and also in behalf of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is chairman of the subcommittee but absent because of illness, your committee reports back adversely, with amendments, the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, and submits a report thereon. I also submit for the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] his individual views in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and printed and the bill will be placed on the calendar; also the individual views of the Senator from New Mexico will be received and printed together with the report of the committee.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, and I submit a report (No. 717) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I submit the minority views of certain members of the Committee on Appropriations on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, which I ask may be printed in connection with the report of the committee (Rept No. 717) heretofore submitted today. I also ask that the minority views submitted by me may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The minority views submitted by Mr. McKELLAR are as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY

To the Senate of the United States:

The minority of the Senate Committee on Appropriations in reference to House Joint Resolution 361, making appropriations for relief purposes, beg leave to submit the views of the minority on two features of the bill.

The first provision of the bill to which the minority members object was introduced by Senator JAMES F. BYRNES, of South Carolina, and is to be found on page 4, line 12, of the bill, and is as follows:

"Provided further, after September 30, 1937, That no new non-Federal project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until (1) adequate provision has been made or is assured for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds, and (2) at least 40 percent of the cost of the project is to be supplied from non-Federal funds, except that in any case in which the applicant for any such non-Federal project certifies in writing that it is unable to supply such 40 percent, the President is authorized, after investigation of the taxpaying capacity and credit of the applicant, to determine the maximum amount possible for such applicant to supply. The President shall furnish to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July 1938, a list of cases in which less than 40 percent of the cost of non-Federal projects was furnished by applicants, together with a statement of the amount furnished by the applicant in each such case."

This amendment was adopted by a vote of 13 to 10, and in the judgment of the minority members of the committee the amendment adopted was unwise.

It was stated by Senator BYRNES in an interview in the Morning Post of June 3, 1937, as follows:

"BYRNES will stage his major fight to require local communities able to put up at least 40 percent of their share of relief funds.

"'If this is done', said the South Carolinian, 'it makes little difference how much actually is appropriated for relief.' If the States and public and political subdivisions have to pay part of the costs, the money just won't have to be asked for and spent. Probably the 1938 relief expenditures could be held to $750,000,000."

So that the purpose of the amendment is perfectly clear. It is to cut down the President's recommendation of $1,500,000,000 for relief to $750,000,000. Your minority members of the committee do not believe that such a cut is wise or proper at this time.

On June 16, 1933, we appropriated for the National Recovery Act	$3,300,000,000
On Feb. 15, 1934, we appropriated for Emergency Relief and Civil Works	950,000,000
On June 19, 1934, we appropriated for Emergency Relief and Public Works	899,000,000
On June 19, 1934, we appropriated for drouth relief	525,000,000
On April 8, 1935, we appropriated for work relief, known as the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935	4,880,000,000
On June 22, 1936, we appropriated for work-relief appropriation	1,425,000,000
On Feb. 9, 1937, we appropriated a deficiency work relief of	789,000,000
A total of	12,768,000,000

In other words, in 1933 we appropriated $3,300,000,000; in 1934 we appropriated $2,374,000,000; in 1935 we appropriated $4,880,000,000; in 1936, in the regular and deficiency acts, $2,214,000,000.

This year the President proposed to cut that appropriation to $1,500,000,000, together with such unexpended balances of previous relief bills, amounting to about $200,000,000.

In addition to that, the House bill provides that the money shall be allocated and distributed over a full 12 months' period, meaning that there is to be no further deficiency appropriation. So that under the present proposal relief will be cut at least one-third this year.

On June 16, 1933, the $3,300,000,000 for national recovery was "to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the President to be immediately available until June 30, 1935."

On June 19, 1934, two appropriations were made, one for $899,675,000, to carry out the Federal Emergency Relief Act, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the National Recovery Act, "to be allocated by the President for the further carrying out of the purposes of the aforesaid act, and to remain available until June 30, 1935."

Likewise, in that same act, $525,000,000 was appropriated "to be allocated by the President to supplement the appropriations heretofore made for emergency purposes, and for the expenditure for drought purposes." This was to be available until June 30, 1935.

On February 15, 1934, an additional sum of $950,000,000 was turned over to the President, "available for expenditure for such projects and/or purposes and under such rules and regulations as the President may in his discretion prescribe."

Nothing was said about how long it should be available.

The acts of April 8, 1935, and June 22, 1936, put the money in the hands of the President to be expended and was made available until June 30, 1937.

In other words, over a period beginning June 16, 1933, and ending February 9, 1937, in seven consecutive acts we entrusted to the President the disposition of these funds. The minority members believe that the President in this unparalleled emergency, and considering all the difficulties confronting him, has made a faithful, wise, constructive, and successful use of these large sums. We trusted him without a word for more than double the sum appropriated in this bill in 1933, when the country was in the worst depression of its history. In 1935 we again entrusted him with $4,880,000,000 until June 30, 1937.

But now when we feel that we are nearly out of the depression and getting back on our feet again the majority of the committee is unwilling to trust the President to continue the allocation and distribution of the funds made in the same way that we have been making it all through these years.

The minority members believe that the President should be trusted with this $1,500,000,000 and the unexpended balances. In all previous acts unexpended balances have been reappropriated.

The minority members believe that relief is a national question. They believe that the President has faithfully administered the fund as a national fund in a national way, for national purposes, and for the national good. We believe that if while we were in very much greater trouble we were willing to trust the President with a total of more than $12,000,000,000 for relief that we can certainly now trust him in the distribution of $1,500,000,000 plus the unexpended balances.

The Byrnes amendment, after providing that the States and local communities should be required to put up 40 percent before they can obtain 60 percent from the Government, indeed does provide that "the President is authorized after investigation of the taxpaying capacity and credit of the applicant to determine the maximum amount possible for such applicant to supply." The President is then required to furnish to the Houses of Congress a list of cases wherein the President allows less than 40 percent.

In other words, the meaning of this amendment is that while 40 percent is established, that if any State, county, or municipality, or other organization entitled to receive relief is willing to take the pauper's oath, and if the President finds that they are paupers, he can reduce the amount of their contribution. The minority members do not approve of this policy. They do not believe it is fair or just. They believe that the policy already established by the President is a much better rule for fixing the amount of relief that local sponsors must put up than the rule set up in this amendment.

In the committee it was argued that the reason of the amendment was that New York City paid only one-half of 1 percent, and that New York paid only 7.2 percent, while some States, like Idaho, paid 28.3 percent; Wyoming, 26.7 percent; Tennessee, 26.6 percent; and others smaller amounts. The average for the country as a whole was 13.1 percent. The answer to this was furnished by Mr. Hopkins in a table comparing New York to South Carolina, showing that in all relief work in 1933 to 1936 New York and its local organizations put up 37.6 percent, while the Federal Government put up 62.4 percent; that during the same period South Carolina and its local organizations put up 9.6 percent, while the Federal Government put up 90.4 percent. Taking 1936 only, it was shown that New York State and localities put up 36.9 percent, while the Federal Government put up 63.1 percent, and that South Carolina, State and local, put up 17.1 percent, while the Federal Government put up 82.9 percent.

The truth of the matter is that when you examine all figures, when you take into consideration the difference in the number and extent of relief, it has been and it will be, in the opinion of your committee, absolutely impossible to obtain a rule that will work with absolute fairness, but that the rule adopted by the President has been just as fair and just as any rule that could be adopted, and it will be much more fair and just than the rule proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Again, many State legislatures which have met this year have adjourned and will not meet for 1 or 2 years.

DEBT LIMITATIONS LOCAL

Many cities and counties cannot issue bonds unless specially authorized by the legislature. In this situation it is going to be difficult, extremely difficult, for many States, counties, and cities to take advantage of relief at all; and the result will be, as Senator BYRNES argued in the newspapers, that these States will not be able to receive relief and there will be a large saving to the Government. He estimates it at $750,000,000. Well, if we did not pass the bill at all the Government would save $1,500,000,000. In the minds of the minority members of this committee, whether the Byrnes amendment should be adopted is simply whether Senators believe in a relief bill that will apply to some States and will not apply to others; that will apply to some types of needy workers and not others; whether they believe that relief ought to be cut down and in a partial and unfair way; whether Senators believe that the President has unfairly and unjustly carried out his official duties in disposing of the moneys previously appropriated and turned over to him for distribution for relief.

EFFECTS OF ARBITRARY REQUIREMENT FOR MATCHING FEDERAL W. P. A. FUNDS

The proposal that State and local governments be required to meet an arbitrary fixed proportion of the cost of W. P. A. projects is administratively unworkable and inconsistent with the objectives of the program. The following considerations form the basis for this conclusion:

1. The national character of the unemployment problem, its independence of State and local boundaries, and the inability of local governments to control or adjust its causes makes it unwise for the Federal Government to enact legislation which would, in effect, limit or entirely eliminate Federal assistance to the needy unemployed in many communities for reasons which neither the individuals nor the communities can control.

2. Most W. P. A. projects are sponsored by local governments—cities, towns, counties, and school districts. The same factors which make Federal assistance necessary require that the W. P. A. program be adjusted to the total number of unemployed persons in need of relief and the financial ability of each individual community.

Usually the localities faced with the heaviest unemployment and relief problems are those whose financial resources are most severely depleted and under a matching policy Federal aid would be restricted where it is needed most.

3. If sponsors are required on all projects which they undertake to provide 40 percent of the funds, they will, in most cases, desire that the funds so contributed shall be spent on materials and equipment for construction projects. Projects such as sewing rooms, which are designed to employ needy women, could not be operated. The same is true of projects of the National Youth Administration, which help keep needy youth in schools. Universities and schools which sponsor these projects will in most cases be unable to meet this requirement. There are thousands of projects which provide work for clerks and people trained in professions requiring few materials and taking care of needy groups which are too often overlooked. Most of these projects would have to be terminated.

4. The chief source of revenue of local governments is the real-property tax. Unless they could increase property-tax collections or borrow, these local governments would be unable to match Federal expenditures.

In many instances the tax rate has reached the maximum allowed by State law. In others new taxes would simply increase delinquencies and would yield little additional revenue.

Depreciated property valuations have already restricted local revenue from this source; the levy of additional property taxes would result in still further deflation of values, increase rents, and discourage the construction of new homes, stores, and factories, which is vital to the recovery of the building industry.

5. Many localities which might be willing to borrow in order to match Federal funds would be unable to do so because there is no ready market for their bonds, or because their debt already has reached the legal maximum in their State.

6. A few State governments are in a position to help their localities somewhat in meeting a Federal matching requirement, but the great majority of them could not do it at this time. All but 10 or 11 State legislatures have adjourned and most of them will not meet again in regular session until 1939. By the end of this month it is expected that the few legislatures now in session will have adjourned. Furthermore, the borrowing power of the State government is limited by most State constitutions.

7. The net result of an arbitrary matching requirement would be a complete shut-down of the W. P. A. program in many areas of the country where large numbers of families are destitute and without other means of support; in others it would mean the wholesale elimination of desirable projects which now comprise integral parts of local construction programs.

8. A transition period is a prerequisite to the adoption of any matching principle. The States must be given time to strengthen their administrative relationships with local governments, to review and revamp their revenue systems, and to test the yield from augmented tax levies.

9. At the present time, the Federal Government, through administrative action in each locality, is attempting to equalize W. P. A. costs, without denying Federal help to impoverished communities. Federal funds are being used to pay the wages of needy project employees plus a small allowance for materials and other nonlabor costs sufficient to provide a program of useful projects. Sponsors are required to defray costs in excess of the Federal contribution. Under this policy, employment can be provided on inexpensive projects in even the most severely depressed areas. More costly projects are operated in localities which can economically afford the additional costs. The needy unemployed are not penalized by the financial circumstances of the local governments under which they live.

It is true that Senator BYRNES, instead of absolutely shutting down on the present method of conducting relief on July 1, has modified his amendment so as to begin its operation on October 1, but this does not meet the situation.

The debt-incurring power of local governments is limited by constitution or statute in almost every State. These limitations usually apply only to tax-supported bonds. As a result of recent legislation, debt limits in most States are not applicable to bonds which have no recourse to tax funds and are payable only from the revenues of publicly owned utilities.

Limitations may restrict the amount of bonds issued to a specified percentage of the assessed valuation of taxable property or may restrict the rate of tax that may be levied to service outstanding obligations. Some local governments are subject to both types of limitations. It may frequently happen that a local government which has voted bonds is unable to dispose of them because prospective purchasers are doubtful that the rate of tax which the locality can levy will yield a sufficient sum to meet principal and interest payments.

Each local bond issue in some States must be authorized by a special act of the State legislature. Where constitutional limitations prevail, an increase in the limitation would require constitutional amendment—a lengthy process. Limitations set by statute can be changed only by action of the legislature. Revision of limitations written into city charters would in every case require the same formality as the original adoption of these charters.

State governments are even more restricted in their borrowing than are local governments. Most of them can readily increase debt to repel invasion or suppress insurrection, but not for other purposes.

Only 10 States can borrow by action of the legislature. The constitutions of 38 States require referendum approval or constitutional amendment to authorize borrowing in excess of very small amounts to meet casual deficits. How small these debts are that can be incurred without legislative or referendum approval, or constitutional change is indicated by the fact that the maximum in Maryland, Oregon, and Rhode Island is $50,000, and in most other States is $1,000,000 or less.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES

Senator ADAMS, of Colorado, introduced two amendments concerning unexpended balances. The House bill as recommended by the President provided the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 "together with such unexpended balances as the President may determine of appropriations made by (a) the second paragraph of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936 as supplemented by the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, and (b) section 1 of the Emergency Relief Act of 1935, including unexpended balances."

Senator ADAMS offered an amendment limiting the reappropriation of unexpended balances to those "which have on the date of enactment of this resolution been obligated of the expenditure of which has been contracted." For instance, it is in the testimony that the President still has in his hands unallocated and unobligated, and the expenditure of which has not been contracted, the sum of $63,000,000. This apparently comes largely from the amounts appropriated in the $4,880,000,000 relief bill and in the $1,425,000,000 and the $789,000,000 relief bills.

Mr. Hopkins says that this amendment would virtually stop the work, and we here quote the substance of his language as given in the testimony. It would stop funds allocated by the President but not yet expended. For instance, funds that have been allocated by the President for the building of electric-light plants, which use of funds has been enjoined for months and in some cases for years in the Federal courts. It might prove to be a legislative overruling of the recent Supreme Court case holding that the expenditure of such funds was constitutional. The meaning of this is perfectly plain. It will stop $20,000,000 for projects of the Interior Department, including reclamation projects largely in the West; $17,500,000 for resettlement. It will mean that an additional 120,000 people will have to be dropped from the W. P. A. rolls.

The Adams amendment, therefore, will have two effects: First, it will have the effect of cutting down the $1,500,000,000 by approximately $100,000,000. This will mean a reduction in the number of persons which can be employed by over 120,000. The amendment will, secondly, have the additional effect of prohibiting the Government from completing specific projects and carrying out specific functions for which it has made definite commitments against the balances which, although technically unobligated, have actually been earmarked for those projects and purposes.

With reference to the first point the resolution as passed by the House actually limits the total obligations which can be incurred during the fiscal year 1938 to $1,500,000,000. The unexpended balances reappropriated by the joint resolution represent to a large extent the working capital which is needed at all times to maintain the program on a going basis. On June 30, 1937, it is estimated that approximately $200,000,000 will be unobligated on the books of the Treasury, of which $100,000,000 represents such working capital. Approximately the same amount of working capital has been carried over each year in the past and will be carried over on June 30, 1938. This working capital is required because of the following factors:

(a) There is always a lag between the issuing of obligatory documents and their entry on the Treasury records. Actual obligations or liabilities incurred, therefore, always exceed the Treasury's recorded obligations.

(b) Under the Works Progress Administration program between forty and fifty thousand projects are currently being operated. These projects must be financed through 20 or 30 separate appropriation control accounts in each of the 263 W. P. A. districts. It is obvious that there must be a reserve of free cash distributed over the five or six thousand accounts in order that funds will be available when and where they are needed. In other words, it is physically impossible on a program of this size to anticipate exactly what cash requirements will be needed on each project or account, and normally it is required that a cushion be maintained of approximately seventy-five to one hundred million dollars to keep the program operating. The cushion referred to amounts to an average balance of approximately $2,000 in each of the foregoing projects.

With reference to the second point approximately $100,000,000 of the $200,000,000 which it is estimated will be unobligated on June 30, 1937, on the books of the Treasury, have actually been earmarked for specific projects and functions. This estimate is based on the status of allocations to the several agencies as reported by the Treasury on May 20, 1937, and their current rate of operations. There are listed below some of the agencies whose activities will be cut off if they are unable to use balances which they will have unobligated by June 30, 1937, unless appropriations therefor are made by this or other bills.

Public Works Administration $15,600,000

Almost the entire amount of this fund has been earmarked for landscaping, installing sidewalks, driveways, etc., in connection with housing projects which are already under construction.

Resettlement Administration $17,500,000

Most of this has been earmarked to carry on and complete suburban and rural communities which have been under construction for many months.

Bureau of Public Roads $23,000,000

This represents the balance of funds specifically earmarked for or allocated to States under the statutory formula of the Bureau of Public Roads, but not obligated by the approval of specific highway and grade-crossing projects.

Employees' Compensation Commission $18,000,000

This has been allocated to pay compensation claims authorized by the act of February 15, 1934, as amended, and will be needed over a long period of years to take care of payments as they fall due.

Interior Department $20,000,000

This represents largely funds set aside for completing or providing additional necessary work on reclamation projects which are already under way and for the Puerto Rico Construction Administration, to which Congress, by act of February 11, 1936, made the emergency funds available for expenditure until 1940.

These two amendments are very unwise, and the minority members of your committee believe that the amendments should not be adopted, and very earnestly recommend to the Senate that these amendments should not be agreed to.

We have trusted the President seven times with these relief appropriations. He has made good each time. Our country has been enormously benefited and improved. Why change our policy at this late day, when the appropriation has been materially reduced and the Relief Administration is on record that this $1,500,000,000 will be used for the whole year?

Respectfully submitted.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—NOTICE

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the relief joint resolution having just been reported to the Senate, I give notice that it is the purpose to take it up tomorrow when the Senate meets.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 2624) for the relief of Emmett Lee Payne; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2625) for the relief of the George Waale Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2626) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend War Department equipment for use at the 1937 State convention of the American Legion, Department of Oregon, to be held at Albany, Oreg., during the month of August 1937; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 2627) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Wallace F. Safford to the position and rank of captain in the Army of the United States and immediately to retire him with the rank and pay of captain; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2628) to amend section 601 (c) (6) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, with respect to the tax on imported lumber; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 2629) to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego, Calif., and the United States; and

A bill (S. 2630) to provide for the reimbursement of Carl Dement Weaver, machinist's mate, first class, United States Navy, for the value of personal effects lost at Paducah, Ky., during the Ohio Valley flood, in January 1937; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 2631) for the relief of Charles L. Kee; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HATCH:

A bill (S. 2632) for the relief of Karl R. Warrick; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 2633) to incorporate the American Chemical Society; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUGHES:

A bill (S. 2634) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of Delaware; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEE:

A bill (S. 2635) to regulate the times and places of holding court in Oklahoma; and

A bill (S. 2636) to change the times for holding terms of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2637) to amend the act of June 7, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 327), providing funds for cooperation with public-school districts in Glacier County, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2638) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 2639) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease the Fort Schuyler Military Reservation, N. Y.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. WALSH introduced Senate bill 2640, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. VAN NUYS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) to amend the joint resolution establishing the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, approved May 23, 1928, as amended; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 165) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the settlement of Meadville, Pa.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PEPPER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 166) providing for participation by the United States in the Pan American Exposition to be held in Tampa, Fla., in the year 1939, in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Hernando De Soto in Tampa Bay, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

PLANNING IN INDUSTRY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to encourage planning in industry by permitting controlled cooperation and protecting agriculture, labor, and consumers, and to supplement the powers of the Federal Trade Commission.

In a general way, this bill follows the structure of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which it amends and enlarges. Since it is understood that the administration at present has under consideration a study of the antitrust laws, unfair trade practices, and unfair methods of competition in industry, I believe attention should be called to the purposes my bill hopes to accomplish, and that its provisions should be studied by the Congress and also by any executive department or special commission designated to recommend legislation along these lines.

I request that a statement in explanation of the bill, together with an analysis thereof, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement and analysis of the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2640) to encourage planning in industry by permitting controlled cooperation and protecting agriculture, labor, and consumers, and to supplement the powers of the Federal Trade Commission was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The statement presented by Mr. WALSH and the analysis of the bill are as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WALSH EXPLAINING SENATE BILL 2640

The bill which I have introduced seeks, as stated in its title, to encourage planning in industry by permitting controlled cooperation and protecting agriculture, labor, and consumers and to supplement the powers of the Federal Trade Commission.

This bill is a revision of S. 1555, introduced by me in the Seventy-third Congress on May 1, 1933, about 2 weeks before the introduction of the National Industrial Recovery Act. My previous bill was in itself a revision of S. 3256, introduced by me in the Seventy-second Congress on January 25, 1932.

Although I prepared my present bill several weeks ago, and before the Supreme Court decisions on the Wagner National Labor Relations Act, I used a broad definition of "interstate commerce", which seems to me to be entirely constitutional under the opinions handed down by the Chief Justice in the labor-relations cases.

My bill amends and enlarges the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It increases the Commission from five to nine members to provide for its added functions.

In addition to the broad definition of "interstate commerce" it amplifies the definition of "unfair methods of competition" and prohibits unfair trade practices.

It authorizes the Commission to hold trade-practice conferences and to determine unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices.

It does not authorize governmental price fixing but it permits the Commission to approve cooperative agreements in industry, after a hearing, provided such agreements are reasonable and economically sound, and will not result in price fixing or in a selling price in excess of a fair and reasonable price based on all fair and reasonable items of cost plus a fair and reasonable profit, taking into consideration the necessity of a fair and reasonable compensation to producers and distributors of average ability and efficiency and to labor, and will not depress wages or conditions of employment of labor or prices of agricultural products or raw materials, and will not result in oppression of competitors, labor, or producers of agricultural products or raw materials. The Commission is thus supplied with a formula expressing the legislative intent.

As a condition to the approval of these agreements, each party thereto must agree to observe regulations with reference to producers of agricultural products (which are made to include fisheries) issued by the Secretary of Agriculture, and regulations with reference to labor relations issued by the National Labor Relations Board, and must agree to permit his employees to organize and bargain collectively through representatives chosen by a majority, to abide by decisions of the National Labor Relations Board in disputes concerning representation and permit the Board to take secret ballots to ascertain representation, not to discriminate against employees because of union membership, not to dominate or finance labor organizations, and not to employ individuals under 18 years of age. I consider these provisions vitally necessary as a condition to the permission of cooperative agreements.

The jurisdiction of the Commission is continued over the subject matter of approved agreements, and the Commission is permitted to revoke its approval, after a hearing, whenever the public interest so requires, and in specific cases enumerated in the bill.

Provision is made for appeal to the courts from orders of the Commission, and for proceedings in the courts to enforce its orders.

For the further protection of the public interest, and to avoid having the Commission act as both prosecutor and judge, all petitions, agreements, complaints, orders, and other papers in any proceeding before the Commission must be served on the Attorney General, who has the right to intervene in all proceedings before the Commission and the courts and the right to file complaints and take appeals, and to institute proceedings to enforce compliance with orders of the Commission.

Compliance with the orders of the Commission is further assured by the provision of severe penalties for violations, similar to the penalty provisions contained in the Interstate Commerce Commission Act.

Although the antitrust acts are waived in favor of approved agreements which are in the public interest, they are not repealed but are retained in full force to prevent monopolistic practices in violation of or under cover of approved agreements.

It is my firm belief that the enactment of this bill will encourage lawful and orderly planning in industry, to the interest of the public and with full protection to consumers, producers, agriculture (including fisheries), and to labor.

ANALYSIS OF REVISED WALSH BILL

In a general way this bill follows the structure of the Federal Trade Commission Act, which it amends.

In the Code of Laws of the United States of America the 11 sections of the Federal Trade Commission Act are embodied as sections 41 to 51 inclusive of chapter 2 of title 15 "Trade and commerce."

This bill follows the same section numbering as used in the Code of Laws, and therefore starts with section 41 and continues to section 55.

Section 41 follows the present language of section 41 of the Federal Trade Commission Act but increases the number of Commissioners from five to nine, and provides that the five present Commissioners shall remain in office, and that four additional Commissioners shall be appointed.

Section 42 is practically unchanged from the present text of section 42 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Section 43 is substantially unchanged, except that it permits the Commission to divide itself into three divisions of three Commissioners each. This provision is copied from the Interstate Commerce Commission Act.

Section 44, contains definitions. Some are copied without change, from the present Federal Trade Commission Act. Others are broadened. Some new ones are added.

The definitions of "interstate commerce" and "unfair methods of competition" are considerably broadened over the present definitions as laid down by the courts. Among the new definitions the furnishing of services is included in "production" and fisheries are included in "agriculture."

Section 45 is not materially changed from the present section 45 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, except that unfair-trade practices (as defined in sec. 44) are declared unlawful, in addition to unfair methods of competition. In addition to its power to commence proceedings for cease and desist orders, whenever the Commission feels that the public interest requires it, the Commission is also directed to commence proceedings whenever requested to do so by the Attorney General.

Section 46 provides for the filing and approval of cooperative agreements in aid of economic planning. An agreement may be approved after a hearing, if it is a reasonable and economically sound measure and will not result in price fixing or in a selling price in excess of a fair and reasonable price based on all fair and reasonable items of cost, plus a fair and reasonable profit, taking into consideration the necessity of a fair and reasonable compensation to producers and distributors of average ability and efficiency and to labor, and will not depress wages or conditions of employment of labor or prices of agricultural products, or raw materials, and will not result in oppression of competitors, labor, or producers of agricultural products or raw materials.

Subdivisions (d) and (e) of this section prohibit the Commission from fixing prices of agricultural products, or wages or conditions of employment, or from abridging the right of producers of agricultural products and of labor to organize and to bargain collectively and exempts all such organizations from the antitrust acts.

Subdivision (f) requires each agreement to contain certain mandatory covenants (I) to observe the regulations with reference to producers of agricultural products issued by the Secretary of Agriculture or other body created by Congress to have supervision over agricultural products, (II) to permit employees to organize and bargain collectively and to abrogate "yellow dog" contracts, (III) not to discriminate against employees because of union membership, (IV) not to dominate or finance labor organizations, (V) to bargain collectively with representatives chosen by a majority of the employees, (VI) to abide by decisions of the National Labor Relations Board in disputes concerning representation, and to permit the Board to take secret ballots to ascertain representation, (VII) to observe the regulations with reference to labor relations issued by the National Labor Relations Board (in sec. 44 the Board is defined as being the present Board of any body hereafter created by Congress for that purpose, or if no such body exist, then the Secretary of Labor), and (VIII) not to employ any individual under the age of 18 years.

The subsequent subdivisions of this section provide that approved agreements shall be valid and that acts performed thereunder shall not violate the antitrust acts; that the Commission shall retain jurisdiction over the subject matter of approved agreements; that the Commission shall prevent violations of approved agreements; that the Commission may revoke its approval of agreements under certain conditions; that approved agreements may be modified under specific procedure; and that the Commission, upon complaint and after hearing, may award damages to persons injured by violations of approved agreements.

All papers must be served upon the Attorney General, who has power to initiate complaints.

Section 47 provides for the rules of procedure. The Attorney General is given the right to intervene in all proceedings. All agreements and other papers and all testimony are made open to public inspection. Rehearings before the Commission are permitted for cause upon the application of a party or of the Attorney General.

Section 48 provides that appeals from orders of the Commission may be taken to the circuit court of appeals, where they shall have a preference. Orders of the Commission may be enforced by proceedings in the district courts of the United States.

The Attorney General is permitted to take appeals from orders of the Commission and is directed to institute proceedings for the enforcement of orders.

Section 49 is substantially the same as the like provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, except that subdivision (a) legalizes the holding of trade-practice conferences to determine unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices.

Sections 50, 51, and 52 are procedural.

Section 53 provides for various penalties, most of which are copied from the present provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Subdivision (a) is new and provides for a penalty of $5,000 for each violation of an order issued by the Commission. A similar penalty provision is now contained in the Interstate Commerce Commission Act.

Section 54 is a saving clause and section 55 is a separability clause.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bill and joint resolution were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 6391. An act to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration.

H. J. Res. 375. Joint resolution to provide revenue, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 2, line 21, after the figures "$380,000,000", to add the following: "* * * of which sum not more than $20,000,000 shall be allocated for a national census of population, employment, and unemployment to be taken at the earliest date for the purpose of obtaining authentic information as to the number of persons in each of the several States and all subdivisions thereof who are employed and unemployed, classified by sex, age, customary occupation, and such other pertinent standards as may be advisable, and the causes and duration of such unemployment."

AMENDMENTS TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. VAN NUYS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6958, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

"The George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, created by the joint resolution approved May 23, 1928, as amended, shall cease and terminate June 30, 1939, and the unexpended balances of the appropriations heretofore made for carrying out the purposes of such joint resolution, as amended, shall be available until June 30, 1939."

Mr. WHEELER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6958, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 37, line 17, after the word "Flathead", to strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "including $51,275, Camas division betterment, $251,275."

On page 41, after line 25, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The appropriation of $100,000 contained in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, for cooperating with public-school districts in Glacier County, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children, as authorized by the act of June 7, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 327), is hereby made available under the same conditions as specified in the said Second Deficiency Appropriation Act until June 30, 1938, for improvement and extension of school buildings in rural communities in district no. 9, Glacier County, as well as other public-school districts within said county."

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO CEMENTED SHOES

Mr. WALSH. I ask consent to submit for myself and my colleague [Mr. LODGE] a resolution for appropriate reference.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 144) was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Cemented shoes, made wholly or in part by the process of cementing the sole to the upper.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this resolution is offered in behalf of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, representing 100 shoe-manufacturing members, which employ over 20,000 shoe workers in New England; and it is of vital concern to the entire shoe industry in America.

The purpose of this resolution is to call upon the United States Tariff Commission to investigate the recent heavy increase in imports of cemented shoes, on which at present there is a 20-percent ad-valorem duty.

These cemented shoes—shoes in which the soles are cemented to the uppers, and designed for women—were first manufactured in this country in 1929. They showed such a phenomenal growth that by 1935 over 40,000,000 pairs of this type of footwear were manufactured in the United States, which was equivalent to one-third of the total United States production of women's shoes in that year.

Imports of cemented shoes have increased tremendously in the past 3 years. Exact statistics on imports of cemented shoes are not now available. However, it is believed that the following figures, based upon statistics of imports compiled by the United States Tariff Commission, do indicate the extent of this increase.

From less than 150,000 pairs imported in 1935, the number of cemented shoes imported in 1936 jumped to approximately 990,000 pairs, an increase of over 500 percent. In the first 4 months of this year there have already been imported a million pairs.

These imported shoes—in direct competition with and replacing the McKay shoes—are sold in this country at prices which our manufacturers, paying the American scale of wages and faced with larger overhead costs, cannot possibly meet, and are rapidly capturing the American market. Every shoe imported means a corresponding loss to an American worker. Already some manufacturers in New England are threatened with the shut-down of their factories because their former customers are now buying these foreign shoes. Continued unchecked importations of these shoes will result in closed American factories and workers facing the prospect of having to go on the relief rolls this winter in order to secure support for themselves and their families.

This matter is of vital importance to the American shoe industry, and especially to New England shoe manufacturers, because they produce most of the women's shoes—of Compo and McKay construction—that retail for $2 in the United States, and with which the foreign imports, selling at an even lower price, compete.

It is pertinent to recall that the imports of the McKay type of shoe, in 1929 and 1930, were so damaging to the American shoe industry that a Senate resolution (S. Res. 295) was passed in 1930, instructing the Tariff Commission to investigate these imports. The results of that investigation showed that the foreign manufacturing costs were so much lower than those of American manufacturers that the Commission recommended to the President—and he so proclaimed in January 1932—that the duty on these imported shoes be raised the maximum amount allowed under the Tariff Act of 1930, namely, from 20 to 30 percent ad valorem. This action proved effective in limiting the imports of McKay shoes.

However, as pointed out above, in 1935, in place of the McKay shoes foreign manufacturers began to export to this country cemented shoes, on which the duty under the tariff act is only 20 percent. It is at these recent importations that the resolution now offered is directed, and which importations can only be prohibited by investigation of the Tariff Commission and its recommendation to the President that the duty on such imported shoes be increased to the maximum rate allowed under law, namely, 30 percent ad-valorem duty. Such action is necessary to place the American shoe manufacturer on a competitive level with foreign manufacturers.

I request that several letters and papers which I have received in connection with this matter may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letters and papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW ENGLAND SHOE & LEATHER ASSOCIATION,
Boston, Mass., June 7, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The recent heavy increase in the importations of shoes from Czechoslovakia have again threatened the welfare of the Massachusetts shoe industry and the jobs of thousands of shoe workers in our State. We are, therefore, taking this opportunity of asking your assistance in preserving the well-being of our great industry, as well as the wages of our workers, against this foreign competition.

Under the Tariff Act of 1930, the import duty on all shoes was listed at 20 percent ad valorem. (Ch. E, par. 1530, E). This duty, however, did not prove effective in materially reducing the imports of women's and misses' McKays from Czechoslovakia, made by the Bata Co., as an investigation in 1931 by the United States Tariff Commission showed, with the result that this Commission recommended to the President that the duty on these shoes be raised to the maximum rate of 30 percent. This, President Hoover did in January 1932, through a proclamation, as provided in section 336 of the Tariff Act.

The statistical picture covering our imports of these McKay sewed shoes from Czechoslovakia appear in table 1 enclosed with this letter. This background material formed the basis of our protest to the Committee on Reciprocity Information of the United States Department of State against their making any concessions on our import duties on shoes in their contemplated negotiations of a reciprocal trade agreement with Czechoslovakia. Other associations and labor unions—the American Federation of Labor, Boot and Shoe Workers Union, the Brockton Brotherhood of Shoe and Allied Crafts, and the Committee on Industrial Organization, United Shoe Workers of America—also voiced their individual protest as well.

However, a far more serious situation has arisen recently, which we have been investigating quietly for the past several weeks. This relates to sharp increases in the imports of Bata shoes, made by the cemented process, on which the duty is only 20 percent. An indication of the shift of imports from McKay shoes, on which the duty is 30 percent, to cemented shoes on which the duty is 20 percent, can be seen from the following figures prepared by the United States Tariff Commission:

	McKay		All other shoes
	Pairs	Value	Pairs	Value
Women's and misses:
1935	1,170,904	$922,856	154,933	$113,903
1936	701,546	546,236	992,546	671,669

In our judgment the shoes listed "as all others" are made up largely of the cemented types of footwear. We are now endeavoring to secure comparable statistics for 1937, which we feel sure will show an even more extreme increase in the "all other shoes" column.

This matter is of vital interest to New England shoe manufacturers, for they produce most of the women's shoes—of Compo and McKay construction—that retail for $2, which are the types of shoes that Bata exports to this country. In the past several weeks the buyers of such footwear have been circularized by Bata's American representative for orders on a certain styled shoe priced at $1.17½ net, delivered in New York, and to retail for $2. Our manufacturers tell us that this same shoe, with its special features, cannot be produced in this country for less than $1.50.

The result of this announcement has already kept many buyers from placing their orders for fall shoes, as is customary at this time of the year, while other buyers have placed large orders for these Bata shoes. The threat of this destructive competition is so great that it is imperative that some action be taken at once to relieve this condition.

This example is typical of the type of competition that our manufacturers, paying the American scale of wages based on union rates, as well as having other overhead expenses that no foreign competitor has to meet, such as their social security taxes and higher costs resulting from maximum hours and minimum wages, have to meet. The wages in the Bata factories are said to be from one-quarter to one-half the rates paid our American workers. This permits this company to land their shoes in New York at prices which are from 20 to 30 percent lower than the cost of manufacturing these shoes in our factories in New England, even after transportation costs and import duties are paid.

Another example of how the Bata Co. is evading, legally, even the present low import duties on cemented shoes is the following: This company has recently begun to export into this country incompleted shoes on which the ad-valorem duty is very small. These parts are sent to American factories for several minor finishing operations before they are delivered to the retail stores. These shoes are imported in this fashion to escape the duty applicable to the finished product; and by paying this small ad-valorem duty, we feel that this company is defeating the purpose of our protective tariff.

We wish to add that the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union has forbidden its members to work on any of these Czechoslovakian shoes, and have also sent the Tariff Commission their protest against the importations of these incompleted shoes as endangering the livelihood of thousands of American workers.

This association, in behalf of 100 shoe-manufacturing members, employing 20,000 shoe workers in New England, as well as for the rest of our industry, has already filed our vigorous protest against these imports of cemented shoes with the United States Tariff Commission, and have requested that the Commission immediately conduct an investigation of these imports, pursuant to their powers listed in chapter 336 of the Tariff Act. We are hopeful that such investigation will result in an increase of the import duty on these shoes to the maximum allowed under the act, namely, 30 percent.

In order to expedite matters and to assure the proper consideration by the Tariff Commission of our request for an investigation, we urge that you present a resolution in the Senate requesting such an investigation. Such action on your part will earn the gratitude of shoeworkers and manufacturers alike both in Massachusetts and New England.

We already know of a dozen instances where our manufacturers in the past 2 weeks have lost orders totaling hundreds of thousands of pairs to the Bata Co. solely because they couldn't compete with their low prices. Every shoe that is imported into our country from Czechoslovakia means just one less shoe for our American workers to make. There can be only one result in the affected communities this summer and fall—decreased employment in these shoe factories and corresponding increases in their relief rolls.

We are planning to call on organized labor in our industry, as well as on other shoe manufacturers' associations, to immediately urge their Senators and Representatives to use their influence with the Tariff Commission in undertaking an investigation of the recent heavy imports of Czechoslovakian shoes, as we have outlined in our letter.

We trust that you will agree with us that this situation is of sufficient importance to the shoe industry as to warrant your entering a resolution in the Senate calling for an investigation by the Tariff Commission of the imports of shoes from Czechoslovakia. May we be favored by an early reply as to your thoughts on this matter, as well as to any action you plan to take?

Yours very sincerely,

JAMES H. STONE, Secretary.

HAVERHILL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Haverhill, Mass., June 9, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Massachusetts Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Mr. McNamara, president of the Haverhill Chamber of Commerce, has requested me to communicate with you relative to the preliminary announcement of a contemplated reciprocity agreement with Czechoslovakia, which, as we are given to understand, is considering reductions on tariff schedules for shoes and textiles. The result of such action, in our opinion, and undoubtedly on which you will agree with us, will have a detrimental and most damaging effect on our local industries.

In the past you have always been of great assistance to us in such matters, and your accomplishments in our behalf in our tariff-schedule battles are a part of our records, and we are, therefore, requesting that you interest yourself once more in this matter on behalf of our community.

We have sent telegrams to both the Committee for Reciprocity Information and the United States Tariff Commission and have followed them up with letters of specific explanation stating our position in the matter and have enclosed copies for your careful perusal and consideration.

The communications also carry what we believe to be the necessary solution for this problem, and we would appreciate an expression of your opinion as to whether you coincide with our ideas.

We have written to Senator LODGE, Congressmen BATES and CONNERY and Congresswoman Mrs. ROGERS, as we believe that it is most essential that all our Representatives should assist in this fight.

I shall appreciate your comments on our suggestions as contained in our communication to the Committee for Reciprocity Information, such as first-hand study, investigations, and quota stipulations, and we are open for any other suggestions which you may have in mind for a line of action on our part.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Yours very truly,

GEORGE H. CROSTON, Secretary.

JUNE 9, 1937.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE FOR RECIPROCITY INFORMATION,
Seventh and F Streets NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to confirm our telegram of June 9 as follows:

"The Haverhill Chamber of Commerce protests against and requests an investigation of the imports of cemented and other types of shoes from Czechoslovakia, which hold a most serious threat to the welfare of our shoe industry and imperils the jobs of nearly 8,000 of our shoe workers."

We have been given to understand that your department has issued a preliminary announcement of a contemplated reciprocity agreement with Czechoslovakia with the possibility that from these negotiations, a reduction in tariff schedules may result, which would include importation of finished and unfinished shoes and also textiles.

The Haverhill Chamber of Commerce has actively protested, in the past, the importation of foreign-made shoes, especially from Czechoslovakia. The contemplated reductions, as they have been brought to our attention, would mean that our manufacturers would be obliged to meet in open market, a competition which would ultimately mean their elimination and also result in the loss of nearly 8,000 jobs to Haverhill shoe workers.

The statistics which have been prepared by the United States Tariff Commission relative to imports of Bata shoes from Czechoslovakia showed a marked increase in 1935 and 1936, and this increase, we are given to understand, is continuing during the year 1937 to an even more marked degree. This increase has become most alarming to our local shoe manufacturers, who, with the present rise in industrial standards relative to hours and wages, in addition to increased costs of materials and overhead, have been obliged to increase the price of their shoes. Therefore, from these facts you must be in agreement with us that they positively cannot meet any further competition from such importations under present schedules.

In our opinion, the study of this tariff problem requires investigation and study on your part from the three following viewpoints, and therefore we request your consideration and assistance:

1. The evasion of present tariff regulations.
2. Proposed reduction as part of the reciprocity agreement.
3. The advocacy of increased rates, as present rates are inadequate to meet foreign competition.

The subject of evasion of the present tariff laws, to which we call your special attention, needs immediate investigation and correction, as, in our opinion, they are not only violations of the law but also its original spirit and intent; that is, the protection of domestic industries.

At the time of the adoption of the present schedules the threat to our local industry was from the importation of McKay shoes, and we were, therefore, favored by a schedule of 30 percent. Inasmuch as cemented shoes were not considered a menace, a 10-percent differential was allowed, making the duty 20 percent on this type, and on unfinished shoes 10 percent.

Today the situation is reversed. The importation of cemented shoes is taking precedence over the importation of McKay shoes, and from present indications unfinished shoes are replacing both the McKay and cemented types in their import numbers. Already our manufacturers have begun to feel the alarming effects of these changes.

As we see the problem, we are faced not with a differential of 10 percent between the McKay and cemented shoes, but with a 20-percent differential between the McKay and unfinished shoes. With the other factors already mentioned, of rising manufacturing costs, you can readily discern how threatening and damaging this situation is to our established industry. The importing of uppers, with the further processing of them in this country, under present schedules permits a 20-percent differential in favor of the foreign manufacturer, as you readily note, which, in our opinion, will ultimately mean the elimination of practically 75 percent of our Haverhill factories. Such competition cannot be met or tolerated.

Our answer and recommendation to this problem is that your committee favorably consider percentage increases on all present shoe schedules, and especially an additional percentage increase on cemented shoes and a still larger percentage increase on unfinished shoes. Furthermore, we would add that a quota prohibition be placed on all three types of importations.

May we suggest that you detail one of your experts to Haverhill and make a first-hand study of this problem, interviewing our manufacturers and studying their markets to obtain factual information on price ranges and also make a further study of the number of jobs that would be affected by a continuance of present schedules.

Inasmuch as we have a woolen mill employing 400 workers, who undoubtedly will be affected if reductions are made and if increases are not immediately made effective, the same arguments and request are applicable to the textile industry. Therefore, we request your additional consideration and assistance.

I wish to thank you for your immediate attention to this matter and inform you that this organization is ready to assist you in the gathering of any factual data which might be of assistance to you in reaching this determination—the need of increased protection or raise in the present tariff schedules.

Yours very truly,

RAYMOND V. MCNAMARA,
President.

JUNE 9, 1937.

SECRETARY, UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to confirm my telegram of June 9, as follows:

"The Haverhill Chamber of Commerce vigorously protests any reduction in tariff schedules on the importation of Czechoslovakian shoes. Requests investigation relative to reported evasions. Demands increased schedule rates, as present situation is a threat to the welfare of our shoe industry and imperils the jobs of nearly 8,000 Haverhill shoe workers."

We have been given to understand that the Committee for Reciprocity Information is investigating the contemplated changes in the reciprocity agreement with Czechoslovakia, with the possibility that a reduction in shoe and textile schedules may result.

The Haverhill Chamber of Commerce has actively protested in the past the importation of foreign-made shoes, especially from Czechoslovakia. The contemplated reductions, as they have been brought to our attention, would mean that our manufacturers would be obliged to meet in open market a competition which would ultimately mean their elimination and also result in the loss of nearly 8,000 jobs to Haverhill shoe workers.

Therefore we have requested this committee to make a study and investigation, and we are enclosing a copy of our letter to them for your perusal. The substance of this letter explains fully our position in the matter and what the effects of any reductions will be upon our local industries.

Are we right in assuming that in the final analysis schedules adopted by your Commission are final? If so, we ask that you consider the same requests which we have made to the Committee for Reciprocity Information, namely:

1. Investigation of the evasion of present tariff regulations.
2. Recommend that the proposed reduction as part of the reciprocity agreement be voided.
3. Establish increased rates, as present rates are inadequate to meet foreign competition.

We further wish to emphasize to you the urgent need for increasing the present schedules rather than lowering them; in fact, we ask you to go still further and adopt quota stipulations on all schedules, as in our opinion, this would insure still greater protection for our local shoe and textile manufacturers. It is our opinion that immediate action should be taken along these suggested lines, as over 75 percent of our shoe factories will be seriously affected, as it would be impossible for them to meet such unfair and discriminatory competition.

May we further suggest that a cooperative study and investigation between your Commission and the Committee for Reciprocity Information be made at once, and, if necessary, a first-hand study of the problems confronting Haverhill manufacturers, even to the necessity of detailing an expert to interview our Haverhill manufacturers—study their markets for factual information on price ranges, and the resultant effect on the shoe workers' jobs, by the continuance of the present schedules.

I wish to inform you that this organization is ready to assist you in the gathering of any factual data which might be of assistance to your Commission in reaching this determination—the need of increased protection or a raise in the present tariff schedules.

Thanking you for your courtesy in this matter, and again asking for your immediate attention, I am,

Yours very truly,

RAYMOND V. MCNAMARA,
President.

THE BROCKTON SHOE MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Brockton, Mass., June 9, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter received relative to the reciprocal trade agreement with Czechoslovakia and hope that your efforts and continuance of same will result in the proper safeguarding of our shoe industry which represents employment and business for so many of our citizens.

We certainly appreciate your help in our behalf and would be glad to secure for you any useful information that you desire.

For your information the Brockton Shoe Manufacturers Association are cooperating with the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers Associatton, 2812 Chrysler Building, New York City, Mr. Jay O. Ball, executive vice president.

We again thank you, and know you must appreciate that we will be heartily interested in the results obtained.

Very truly yours,

Re: Reciprocity treaty with Czechoslovakia.

HARTMAN SHOE MANUFACTURING CO.,
Haverhill, Mass., June 10, 1937.

The Honorable DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It is our understanding that the Committee for Reciprocity Information dealing with the above subject is to report an agreement to Congress which no doubt will come before your honorable body for consideration.

Representing the State in which shoe manufacture is of great importance, we feel sure it is hardly necessary to call to your attention the fact that the shoe industry of Massachusetts would suffer a great deal if shoes made in Czechoslovakia could be sold in the United States in competition with our own, as the labor cost in the above country is only a fraction of ours, and every pair of shoes imported aggravates the unemployment situation. No other State in the Union would suffer more than Massachusetts from this competition, and we hope, therefore, that instead of lowering the tariff on shoes from the above country steps will be taken to equalize the difference in labor costs between Czechoslovakia and America.

You can be sure your cooperation in the matter will be appreciated not only by us but by the entire shoe industry.

Respectfully yours,

HARTMAN SHOE MANUFACTURING CO.,
S. H. AXMAN.

HEADWAY SHOE CORPORATION,
Webster, Mass., June 10, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that Czechoslovakia is negotiating for a reciprocity tariff agreement on merchandise purchased from and sold to this country.

We wish you would do everything in your power to exclude shoes from this agreement.

The aforementioned country, with the tariff they now pay for bringing shoes into this country, can undersell manufacturers in this State approximately 50 cents a pair on an item selling for $1.65.

You can plainly see that if they can do that at the present time, with the present tariff rate, what they would do to our local industry if these rates were lowered in any way or discontinued entirely. Any reduction whatsoever on their present import duties on shoes would really cripple the entire industry in this State. This would no doubt include most other shoe centers of the country and throw thousands of people out of work.

We ourselves and the entire shoe industry are looking to you for assistance on this very serious matter.

With kindest regards to yourself, we remain,

Yours sincerely,

HEADWAY SHOE CORPORATION,
JOSEPH G. BACKMAN, Treasurer.

UNITED SHOE WORKERS OF AMERICA OF THE C. I. O.,
Newburyport, Mass., June 12, 1937.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Local 39, U. S. W. of A. of the C. I. O., at its meeting held June 10, 1937, took action on the matter of a reduced tariff on shoes imported from Czechoslovakia. Past experience has taught us that any reduction of tariff would be ruinous to both the manufacturer and the laborer. The mere mention of such a reduction sends a shudder of apprehension through the shoe workers, who are struggling to keep off the public relief rolls; and, of course, with a true American spirit, the shoe workers arise to the occasion to protest vigorously against any and all matters that would interfere with their liberty and the American standard of living.

In the vicinity of Newburyport there are about 2,000 shoe workers and their dependents.

Therefore Local 39 of the U. S. W. of A. of the C. I. O. requests you to do everything in your power to prevent any reduction in the tariff on shoes.

Sincerely,

ERNEST CARROLL, Secretary-Treasurer.

STATUS OF PROVISIONAL OFFICERS OF WORLD WAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1040) placing provisional officers of the World War on the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], which is the pending amendment, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 5, after the word "War", it is proposed to insert: "or who were appointed to commissioned or warrant grades or ranks in the Navy from civil life subsequent to April 6, 1917."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Texas state what will be the approximate cost of the enactment of this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The principal item of cost will be the adjusted compensation which this bill grants the former provisional officers coming within its terms. This cost will be approximately $3,302,046.

Mr. ROBINSON. How many officers are involved?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About 2,200.

Mr. ROBINSON. The total expense would be about $3,300,000?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; with about $10,000 additional for disability retirement benefits for those qualifying on application. This latter figure may be exceeded somewhat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the word "act", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be extended to those provisional officers retired under Regular Army retirement law and those honorably discharged under section 24b of the act of June 4, 1920, with 1 year's pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hesitate to make the inquiry I am about to submit because I realize that my early and subsequent education was somewhat neglected. However, I notice a tendency, which seems to make itself apparent in this bill today, toward what seems to me is unwarranted, although, so far as I can see, perhaps, very unimportant. I would not call attention to it if it were not that this is a very short bill and is going to be disposed of very soon and we shall not consume much time on it.

In line 10, on page 1; in line 1, on page 2; and in line 3, on page 2, appear the words "and/or." Beginning in line 10 of page 1, the language is as follows:

* * * extended the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers: Provided, That application under this act for benefits and/or privileges must be made within 1 year after the passage of this act.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the object of the bill is to place provisional officers on the same basis as emergency officers, with reference to compensation and disability retirement privileges, provided they apply within 1 year from the passage of the act for such benefits.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I understand the object of the bill; but why use "and/or" in each case when one word, as I understand the English language, would be much more expressive than this language, which is becoming more or less common in legislation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senator from Nebraska is correct. I think it would be very wise to strike out the expression, "and/or", wherever it occurs in the bill and substitute therefor the word "and." It would be plainer and would not change the meaning.

Mr. NORRIS. This is a new phraseology which has been gradually brought into use. It has been adopted, as I understand, from the advertisements in the newspapers of Wall Street bankers of the bonds and stocks which they desire to sell. They always use the expression "and/or."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senator has made a good suggestion, and I thank him for it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, and/or is a Janus-faced verbal monstrosity, neither word nor phrase. So says the Supreme Court of Wisconsin. It has no place in legislation and I am glad the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], supplemented by the suggestion of the able Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], has agreed to strike "and/or" from this bill.

May I have read at the desk at this time a newspaper clipping containing an extract from a decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin against the use of the expression "and/or."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"AND/OR" BLASTED BY WISCONSIN JUDGE OF SUPREME COURT

MADISON, WIS.—Anyone who has been perplexed on reading "and/or" in insurance policies or legal papers should be heartened. The Wisconsin Supreme Court cannot figure it out either.

In one of the most biting decisions the tribunal has ever handed down, Justice Chester A. Fowler took lawyers to task for the use of the puzzling word combination. The case involved an insurance policy invoked to recover costs of compensation awarded to an employee of the Sturgeon Bay Co. who was injured by a truck. The court had to decide whether C. D. Brower "and/or" the Sturgeon Bay Co. was indemnified under the policy.

"It is manifest", Justice Fowler wrote, "that we are confronted with the task of first construing 'and/or', that befuddling, nameless thing, that Janus-faced verbal monstrosity, neither word nor phrase, the child of a brain of someone too lazy or too dull to know what he did mean, now commonly used by lawyers in drafting legal documents, through carelessness or ignorance or as a cunning device to conceal rather than express a meaning with a view to furthering the interest of their clients. We have observed the thing in statutes, in the opinions of the courts, and in briefs of counsel, some learned and some not."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the bill be amended in line 10, page 1, by striking out "and/or"; on page 2, line 1, by striking out "and/or"; and on page 2, line 3, by striking out "and/or", and subsisting the word "and" in each case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 1, line 10, to strike out the words "and/or" and insert "and"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out "and/or" and insert "and"; and in line 3, to strike out "and/or" and insert the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes."

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS ON CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first business on the calendar.

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 8) limiting debate on general appropriation bills.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1435) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1436) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporting in the executive branch of the Government, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG (and other Senators). Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SAFETY OF EMPLOYEES AND TRAVELERS ON RAILROADS

The bill (S. 532) to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by providing for the inspection and investigation of conditions prevailing in train-dispatching offices and train-dispatching service and for the promulgation of necessary rules and regulations governing the working conditions of train dispatchers, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill has been on the calendar for a considerable length of time. Objections have been made heretofore to its consideration. It occurs to me that there should be an explanation of the purposes and provisions of the bill. I do not object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation of the pending bill is requested.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act and for the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "Commission" means the Interstate Commerce Commission;

(b) The term "carrier" means any carrier by railroad subject to the Interstate Commerce Act (including any terminal or station company) and any receiver or any other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of the business of a carrier subject to said act: Provided, That the term carrier shall not include any street, interurban, or suburban electric railroad unless such railroad is operated as a part of a general railroad system of transportation;

(c) The term "train dispatcher" means any subordinate official, employee, or person who is primarily responsible for directing the movement of trains, on an assigned section of track, by train orders or otherwise, and who transmits such train orders or directions verbally or by means of the telegraph or telephone, or any other device, and/or keeps necessary records incident thereto or performs related work;

(d) The term "train-dispatching office" means any office, tower, place, or station at which a train dispatcher, as defined in this act, is employed, or in which he performs his duties; and

(e) The term "train-dispatching service" includes the work of controlling the movement of trains or motive power, of any character, on an assigned section of track, by train orders or otherwise, which movement is made under the direction of a train dispatcher or is directed from a train-dispatching office, or for which a train dispatcher is customarily responsible; and also includes the work of keeping the records necessary and incident to such control of such movements.

SEC. 2. That upon complaint or upon its own motion the Commission or any investigator thereunto authorized by said Commission is hereby empowered to inspect and investigate any train-dispatching office or train-dispatching service of any carrier subject to this act with respect to all conditions under which train dispatchers work which in any way involve or affect the safety of the operation of trains.

SEC. 3. The Commission may, after investigation, upon finding in the train-dispatching office or train-dispatching service of any carrier any unsafe condition, method, rule, regulation, or practice, order such carrier to remove, discontinue, or modify such condition, method, rule, regulation, or practice within a time specified in the order.

SEC. 4. The Commission is authorized after hearing to prescribe and enforce by appropriate order such conditions, methods, rules, and regulations as it deems necessary in the interest of safe operation under which any train dispatcher works and/or under which any train-dispatching office or train-dispatching service of any carrier subject to this act shall be conducted, and the Commission is further authorized to amend, modify, or change by order such conditions, methods, rules, and regulations as said Commission may from time to time find necessary more fully to carry out the purpose of this act.

SEC. 5. Any carrier or any officer or agent thereof violating any of the provisions of this act or failing, refusing, or neglecting to comply with any order, rule, or regulation made under the provisions hereof shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each such violation and each and every day such violation, failure, refusal, or neglect continues shall be considered a separate violation and subject to a like penalty, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed. It shall be the duty of such United States attorney to bring such suit or suits upon satisfactory information being lodged with him of such violations having occurred; and it shall be the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lodge with the proper United States attorneys information of any violations of this act coming to its knowledge.

SEC. 6. It shall be the duty of the Commission to see that the requirements of this act and the orders, rules, regulations, and instructions promulgated hereunder are observed by carriers subject hereto, and all powers heretofore granted to the Commission are hereby extended to it in the execution and enforcement of this act.

SEC. 7. This act shall take effect and be in force 60 days after its approval.

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, let me suggest to him that the words "and/or" appear twice in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The use of those words has been discussed this morning; and the general opinion here is that the expression is bad English, and that the Senator should elect which word he will use, striking out either "and" or "or", according to his preference in the matter.

I merely desire to add that, while the bill has been repeatedly objected to on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, it seems to me to be in the interest of the safety of employees and to propose a reasonable and wholesome provision of law.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much.

Let me say that a similar bill came before the Committee on Interstate Commerce at the last session of Congress, and a subcommittee was appointed which held quite extended hearings upon the measure. Again this year a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] was chairman, held hearings on the bill. The Interstate Commerce Commission has recommended its passage.

The bill merely adds to the force of the Interstate Commerce Commission some inspectors to check up on the various train-dispatching offices. It will involve comparatively little expense to the railroads themselves, and I am sure they have no serious objection to the passage of the bill, notwithstanding the fact that representatives of some of them did testify in opposition to it. There is no serious objection to it, however; and I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I observe that in section 5 a penalty is provided in case of neglect or failure to comply with the orders and rules of the Commission. That is simply a penalty?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It does not constitute a criminal offense?

Mr. WHEELER. It does not constitute a criminal offense. It simply provides that when the Interstate Commerce Commission makes a rule and says that a certain train-dispatching office shall do certain things, a penalty of $100 is provided for failure to comply with the rule the Commission lays down in compliance with what it believes to be for the best interests of the traveling public.

I move to strike out the word "or" wherever it appears in the expression "and/or", and leave the word "and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 12, and on page 3, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not do that.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill has been on the calendar for a long time. If I am not mistaken, a similar bill passed the Senate at the last session of Congress, and the pending measure was reported at this session. The Interstate Commerce Committee has held two different and distinct hearings on the bill, and both times has recommended its passage. The Interstate Commerce Commission has passed upon the bill. Representatives of the Commission have testified on it, and have said there could be no objection to it, and that they could carry it out with their present force of inspectors.

Mr. HUGHES. That is contrary to the information I have, and I wish to examine the bill more carefully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, with reference to Calendar No. 225, being Senate bill 532, which was called earlier this morning and objected to, I have just been informed within the last few minutes that the Railroad Brotherhoods who have been interested in this bill and the railroads themselves have agreed on a compromise satisfactory to both sides. In view of that fact, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, I understand, refers to Order of Business 225.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; Order of Business 225, being Senate bill 532. The parties interested have just signed a contract within the last 10 or 15 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 847) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 100) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" approved July 2, 1890, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 47) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is rather an important bill. I should like to have a discussion of it.

Let the bill be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ROUTING OF FREIGHT SHIPMENTS

The bill (S. 1261) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIETERICH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, I wonder if we cannot return to Calendar No. 421, Senate bill 1261. It should be Calendar No. 241. The figures on the calendar have been transposed.

This is a bill in regard to which testimony was heard before the Interstate Commerce Committee at the last session of Congress and again at this session of Congress. The bill merely seeks to correct a condition brought about by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States wherein they gave the shipper the right to ask that his freight be shipped over the shortest route. As a matter of fact, there was practically no opposition to the bill on the part of the class A railroads, and the short-line railroads of the country are all interested in it. In substance the bill merely provides that when the class I railroads issue their publications they shall set forth in them the shortest route by which freight may be shipped. This will give notice to the shipper and give him the right to have his freight shipped over the shortest route by which it is possible to ship it. The shippers have had that privilege heretofore and the Interstate Commerce Commission so held, as I recall, up to the time the Supreme Court interpreted one of their rules.

The short-line railroads are anxious to have the Interstate Commerce Commission and the class I railroads given power to publish these statements showing the shortest routes, so that a shipper himself may decide as to which way he desires to have the freight go. I hope the Senator who objected will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. Would the selection of the routing of freight result perhaps in a reduction of rates or of mileage?

Mr. WHEELER. It would not reduce the rates, but it would reduce the mileage. Let me give an illustration. If freight is being shipped from Seattle to some point in Canada, instead of making it necessary to ship the freight to St. Paul the shippers would send it to a point in North Dakota and then it would go north from there, rather than having to go to St. Paul and back to North Dakota and then north.

Mr. BONE. I was wondering whether the reduction in mileage would of necessity, under a regulation, result in a reduction of the total rate.

Mr. WHEELER. My understanding is that it would not reduce the rate.

Mr. BONE. It would merely result in a saving of time?

Mr. WHEELER. It would result only in a saving of time in the shipment of freight and a cutting off of unnecessarily long transportation hauls. It is in the interest of efficiency, it is in the interest of the shipper, and as a matter of fact I think it is in the interest of class I railroads as much as it is in the interest of the short-line railroads themselves.

Mr. BONE. A great many shippers complain bitterly at the length of time consumed in freight shipments.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly; the shippers' organizations are in favor of the bill, and the short-line railroads are in favor of it.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I do not care to discuss the merits of the bill. It is a bill of sufficient importance to have justified hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It is a bill which seriously affects the railroads of this country, and no hearings were had at this session. Hearings are desired. If the chairman of the committee will agree to have the bill recommitted to the committee and have hearings, that will meet the desires of those who oppose the bill in its present form.

Mr. WHEELER. We held very complete hearings upon the bill, I think before the full committee, at the last session of the Congress. Representatives of the class I railroads appeared before the committee, representatives of the short-line railroads appeared before the committee, and representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the shippers appeared before the committee. I think the bill was passed by the Senate during the last session of the Congress.

Mr. DIETERICH. I am not advised as to that. Unless it is recommitted to the committee, I am going to object.

Mr. WHEELER. At some future time I shall seek an opportunity to move to take the bill up for consideration and have it set down for a vote in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DIETERICH. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

Mr. WHEELER. I give notice now that I shall move at the first opportunity to take the bill up for consideration.

Mr. LOGAN subsequently said: Mr. President, referring again to the long-and-short-haul bill, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection? I do not know what the unanimous-consent agreement is under which we are proceeding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion could not be made, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMATHERS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes" was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Let the bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senate is not ready to take up that bill. I did not hear who objected to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have been trying and are now trying to compose some minor differences with reference to this bill; and it is my suggestion that it go over without prejudice.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2106) for the allowance of certain claims not heretofore paid, for indemnity for spoliations by the French, prior to July 31, 1801, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF COMMISSION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 68) providing for the appointment of a National Unemployment and Relief Commission was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas it is evident that the problems of unemployment and relief have passed the emergency phase and these burdens now appear to be long-term charges against the National Government; and

Whereas there is need of a thoroughgoing study of all their phases, including (1) the extent and nature of unemployment and relief needs, (2) the problem of work as against direct relief, (3) the question of assessing the financial burden and administrative responsibilities as between private charitable organizations and local, State, and Federal Governments, (4) some plan for coordinating the long-term relief program with existing governmental agencies, such as the United States Employment Service, the Social Security Board, the Public Works Administration, and other Federal agencies, and (5) the probable avenues of greater private reemployment and a general program looking to the liquidation of the entire relief problem: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint immediately a nonpartisan Commission to conduct a national study of the whole problem of unemployment and relief and make recommendations looking to a comprehensive, intelligent, and just policy for the future. The Commission shall be known as the Federal Unemployment and Relief Commission and shall be composed of not more than 15 and not less than 5 well-qualified and distinguished citizens of the United States, who shall serve without compensation. The Commission is authorized to employ, without regard to the civil-service laws, an executive secretary and such experts and other employees as the Commission may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Commission shall present its findings and recommendations relating to the aforementioned subjects to the Congress at the beginning of the second session of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

SEC. 2. (a) For the purposes of this resolution the Commission or any person designated by it is empowered to hold hearings at any place within the United States, to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

(b) In case of contumacy by or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or hearing is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found.

SEC. 3. The President is hereby authorized to allot such sums as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this resolution, not exceeding the sum of $50,000, from any money appropriated for relief purposes.

The preamble was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD CREDIT FOR CERTAIN MILITARY SERVICE

The bill (S. 369) to allow credit to homestead settlers and entrymen for certain military service was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in every case in which an entryman or settler upon the public lands of the United States under the homestead laws has been or shall hereafter be discharged from the military service on account of wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty in time of peace, the term of his enlistment shall, in the administration of the homestead laws, be deducted from the required length of residence upon the tract entered or settled upon without reference to the time of his actual military service; except that no patent shall issue to any such entryman or settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least 1 year.

JOHN E. KETCHUM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2097) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of John E. Ketchum, which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the enactment of this act John E. Ketchum, first lieutenant, United States Army, retired, shall have the rank and receive the pay and allowances of a captain on the retired list of the United States Army: Provided, That the said John E. Ketchum shall not be entitled to any back pay, compensation, or benefits by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Indiana explain the bill? My only reason for asking about it is that the Department seems to have reported against it.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, this bill is for the relief of John E. Ketchum, who was retired from the Regular Army as a first lieutenant on February 16, 1920, on account of disabilities which he suffered in line of duty. During the time he was in the service, while playing in a polo game at Honolulu, he was hit on the head with a mallet and so seriously injured that from the effects of the injury he was paralyzed on one side. He fell away in weight to a mere shadow, and his brain started deteriorating and his mind was affected.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAST FIR & CEDAR PRODUCTS CO., INC.

The bill (H. R. 3557) for the relief of the Coast Fir & Cedar Products Co., Inc., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4679) for the relief of John L. Summers and others was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 41) authorizing the disposal of certain lands held by the Panama Railroad Co. on Manzanillo Island, Republic of Panama, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this measure? If there is no one present to explain it, let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CANAL ZONE CODE, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 4597) to amend the Canal Zone Code was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask what changes this bill makes in the Code of the Canal Zone?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this bill and the three bills which follow on the calendar seem to have some connection, and I ask that they go over until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] shall return and explain them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6144) to amend the Canal Zone Code was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. This bill should go over, also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6436) authorizing cash relief for certain employees of the Panama Canal, not coming within the provisions of the Canal Zone Retirement Act, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2416) relative to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL FLAGS AT FUNERALS OF SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 947) to provide national flags for the burials of honorably discharged former service men and women, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That paragraph I, Veterans' Regulation No. 9 (a), as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 38, ch. 12, appendix), be amended to read as follows:

"I. Where an honorably discharged veteran of any war or a person honorably discharged from the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, after serving at least one enlistment or for disability incurred in line of duty, dies after discharge a flag to drape the casket shall be furnished in all cases; such flag to be given to the next of kin after burial of the veteran."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELEANORA S. RICHARDSON

The bill (H. R. 2080) for the relief of Eleanora S. Richardson was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF J. D. WARLICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 178) for the relief of the estate of J. D. Warlick, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Treasury", to strike out the words "not otherwise appropriated" and to insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps"; on line 9, to strike out "$15,000" and to insert "$5,000"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to J. H. Warlick, of Birmingham, Ala., as administrator of the estate of J. D. Warlick, late of Ocala, Fla., the sum of $5,000, in full satisfaction of all claims of such estate against the United States for the death of said J. D. Warlick, who was struck and killed by a Civilian Conservation Corps ambulance, about 6 miles from Ocala, Fla., on June 11, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS W. SEAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1044) for the relief of Thomas W. Seay, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page

1, line 9, after the word "wounds", to strike out the comma and the words, "which have resulted in his permanent total disability received during the course of his employment as deputy sheriff of Lea County, N. Mex., and while assisting officers of the United States Government in the apprehension of a ring of counterfeiters" and to insert "received while in the performance of his duty as a deputy sheriff attempting to arrest a counterfeiter, said injuries having resulted in his permanent total disability: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas W. Seay, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., the sum of $10,000 in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government on account of personal injuries sustained by him as a result of gunshot wounds received while in the performance of his duty as a deputy sheriff attempting to arrest a counterfeiter, said injuries having resulted in his permanent total disability: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSTRUCTION AT WEST POINT FOR OLMEDO ALFARO

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 335) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Olmedo Alfaro, a citizen of Ecuador, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. IJAMS

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 339) granting permission to George E. Ijams, civilian employee of the Veterans' Administration, to accept and wear the decoration bestowed upon him by the Republic of France was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF MILITARY RESERVATIONS TO PUERTO RICO

The bill (S. 2531) to authorize the transfer of certain military reservations to other agencies of the Government and to the people of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the agencies hereinafter set forth the military reservations hereinafter named, or any portions thereof, upon determination by him that said military reservations, or portions thereof, are no longer needed for military purposes: Provided, That in case any of these reservations, or portions thereof, with the exception of the Escambron Tract, Puerto Rico, shall at any future time become surplus to the needs of the agency to which transferred, the head of such agency is hereby directed to transfer the same back to the Secretary of War to be sold under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1926 (44 Stat. 203): Provided further, That in the event the transfer of any of these reservations, or portions thereof, with the exception of the Escambron Tract, Puerto Rico, is not desired by the respective agencies hereinafter set forth, then the Secretary of War, after the expiration of 90 days following the passage of this act, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell such reservations, or any portions thereof, under the provisions of the foregoing act of March 12, 1926.

The agencies to which transfers are authorized and the names of the reservations, with the approximate amount of land involved in each instance, authorized to be transferred are as follows:

To the Department of Justice: Alcatraz Island, Calif., 12 acres.

To the Department of Agriculture: Fort DeSoto, Fla., 449.26 acres; Fisherman's Island, Va., 225 acres.

To the Veterans' Administration: Fort Miley, Calif., 23 acres.

To the Department of Commerce: Fort Dade, Fla., 5.5 acres; Stewart Avenue Reservation, Atlanta, Ga., 1.25 acres; Fort Livingston, La., 126.16 acres; Fort Gorges, Maine, 1.5 acres; Fort Scammel, Maine, a tract 20 feet square, with privilege to land anywhere at any time at the shore line of the 12-acre tract comprising Fort Scammel; Fort Independence, Mass., 1 acre; Gasparilla Island, Fla., 81.5 acres; Fort Popham, Maine, 0.85 acre; Salisbury Beach, Mass., 5 acres.

To the Treasury Department: Fort Dade, Fla., 369.02 acres; Fort Caswell, N. C., 57.2 acres; St. Andrews Sound Military Reservation, Fla., 21.64 acres.

To the people of Puerto Rico: That certain tract or parcel of land within the Main Military Reservation, San Juan, P. R., containing 46.04 acres, more or less, known as the "Escambron Tract."

SEC. 2. The net proceeds from any sale of the properties named in this act shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

PROMOTION OF SAFETY OF AIR TRANSPORTATION

The bill (S. 1760) to promote the safety of scheduled air transportation was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I notice the Senator from Nevada asked that this bill go over. I assume he is not pressing it now.

Mr. McCARRAN. No, Mr. President; I am not pressing either this bill or the next one for the time being. I will do so at a later date.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection personally to the second bill, but I have rather serious objection to the first one.

Mr. McCARRAN. At a proper time in the not far distant future I shall seek to have the bills considered.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will let me know when he seeks to have them brought up.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by aircraft in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT FOR TRANSPORTING STOLEN ANIMALS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1375) to provide for the punishment of persons stealing animals moving in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That this act shall be cited as the National Animal Theft Act.

SEC. 2. When used in this act—

(a) The term "animal" shall include any cattle, hog, sheep, horse, or mule.

(b) The term "interstate or foreign commerce" shall include transportation from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. Whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce any animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide of any animal, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, buy, sell, or dispose of any such animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 5. Any person violating section 3 of this act may be prosecuted in any district from, into, or through which such animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, has been transported or removed.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or amend any part of the National Stolen Property Act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes."

CLAIM OF ESTATE OF JOHN F. HACKFELD, DECEASED

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the estate of John F. Hackfeld, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the name "John F. Hackfeld", to insert "Provided, however, That in any proceeding in the Court of Claims, the United States shall not be deprived of any substantive defenses directed to the merits of said claim, which could be pleaded or availed of in any other forum", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That, notwithstanding lapse of time, prior alleged settlement, any statute of limitations, or other limitations upon the jurisdiction of such court, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Fredrick Rodiek, ancillary executor of the will of John F. Hackfeld, deceased, against the United States for just compensation, including damages and losses sustained by the said John F. Hackfeld, directly or indirectly, through the taking and sale or other disposition by the Alien Property Custodian or his agents, at less than their then true value, of any corporate stocks or other property owned by John F. Hackfeld, J. F. Hackfeld, Ltd., or H. Hackfeld & Co., Ltd., but belonging in fact to John F. Hackfeld: Provided, however, That in any proceeding in the Court of Claims, the United States shall not be deprived of any substantive defenses directed to the merits of said claim, which could be pleaded or availed of in any other forum; with the same right as in other cases to either party to apply to the Supreme Court of the United States for writ of certiorari to review any judgment that may be rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL REGISTER ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5721) to amend the Federal Register Act, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the Federal Register Act, approved July 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 500), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. (a) On July 1, 1938, and on the same date of every fifth year thereafter, each agency of the Government shall have prepared and shall file with the Administrative Committee a complete codification of all documents which, in the opinion of the agency, have general applicability and legal effect and which have been issued or promulgated by such agency and are in force and effect and relied upon by the agency as authority for, or invoked or used by it in the discharge of, any of its functions or activities on June 1, 1938. The Committee shall, within 90 days thereafter, report thereon to the President, who may authorize and direct the publication of such codification in special or supplemental editions of the Federal Register.

"(b) There is hereby established a Codification Board, which shall consist of six members: The Director of the Division of the Federal Register, chairman ex officio; three attorneys of the Department of Justice, designated by the Attorney General; and two attorneys of the Division of the Federal Register, designated by the Archivist. The Board shall supervise and coordinate the form, style, arrangement, and indexing of the codifications of the various agencies.

"(c) The codified documents of the several agencies published in the supplemental edition of the Federal Register pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) hereof, as amended by documents subsequently filed with the Division and published in the daily issues of the Federal Register, shall be prima-facie evidence of the text of such documents and of the fact that they are in full force and effect on and after the date of publication thereof.

"(d) The Administrative Committee shall prescribe, with the approval of the President, regulations for carrying out the provisions of this section."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the purposes of this bill explained. The bill mentions the Federal Register Act, and apparently provides for a Codification Board. I should like an explanation from the Senator who reported the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Federal Register Act was passed in 1935. It authorized a compilation of all the executive orders that had been issued and made effective through the various departments of the Government. When it was attempted to carry out the terms of the act it was found that a great many of these orders, extending over years past, were entirely obsolete so far as existing conditions are concerned. However, under the terms of the original act it was necessary to include all those old orders.

This bill permits the compilation of a code of selected orders, of those which are now in effect and are of general interest. In brief, that is the purpose of the bill. It will do away with a great deal of unnecessary work, and the result will be that the code will be up to date and include all general orders which are in effect at this time. The Department of Justice is very anxious to have the compilation made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANNER OF INFLICTING THE PUNISHMENT OF DEATH

The bill (S. 486) to provide for the manner of inflicting the punishment of death was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 486, being Calendar No. 706, be passed over for the purpose of having the Senate consider the next bill on the calendar, which is a House bill, and which is similar to the Senate bill If the House bill shall be passed, I will then ask that Senate bill 486 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2705) to provide for the manner of inflicting the punishment of death.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The legislative clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 323 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 542) be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 323. The manner of inflicting the punishment of death shall be the manner prescribed by the laws of the State within which the sentence is imposed. The United States marshal charged with the execution of the sentence may use available State or local facilities and the services of an appropriate State or local official or employ some other person for such purpose, and pay the cost thereof in an amount approved by the Attorney General. If the laws of the State within which sentence is imposed make no provision for the infliction of the penalty of death, then the court shall designate some other State in which such sentence shall be executed in the manner prescribed by the laws thereof."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in view of the Senate having passed the House bill, I respectfully ask that Senate bill 486, being Calendar No. 706, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PAYMENT FOR AIRPLANES OBTAINED FROM STINSON AIRCRAFT CORPORATION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 148) to provide for payment for nine airplanes obtained from the Stinson Aircraft Corporation by the Bureau of Air Commerce, Department of Commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let that measure go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago, when Calendar No. 709 was called, I inadvertently made an objection to the joint resolution. At that time I thought I was objecting to another measure. I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 709. That is a joint resolution which ought to be passed by all means.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider Senate Joint Resolution 148, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment at the end of the joint resolution to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of Commerce, to transfer, during the fiscal year 1937, from the appropriation "Salaries and general expenses for the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, fiscal year 1937", to the appropriation "Departmental salaries, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, fiscal year 1937", not to exceed $8,000.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to approve payment for nine airplanes obtained from the Stinson Aircraft Corporation, Wayne, Mich., under contract Cc-2510, dated October 1, 1936, out of an allotment of $83,000 made by the President of the United States on March 23, 1937, for this purpose from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. And that there is hereby appropriated for the Department of Commerce, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,000 for the purchase of Letters Patent No. 1531065, or licenses under said letters patent.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the request of the Secretary of Commerce, to transfer, during the fiscal year 1937, from the appropriation "Salaries and general expenses for the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, fiscal year 1937", to the appropriation "Departmental salaries, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, fiscal year 1937", not to exceed $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF SERVICES OF INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION TO SAVANNAH RIVER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4213) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended; authorizing the Secretary of War to extend the services and operations of the Inland Waterways Corporation to the Savannah River, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the Transportation Act, and for other purposes", approved June 3, 1924, as amended, be further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 7. The Secretary of War is authorized to extend the services and operations of the Inland Waterways Corporation to the Savannah River, under the same terms and conditions as are prescribed for the extension of such services and operations to any tributary or connecting waterway of the Mississippi River in section 3 (b) of this act, as amended by section 2 of the act approved May 29, 1928 (45 Stat. 979)."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, how does this bill amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the bill permits the Inland Waterways Corporation to operate deep-water barges on the Savannah River. The Savannah River has been widened and deepened at the expense of the Government, and under the Inland Waterways Act provision was made extending the services and operations of the Corporation to other rivers than the Warrior River and the Mississippi River. It is quite probable that in the very near future the Inland Waterways Corporation will cease operations on the lower Mississippi River because private parties are operating there. The Corporation has on hand surplus barges, and in view of the fact that the Savannah River is suitable for navigation and that no private operators are using it, the Commerce Committee thought it proper to make this provision with respect to the Savannah River.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from New York is correct. Nevertheless, there is rapidly arising a fundamental question regarding the operation of the Inland Waterways Corporation. I agree with the Senators from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE and Mr. RUSSELL] that, so long as the act stands as it now stands, the Savannah River is entitled to the facilities which are contemplated by this particular bill. But two things are perfectly obvious, Mr. President, and I wish to call attention to them before this bill shall be passed.

First, it is perfectly obvious that the Inland Waterways Corporation is frequently operating its facilities long after the statutory purpose of the act has been accomplished. Second, the question has arisen as to whether or not the Government owes transportation facilities to every stream which it makes navigable. There is approaching a substantial demand for the facilities of the Inland Waterways Corporation on many rivers in many other sections of the country. The net result of the whole situation, as I see it, is that the Inland Waterways Corporation Act ought to be surveyed and studied by the Senate Commerce Committee with a view to these new considerations; and as soon as the able senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] returns, he sharing my interest in this matter, we shall undertake to bring it constructively to the attention of the Senate.

In the meantime, I have no objection to the passage of the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTROL OF FLOODS OF MAJOR RIVERS OF THE UNITED STATES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to submit to Congress with reasonable expedition a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States and their principal tributaries. The Chief of Army Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War, is authorized and directed to conduct necessary surveys, assemble information, and prepare such a comprehensive plan, which shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and all works necessary for an effective and adequate system of flood control for all such rivers. Such plan and the report or reports to Congress shall list specific projects and set forth estimates of cost (including the expense of acquiring land and easements and payment of property damage) of carrying out the projects. Such plan and report or reports shall take into consideration flood-control projects now under construction or heretofore authorized by acts of Congress.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is a very important bill. Will the Senator who reported the bill please explain it?

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that a similar bill was passed by the Senate last year. The bill provides for the addition of certain lands to the Cache National Forest. The conditions in the public domain adjoining the national forest with reference to soil erosion and other matters have become very objectionable to the people in that neighborhood, so that, so far as I know, all the people there, without any exception, are favorable to some sort of supervision of the lands which immediately adjoin the Cache National Forest. Under the provisions of this bill the Forestry Service will undertake to remedy the conditions which exist in the lands adjoining the forest.

So far as the people in that region are concerned, there is no objection at all to the bill. Its passage seems to be very desirable for the community, as well as for the immediate lands involved. The change in the description of the land was made merely for the purpose of correction, and was made at the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL RESERVOIRS UNDER RECLAMATION LAWS

The bill (H. R. 2512) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that bill apparently is identical with a Senate bill that has been on the calendar for a long period. The Senate bill is no. 47, being Order of Business No. 377, and it has been pending since April 22, 1937. It is noted that the bill appropriates out of the reclamation fund $500,000 to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the construction of small storage reservoirs at such locations within the States subject to the Federal reclamation laws as the Secretary may select, no reservoir to be constructed under the bill at a cost exceeding $50,000.

I think the purpose of these reservoirs should be made clear. I should like to have the bill go over until the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] shall be present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I inquire whether Order of Business 377, being Senate bill 47, was not objected to when called on the calendar?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the bill was then objected to.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Arkansas. I have not read these two bills, but if they are exactly the same, if we act on either one of them we ought to consider the House bill and not the Senate bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] informs me that the bills are not identical. I think they should go over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY entered the Chamber.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Wyoming is now present.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, these bills, Senate bill 47, being Calendar No. 377, and House bill 2512, being Calendar No. 714, were identical when introduced, but the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of the Senate made a modification in the Senate bill. The House bill, therefore, differs from the Senate bill in one particular; namely, that it authorizes an appropriation of $500,000 from the reclamation fund, while the Senate bill authorizes such an appropriation out of relief funds.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator, are both these bills reported from the same committee?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They are not. I was going to say that both bills ought to be taken from the calendar and sent to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, in order that the differences might be adjusted by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. The RECORD does not show what committee reported Calendar No. 714, being House bill 2512.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That bill was not reported by the committee. It just went to the calendar when it came from the other House. The Senate bill was reported by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the House bill ought to be referred to the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly the proposal I am making.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wyoming has made a good suggestion, that both bills go to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; for further consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator make such a motion?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I make that motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 377, being Senate bill 47, in order that the Senator may make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I now ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 377, being Senate bill 47, and Calendar No. 714, being House bill 2512, be taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

A. R. NETTERVILLE, SR.

The bill (H. R. 4575) for the relief of A. R. Netterville, Sr., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to A. R. Netterville, Sr., of McComb, Miss., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $130 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for work done and money paid out for labor in the part construction of a home at the McComb, Miss., homesteads project in 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

CLARK DREDGING CO.

The bill (H. R. 5880) to amend Private Act No. 210, approved August 13, 1935, by substituting as payee therein the Clark Dredging Co. in lieu of the Bowers Southern Dredging Co., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Private Act No. 210, approved August 13, 1935, for the relief of the Bowers Southern Dredging Co., be, and the same is hereby, amended by substituting as payee therein the Clark Dredging Co. as transferee or assignee of said Bowers Southern Dredging Co.

MR. AND MRS. DAVID STOPPEL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2562) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. David Stoppel, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Mr. and Mrs. David Stoppel, of Butte County, S. Dak., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of their minor son, David Stoppel, Jr., who was killed on September 11, 1936, when run over and crushed by a tractor owned by the Emergency Conservation Works and assigned to the Civilian Conservation Corps camp near Fruitdale, S. Dak., which camp is operated by the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HAYES

The bill (H. R. 1277) for the relief of William Hayes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $700 to William Hayes in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injuries sustained by being struck by an automobile driven by Customs Patrol Inspector Herbert R. Bowen on August 31, 1928, in the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y.: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the miscellaneous receipts fund of the Treasury the sum of $75 appropriated in the First Deficiency Act of March 26, 1930 (46 Stat. 124), for the benefit of William Hayes, as set forth in the schedule of claims contained in House Document No. 243, Seventy-first Congress: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ROSALIE ROSE

The bill (H. R. 3203) for the relief of Rosalie Rose was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Rosalie Rose, of San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $1,454.50 in full settlement of her claim against the United States for damages sustained on May 29, 1931, when she was injured in a collision with United States Coast Guard truck no. 1001: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOHN H. BALMAT, JR.

The bill (S. 2408) for the relief of John H. Balmat, Jr., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to consider and authorized to grant the application of John H. Balmat, Jr., former captain, One Hundred and Forty-seventh Regiment United States Field Artillery, for such of the benefits under the act entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War", approved May 24, 1928, as the said John H. Balmat, Jr., may be entitled to in accordance with his disability rating: Provided, That the application of the said John H. Balmat, Jr., shall be filed with the Veterans' Administration within 6 months from the date of the approval of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 892) to repeal the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ANNUAL ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

The bill (S. 187) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana explain the bill? I see that an adverse report from the Interior Department accompanies it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, this bill is similar to other bills which have been introduced and passed at each session during the last several years and which have been designed to relieve individual miners and prospectors from the necessity of observing the law with reference to assessment work on mining claims. The reason for introducing the bill at this session is that the base metal mining industry in the country has not as yet recovered to a sufficient degree to enable the miners and prospectors who are largely dependent on it for the means to do the assessment work. While the price of copper is up and the mining industry is experiencing much activity at this time, the miners and prospectors have not been back to work sufficiently long to put themselves in a position financially to comply with these requirements.

We have received letters from practically every State in the Union where mining is carried on urging the necessity for the passage of this bill at this session.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator to allow the bill to go over? I will then look into it right away and confer with the Senator about it.

Mr. MURRAY. If the bill does not pass now, it will be utterly useless and futile, because the time for doing the assessment work will expire on the 1st of July. If this bill is not passed speedily it will be utterly useless to pass it at all. The justification for it, I think, is ample, and I believe the miners and prospectors in the sections affected are all agreed that the bill should be enacted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that unless the bill is passed speedily, in view of the fact that it must still go to the House for consideration and passage, in all probability it will be useless for the Senate to pass it at all.

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator from Idaho is entirely correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Idaho think it is a proper bill?

Mr. BORAH. I do. I am aware there is a division of view on this bill, but as it is drawn I believe it will help those who need help. It costs the Government nothing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was the bill unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. BORAH. I am not a member of the committee, but I am familiar with the conditions which make necessary this proposed legislation. The conditions which have existed during the depression, as stated by the Senator from Montana, are still such as to require some relief in this respect as to some.

Mr. MURRAY. The relief provided will only go to a few hundred miners and prospectors in various metal-mining States, and if the bill is not passed it will result in great distress. We have received hundreds of letters from all over the country urging its passage.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Tennessee that the bill, if passed, will not affect the large corporations engaged in mining activities, but in its practical workings it will reach only those in real necessity. Large corporations that own their properties will not be affected.

Mr. MURRAY. All the mining corporations have their claims patented promptly, but the small miners and prospectors are unable financially to proceed with their patent proceedings, which are quite expensive. Therefore it is necessary for them to carry the claims, sometimes, for many years before they finally secure their patents. Meanwhile they must comply with the law relating to this assessment work.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator inform me why the Interior Department failed to favor the bill? If it is a proper bill, why should the Department refuse to endorse it?

Mr. MURRAY. I do not think they thoroughly understand the situation. I have read their report, and I feel that the basis of their report is not well founded. It merely assumes that by enforcing this requirement it will stimulate the mining industry. This is not true. It will merely cause great distress and loss of claims by many.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I recall that a Senator who is now attending a committee meeting stated that he desired to have the bill go over. So I ask that it go over for today.

Mr. MURRAY. If the bill goes over, it might as well be taken from the calendar, for if it is not passed speedily it will be useless. The assessment work must be performed between now and the 1st of July, and if it is not performed by that time the claims will be thrown open to relocation and relocators may come in and take advantage of all the years of work and effort that have been expended on these claims by the original locators.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the statement of the Senator from Montana, I do not feel justified in persisting in an objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. Is it not true that a large number of these claims are valuable and that some of the large mining companies are merely waiting until the prospectors lose their rights for an opportunity to enable them to step in and take advantage of all the work the prospectors have heretofore done?

Mr. MURRAY. I think the Senator's statement is very probably correct, for the only ones who have offered any objection are superintendents or experts connected with corporations. There is absolutely no objection on the part of the ordinary miners of the country.

This exemption will not cost the Government anything. It is a form of relief that will not cost the taxpayers a cent, and yet it is absolutely necessary if we are going to protect the men who have spent a considerable part of their lives, their money, and their time in locating mining claims.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I shall make no objection to the present consideration of the bill, but I believe that by insisting upon its passage at this time the holders of claims will have done to them a very great injustice. There is no probability, indeed I think there is not the remotest prospect, of the bill becoming a law. If these men have their hopes aroused again and are led to believe the Government is going to grant this gratuity, they will not do the work which they now have time to do. If the bill should be passed by the Senate, of course, they will not do the work, but will wait hoping that the House will pass it and the President will sign it. My judgment is the bill cannot pass the House.

The committee did not take a favorable stand on the bill nor did it submit an adverse report. It only reported the bill to the Senate upon the suggestion of the very able Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and other Senators who were present at the committee hearings and urged that the Senate should be given an opportunity to consider it. The bill does not affect my section of the country at all. I do not know all the facts. I only know that some Senators are very much opposed to the passage of the bill and some are very much in favor of it. Those Senators who reside in the immediate section of the country which would be most affected are divided, some being for it and some opposed to it. I do not know which position is the correct one. I make this statement only that the Senate may be advised.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, one Senator who is now absent stated to me he is not in favor of the passage of the bill. He is from the West. Ordinarily where western Senators agree about mining legislation, that is all that is necessary to cause me to vote with them; but in this particular case it seems they are very much divided, and that is why I asked the questions I did of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I hope the bill will be passed. Owing to a revival in the mining business, practically every prospector who has been able to do so has been out doing assessment work. There have been a number who, because of conditions during the past 4 or 5 years, have found it impossible to perform the necessary assessment work. The bill would help only those who either are on relief or are of that general class. Some of those who have been able to do the work, it seems, have done whatever is necessary, while those who were not able to do it have not done anything.

I believe the Senate ought to give these men the protection which the bill would afford them. It would not cost the Government a dime, but would protect men in the claims which they have had and which they have been working for many years. It is for the protection particularly of individual miners and individual prospectors. We are "running against the clock." By July 1 the claims will have been lost to these men if we do not extend the time as the bill provides. I hope there will be no further objection and that the bill may be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 187) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States during the year beginning at 12 o'clock m., July 1, 1936, and ending at 12 o'clock m., July 1, 1937: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1936: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock m., July 1, 1937, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant, or claimants, were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1936: Provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 lode-mining claims held by the same person, nor to more than 12 lode-mining claims held by the same partnership, association, or corporation: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 placer-mining claims not to exceed 120 acres (in all) held by the same person, nor to more than 12 placer-mining claims not to exceed 240 acres (in all) held by the same partnership, association, or corporation.

RETIREMENT FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 2395) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this bill represents an agreement between railway employees and railway companies, being a bill to provide a pension system for railway workers. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Interstate Commerce. We are in conference, however, with those in the House interested in the proposed legislation, with the purpose of proposing some amendments. For that reason I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am asked by representatives of the employees of railroads to present to this honorable body, as the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has intimated, the fact that there is pending some new agreement between themselves and employers, and they likewise ask that the matter be temporarily suspended until their efforts now going forward shall be concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INCLUSION OF RESERVE OFFICERS UNDER PENSION LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2887) to amend the provisions of the pension laws for the peacetime service to include Reserve officers and members of the Enlisted Reserves, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Veterans' Regulation 1 (a), part II, paragraph 1 (a), be amended to read as follows:

"1. (a) For disability resulting from personal injury or disease contracted in line of duty or for aggravation of a preexisting injury or disease contracted or suffered in line of duty when such disability was incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service other than in a period of war service as provided in part I, the United States will pay to any person thus disabled and who was honorably discharged from such period of service in which said injury or disease was incurred, or preexisting injury or disease was aggravated, a pension as hereinafter provided, but no pension shall be paid if the disability is the result of the person's own misconduct: Provided, That active service, including service for training purposes, performed by a Reserve officer or member of the Enlisted Reserves of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, shall be considered as active military or naval service for the purpose of granting benefits under part II hereof, and it shall not be required that such Reserve officer or enlisted man shall have been discharged from the service. Pension under this paragraph shall not be paid concurrently with active-duty pay or employees' compensation. Where a person who is eligible for pension hereunder is also eligible for the benefits of Employees' Compensation Act, he shall elect which benefit he shall receive. This amendment shall be effective June 15, 1933, but payment of pension hereunder shall be effective from the date of receipt in the Veterans' Administration of application therefor or the date of enactment of this amendment, whichever is the later."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] state his understanding of the effect of the proposed legislation.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, prior to the National Defense Act of 1933 all those affected by this bill who suffered injuries or disabilities while in line of training duty, had a pensionable status as Reserve officers or as enlisted Reserve men in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps; and their dependents, in case of death, had a pensionable status. That act, however, contained the words "except in training", and it has been construed since 1933 that Reserve officers and Reserve enlisted men, if disabled, while on training duty, were not entitled to a pension under the law.

The bill now pending is intended to correct that situation.

I do not know the exact number the bill would affect, but I am advised by the Veterans' Administration that their estimate is it would cost the Government approximately $2,200 per year. The bill is favored by the War Department, by the Veterans' Administration, and by the various veterans' organizations.

During the Seventy-fourth Congress a measure was introduced in the Senate, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and reported back to the Senate, which was substantially the same as the pending bill. In effect there is no difference between the two bills. That bill was passed by the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress and went to the House. The House amended it so as to include members of the National Guard. The bill was vetoed by reason of that amendment. That provision is not included in the pending bill. The bill affects only Reserve officers and Reserve enlisted men, and would cost, as I have said, approximately $2,200 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF AWARDS TO SIOUX INDIANS OF SOUTH DAKOTA

The bill (S. 2556) to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an appropriation is hereby authorized in the sum of $79,038 to pay various Sioux Indians of the Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak., the amounts which have been awarded to them by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484), on account of allotments of land to which they were entitled but did not receive: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to determine what attorney or attorneys have rendered services of value in behalf of said Indians and to pay such attorney or attorneys on such findings when appropriation is available the reasonable value of their services, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery on each individual claim, which payment shall be in full settlement of all services rendered by the attorney or attorneys to the claimants in such claim.

SALE OF CHICKASAW INDIAN DORMITORY PROPERTIES

The bill (S. 2587) providing for the sale of the two dormitory properties belonging to the Chickasaw Nation or Tribe of Indians in the vicinity of the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall take possession of and appraise and sell, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him, the two dormitories, together with the lands upon which they are located and the furniture therein belonging to the Chickasaw Nation or Tribe of Indians, in the vicinity of the Murray State School of Agriculture at Tishomingo, Okla., which lands were acquired and which dormitories were erected and equipped under the acts of Congress of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L. 983), and May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. L. 584); and he shall deposit the proceeds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation, less expenses incident to the appraisement and sale of such properties, including reasonable compensation to special attorneys for services rendered in connection with such sale acting under the direction of the Governor of the Chickasaw Nation, such compensation to be fixed and paid by the Secretary of the Interior; and immediately after such sale patents conveying such properties shall be made and delivered in the same manner as now provided by law for the conveyance of other tribal properties: Provided, That preference right shall be given the State of Oklahoma to purchase said dormitory properties at a price to be agreed upon between the Secretary of the Interior and the Board of Regents of the Murray State School of Agriculture, in accordance with the senate concurrent resolution passed by the Sixteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

AUTHORITY TO APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today's session the Committee on Appropriations may be authorized to submit reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

J. R. COLLIE AND ELEANOR Y. COLLIE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 455) for the relief of J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BAILEY, Mr. ELLENDER, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on the occasion of Flag Day, June 14, a legal holiday in the State of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor in part to represent, our thoughts turn to the fundamental principles of justice and liberty so beautifully represented by the Stars and Stripes.

The spirit of Betsy Ross is very much alive in our land today. Our resistance of tyranny, our respect for the free judgment of the people, and our love of popular institutions of government are deep-seated within us. Here and there we see sporadic evidences of lawlessness and violence; but this is not the temper of the American people as a whole. These disturbances are universally condemned just as soon as they occur. They draw upon themselves the censure of all law-abiding citizens.

Today we have the presentation of a paradoxical issue wherein the process of collective bargaining is carried through to the point of completion, lacking but one absolutely necessary essential, the signatures of the contracting parties. Any contract made in good faith should carry the signatures of the contracting parties simply as proper business procedure. The great steel companies, such as the United States Steel Corporation and Jones & Laughlin, among others, have not only bargained collectively with labor but have signed legal instruments bearing witness to their good faith.

The innumerable classifications within the steel industry are so detailed as to escape the memory of experts. They are so minute as to require definite statement on paper. They are so complex as to demand the most faithful adherence to systematic business methods in their proper administration. This is the kind of document a number of steel companies have in hand to sign, but from which signatures have been withheld. Such action is typical of the kind of evasion and avoidance which has made necessary the great range of industrial legislation found on our statute books today. It is tempting of governmental force, which, if continued, can lead to nothing short of a degree of compulsion absolutely foreign to American principles of liberty. On this Flag Day it should cause us to regret that there should exist among us such flagrant disrespect for the commonly accepted standards of business procedure and for the spirit of the Labor Relations Act.

We hear much protest against Government interference with business. I have voiced such protests during the past few years. If industry is not reasonable, however, it will encourage the use of further compulsion on the part of the Government.

In view of the compliance by the majority of the great steel companies with the Labor Relations Act, it seems most unfair that the whole industry should be visited with condemnation simply because of the failure of a few of the companies to comply with the act.

Mr. President, many of our present-day industrial difficulties were unknown in the days when the organization of industry on a smaller scale permitted closer personal relations between the man who managed industry and the man whose labor made industry possible. The employer of today is no longer an individual but a corporation representing the property of hundreds and in some cases thousands of individuals. To surmount the difficulties which arise out of this superorganization we must either find some means of restoring the old-time personal relationship between worker and management or we must find an adequate substitute for it.

America's great need today is cooperation in industry, a mutual recognition by employer and employee of the rights and duties of each other. We are gradually learning that the day of "master and man" is gone in American industry, and that the man who works is a full partner with the man who manages. We are learning that the worker and the employer have mutual interests; that if one gains, both must gain; if one loses, both must lose; if one fails, both must fail. We are finding that each must recognize the needs, the aspiration, and the difficulties of the other, and that both must recognize their joint duty to the public, upon whose patronage the success of any industry ultimately depends.

Mr. President, with the advent of the policy of selective immigration during the past decade, our people have become increasingly homogeneous. This has advanced national unity and economic solidarity. It has made us one people, not only in respect to race but also in respect to class. The old barriers of wealth are being stripped away, along with the differences of foreign speech and customs. Today we must uphold respect for the law on the part of all of our citizens; for disrespect for the law is the road to economic anarchy, spelling disaster for everyone.

Collective bargaining, in which labor is free to select representatives of its own unrestricted choosing, is the hope of the Nation. In essence, this means the maintenance of purchasing power sufficient to keep the wheels of industry turning. It is a benefit to employers as well as employees, and is necessary to the general welfare. It is a practical realization of the Golden Rule, the recognition that we are all members one of the other, and the beneficiaries of a common-sense understanding of cooperation in business undertakings.

Mr. President, I have today attended the funeral of Mr. Hugh Kerwin, Chief of the Conciliation Service of the United States Department of Labor. He has been with this division for the last 24 years, rendering most consistent, valuable service. In the midst of the great strikes which faced the Nation back in 1921–22, when I was Secretary of Labor, Hugh Kerwin had the peace of mind necessary to instill a love of peace in the various conflicting groups. He was one who by nature had the conciliatory frame of mind necessary to produce peace in industry. I know of no one who had as many friends among both labor and industrial leaders as Mr. Kerwin, because both sides realized his desire to be impartial and fair. His passing will be a loss to his many friends, who during the years have admired his loyal devotion to duty, and his comprehensive understanding of the needs of the Nation.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—LETTER BY SENATOR BAILEY TO NORTH CAROLINA GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, some weeks ago the General Assembly of North Carolina addressed a resolution to the North Carolina Members of Congress. I have written a response to the resolution, which I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD, the resolution itself having heretofore been printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1937.

The Honorable W. P. HORTON, President of the Senate,
The Honorable R. G. CHERRY, Speaker of the House,
The General Assembly of North Carolina.

DEAR SIRS: Most respectfully I acknowledge the honor of receiving a copy of the joint resolution of our general assembly by the courtesy of the Honorable Brooks Price, of Union County, requesting the Senators and Representatives in the Congress from North Carolina to support the measure as proposed by the President "making important changes in the Federal judicial system."

The resolution was adopted March 22. It was delivered to me April 15. This accounts for the delay in this response.

To the changes proposed by the President in respect to the circuit and district courts I have entertained no serious consideration. They contemplate the addition of about 50 judges to the Federal system. I do question whether we need so many, although I realize that at the rate our Federal Government is expanding we may need even more in a short time. I favor the expedition of the administration of justice. I do not favor provisions authorizing additional appointments of judges for the purpose of affecting judicial determinations.

To the addition of six Justices to the Supreme Court of the United States, I have most serious objections, upon considerations which I intend herein to set out, and I am the more moved to do this because I am informed that the concurrent resolution was adopted without discussion or debate and without a record vote. Since the considerations that prompted the adoption of the resolution were not discussed, I hope to serve some good purpose by setting out the considerations which moved me to a decision to the contrary.

The preamble of the resolution sets out only two considerations supporting it, and neither of them professes to touch the merits. One of them is that "the recommendation of the President * * * presents an issue of great national importance in which the people of North Carolina and all other people of the United States are vitally concerned."

In this I concur; and since an issue of such importance is presented I am sure it ought freely to be discussed and debated. I may add that I have supported 9 out of every 10 of the President's principal recommendations (about 50 in number) to the Congress, and that I have gladly honored him for his great leadership in this most difficult period. I do not disagree with him willingly or without regret.

The other consideration is that "the people of North Carolina are strongly supporting the President of the United States in his recommendations to Congress and a great majority of the people of this State firmly believe that the enactment of such measure is vital to the future happiness and welfare of our people." Not that the general assembly finds merit in the measure, but that it believes that a great majority of the people believe that its enactment is vital to the future happiness and welfare of our people. This is the only reason stated for the general assembly's request.

This sole reason is an expression of opinion by the general assembly, and I am grateful for the expression. Public opinion must always be respected, and if a Senator takes a course to the contrary, he owes it to the people to make plain his reasons. But have I taken a course contrary to public opinion as duly expressed? Let us see.

I. In considering any representation as to public opinion, howsoever respectable, a representative of an American State must bear in mind that our Government is a constitutional, representative democracy; that a great authority has described it as government by public opinion; that the people have developed and established the method of ascertaining the state of public opinion and informing their representatives of it; that this method has due regard for the constitutional limitations even upon public opinion; and that it is of the very spirit of the national life. It is, therefore, entitled to the highest respect. This method is that of campaigns by political parties upon platforms duly submitted and passed upon by the electorate in elections frequently held. We do not guess about public opinion in America—we ascertain it at the polls. This is the purpose of elections. We trust none to say what the public opinion is at a given time, or in any 45-day period, but take the verdict directly from the people after full discussion and debate. In this way we reap the advantage of mass democracy without inviting the destruction of democracy—such as is now manifest in more than one nation on the Continent of Europe, in which democracy recently flowered only to die. It is true that all questions are not submitted to the electorate, but the principal questions are submitted.

The Democratic Party submitted the pending issue in the campaign and election of 1936. I refer to its platform and to that section which reads as follows:

"If these problems cannot be effectively solved by legislation within the Constitution, we shall seek such clarifying amendment as will assure to the legislatures of the several States and to the Congress of the United States, each within its proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the State and Federal Legislatures, within their respective spheres, shall find necessary, in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety, and safeguard economic security. Thus we propose to maintain the letter and spirit of the Constitution."

This section gave explicit assurance that recent legislative difficulties arising upon judicial decisions would be met by the accepted process of amendment to the Constitution—specifically "a clarifying amendment" such as will assure "the power to enact laws which State and Federal Legislatures * * * shall find necessary." It also declares—"thus we propose to maintain the letter and the spirit of the Constitution."

In no view of this paragraph may it be suggested that the platform declared for the addition of Justices to the Supreme Court for the purpose of altering the historic interpretation of the Constitution. On the other hand, it gave positive assurance that so far from altering the Court the party would proceed by way of submitting an amendment to alter the Constitution by way of granting power.

I respectfully submit, therefore, that notwithstanding the general assembly's expression of opinion as to public sentiment, I am bound by the actual expression of public opinion in the election, November 7, 1936, in which I was elected on this platform to the Senate.

I have no right, in politics or morals, to violate my party's covenant or my covenant with the electorate. I cannot assume that public opinion has changed between February 5 and March 22, 1937—and surely it could not have changed prior to February 5. If I could assume that it has changed between February 5 and March 22, 1937, would I be safe in assuming that it would not change again before the year is out? And if I could assume that public opinion has changed since the election, with respect to one portion of the platform, I might assume no less for all of it; and platforms and elections would in the process become meaningless. This is the value of platforms and elections: They make known the state of public opinion. There would be at once an end of government by means of political parties if public men might assume that public opinion has changed since the latest election, as their platforms would cease to command respect. Neither Congress nor legislatures may alter a political platform.

I have always considered the platforms on which I stood as binding—first, as obligations of my party; second, as covenants accepted by the electorate; third, as solemn promises given by myself as candidate. I cannot change them after an election I cannot go behind or over the verdict of the people as formally ascertained and declared in the election.

In a word, I consider it my solemn duty to the Democratic Party, and the majority of the people, to abide by its platform. I have constantly sought to maintain the unity and the integrity of the Democratic Party, and its platform is the means of that unity while the observance of its covenants is the means of its integrity. To play fast and loose with one's party platform is to invite destruction of the confidence of the electorate in the party, and that would mean the destruction of the party.

II. And now for a word on the constitutional limitations.

Upon the presentation of the certificate of my election to the Senate I was required to take an oath—required by all the people—to support, maintain, and defend the Constitution of the United States. This was the sole condition upon which I took the office of Senator. This oath is a part of the Constitution. The obligation of it at the least upon a Senator (or other public officer) is to accept and maintain the Constitution, not as he may wish it to be interpreted but as it is interpreted and applied by an independent Supreme Court. It will be agreed that an oath must be kept. To violate the obligation of an oath, required by all the people, even in response to public opinion, would be to break faith with the people.

If the President's proposal were no more than a plan to provide for an adequate number of Justices, I could readily support it. But it is more. Beyond all cavil, it is more. One cannot escape the evidence. The resolution of the general assembly carries the evidence of this in that it declares that "a great majority of the people firmly believe that it is vital to their future happiness and welfare." The President himself, having put the measure forward on February 5, as merely one to provide for an adequate number of Justices, has since repeatedly made it known that the additional number is desired because he expects, by appointing six additional Justices, so to reconstruct the Court as to bring about a tenor of decisions upon legislative acts different from the decisions handed down in recent years by the Court as now constituted, different likewise from the historic interpretation of the Constitution, utterly different from the interpretation of the President himself in 1930 in a formal address to the American people.

I take it that this is the "issue of great national importance" referred to in the preamble of the concurrent resolution, since it could hardly be said that the mere increase in the number of Justices to expedite the work of the Court would rise to the level of such an issue, when as a matter of fact the Court is current with its cases.

No one now disputes that the purpose of the proposal is so to expand the meaning of the Constitution as to give the Congress practically unlimited power, and consequently to restrict in proportion the powers reserved in the States and rights reserved in the people as individuals. The President has frankly made this plain—in his victory dinner address and his address to the American people. In the former he gave his view as to how the commerce clause should be interpreted, so as to give the Congress control over vast local activities and relations. In the latter he gave his view as to how the welfare clause should be interpreted, so as to give Congress general and unlimited power over wages, prices, production, transactions. He demanded legislation of this character now, and the addition of six Justices, to be named by him, to make sure that it would be upheld as constitutional.

And I may add in passing that since these addresses were uttered, his political manager and personal friend, the Postmaster General, the Honorable James A. Farley, has publicly boasted of the President's control over the Congress. "We", he said, "will call the roll, and all will be O. K." Having a Congress that will enact the legislation, a Supreme Court is needed to square the Constitution with it, in order that the will of the President may be supreme in our Republic. It will be had whenever "we" call the roll.

Over against this I have no choice: I must exercise my office to preserve constitutional representative democracy.

Is it within the meaning of the oath I was required to take that I may support a bill to increase the number of Justices for the purpose of validating acts of the Congress, which otherwise would be held in violation of the great instrument that the oath bound me to support and defend? Even assuming that I should consider that the acts ought to be validated, may I seek to increase the number of Justices for that purpose? Am I to be the judge of my powers?

I think not. I quite agree that it is within the power of the Congress to determine the number of Justices—whether 1 or 9 or 900. I fully agree that it is within the power of Congress to provide the funds necessary to maintain the Court and that it has power greatly to reduce them. It has power to withhold funds necessary to enforce the decrees of the Court. But I know that good faith with the oath to support the Constitution requires of a Senator that he shall not exercise those powers to affect the tenor of judicial determinations. He holds those powers in a sacred trust and under oath. The Court, not the President, not the Congress, is final judge of the powers granted or reserved in the Constitution. I cannot express my regret that an occasion is now presented when enlightened public opinion must be appealed to to preserve this function to the Court against all who would disturb it.

The Congress is vested with legislative powers as enumerated and implied, but the moment it seeks to affect the exercise of the judicial power it violates the Constitution, which vests the whole, undivided, and absolute judicial power—other than impeachments—"in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." To take the contrary view in this controversy is to attack the accepted principle of judicial review; it is to hold that the Congress has power at any time to validate its acts and to determine litigation of any sort; that the limitations imposed upon it by the people mean nothing; and the Constitution would mean only what the Congress should desire it to mean. If 9 Justices hold an act invalid, we may have 15 to validate it, and if 15 do not please us we may have 25. James I could remove judges who would not do his will. They did not hold by life tenure. Since our Justices do hold by life tenure, it is proposed to increase the number, thereby gain a majority, and accomplish precisely the same end James I had in view.

Manifestly it was never intended that President and Congress might get together for the purpose of reconstructing a Court to find their acts within the powers granted by the Constitution—the instrument creating the Government and preserving the rights of the creating people as against the mighty power they had designed to serve—not to rule—themselves. For, if Congress may have the Constitution construed to suit its purposes by enlarging the number of Justices, why have any pretense whatever of an independent judicial department? Why not return to the system against which we revolted?

I do not think that anyone questions that the people of the United States demand, and their Constitution requires, an independent judiciary—courts of justice free of political influences as well as of all other influences save those of conscience and reason. I do not doubt that once this independence shall have been compromised—no matter with what high purpose—it would be violated again and again; and our people would be reduced to the very conditions under which our forefathers suffered; and revolting from which, with determination that neither they nor their posterity should so suffer again, they established in the Constitution, as they hoped for all time, the independence of the processes of justice. Without this independence of the judiciary our elections would turn not upon issues of policy but upon issues of power. And Congress would not only legislate; it would judge. Presidents would not only execute the laws, but determine the rights of citizens under the laws. I cannot escape the conviction that the adoption of the bill would inevitably compromise the independence of the judiciary, since that consummation is its manifest purpose and immediate consequence.

I am willing that many things shall be said of me, but I am utterly unwilling that it shall be said of me that I did not in the day of my testing do all that in me lay to preserve this independence. I know its value to men. I know that it means more to their welfare and future happiness than any legislation that may be conceived of. There can be no compensation for the loss of the independence of justice; for without independence there can be no justice in a constitutional representative democracy.

III. I am sure the general assembly did not request me to support the bill referred to solely because the President recommended it. This might be inferred from the first paragraph of the preamble. But its record is far from being one of supine acquiescence. I recall that the President requested that the general assembly ratify the so-called child-labor amendment, which it refused to do; and also that the administration sent five bills to the general assembly with representatives to urge their passage, and that of these five only one was enacted. No criticism is intended here. In the general assembly, as in the Congress, a legislator must do his duty as he sees it. The responsibility is upon him, and he cannot shift it either to the President or to what he conceives to be popular opinion.

The general assembly doubtless refused to ratify the child-labor amendment because it was unwilling to impair the power reserved to the State of North Carolina and aggrandize the power of the Federal Government in that respect. I mention the matter because in the capacity of United States Senator from the State of North Carolina, I have considered myself as in a measure a trustee of the powers of our great Commonwealth in the Senate. I have thought without variation that to discharge that trust I must not impair those powers, indeed that I must preserve them, that I was bound by an oath and by all the traditions of my position to preserve them. I cannot be party to impairing those powers existing in my State by the device of adding compliant Justices to the Supreme Court for the purpose of determining a new meaning of the Constitution and expanding the powers of the Congress. To do so would be to do by indirection what I am forbidden to do by the highest sanctions. And if the general assembly was unwilling to impair the power of the State, when it had authority to do so, it will not complain that I refused to impair that power when I had no authority to do so.

IV. If the powers reserved to the State of North Carolina ought to be impaired, if the rights reserved to the people in North Carolina, as individuals, are to be abridged, if the powers of President or Congress ought to be increased, there is a way provided, and that way is the submission of an amendment to the Constitution for ratification by State conventions or State legislatures. The State itself must act, the State and none other. This is the way the Democratic Party proposed; it is the way the people approved in the election of 1936; it is the way the Constitution provides; it is the way to preserve democracy, and there is no other way for me.

Moreover, I cannot conceive of a worse way than that of undermining the independence of the judicial department of our Government by political action in the exercise of power granted to preserve, and not to control, the courts of justice; to which alone a citizen must appeal to declare his rights under the law and its officers; upon which he must rely for that precious equality which he must enjoy in order to be a free man; to which he must repair in the day when his rights are challenged by the powers of government or the greed of men; and in which if he does not find justice, he will find it not at all.

These words are uttered guardedly and with due restraint: I cannot conceive of a worse way than that proposed. It is not only that it violates the Democratic Party's platform as approved and accepted by the people; that it is opposed to the spirit of the Constitution and would tend to dilute the virtue of that great instrument; that it would undermine the independence of the courts of justice, and call into question the quality of their judgments and decrees; that it ignores the sole right of the people to impair the powers of their States or to aggrandize the powers of the Federal Government; but that in addition it subordinates the moral and spiritual to political power; it would invade the holy precincts of justice and bring her helpless down to the pit of politics.

As I have said, no legislative or economic program, however beneficent, could compensate for such a disaster to our people and their civilization. In a constitutional representative democracy, if such a thing should come to pass, no faith whatever would be placed in the Government thereafter.

And surely if there is a legislative or economic program which the people desire, and it is not within the existing constitutional power of the Congress, an appropriate amendment will be submitted and ratified. This is infinitely better than a political invasion of the Supreme Court from whatever point of view.

If public opinion now favors the proposal, as the concurrent resolution declares, I am sure the time will come when public opinion will utterly condemn it. All that is necessary is that the people shall have time to realize its true character and import.

Assuming that I ought to be guided by public opinion, I must be guided by public opinion as formally expressed and ascertained in the campaign in which I was elected a Senator. My position here, I am glad to say, is fortified by convictions that tell me my duty—on the merits—and responding to which my spirit finds peace in the midst of conflict and criticism. While there are differences with respected constituents and honored friends, which I regret and make due allowance for, the duly ascertained public opinion fully sustains the position that I have taken and must maintain to the uttermost—not only on that account but also because I am convinced that in no other course may I worthily discharge the great trust reposed in me by my party and the people of North Carolina.

Most respectfully,

JOSIAH W. BAILEY.

EXCUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of William Healy, of Idaho, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 14, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, whose temple is all space and whose inspiration makes life dear, we thank Thee for our Republic. We praise Thee for its traditions and for its sacred institutions. Through the sacrifices of our fathers, whose chivalry challenges the admiration of the world, they have come down to us. The Lord God help us to keep the trust, revere the truth, and honor Thy decrees. We thank Thee for the flag of our country. In song and in story may it be celebrated today in city, hamlet, and countryside. We pray that its beauteous folds may fly high, telling of the onward sweep of truth and right. In the troubled centers of our homeland, rocked by the cries and haunts of wearied men, we pray that Dives and Lazarus may be brought together and each claim the right to help the other. In the spirit of the Prince of Peace, may our national ensign, with its celestial white, its sacrificial red, and with its stars of Thy providence, shine like a rainbow in every storm cloud of strife and trouble, and Thine shall be the glory. Through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 11, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WALSH, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. CAPPER members of the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance on the part of the Senate, as provided for in Public Resolution No. 40, approved June 11, 1937, entitled "Joint resolution to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 665. An act for the relief of the estate of Everett P. Sheridan; and

S. 1112. An act awarding a Navy Cross to John W. Thomason and Robert Slover.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 40, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance the following Members of the House: Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. FRED M. VINSON, Mr. COOPER, Mr. TREADWAY, and Mr. CROWTHER.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2924) for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of war, catastrophes of nature, and other causes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, after line 10, insert:

"To the estate of the late J. Frank Points, formerly American vice consul and clerk at Nassau, Bahama Islands, the sum of $312, such sum representing the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the hurricane at Nassau, Bahama Islands, September 16, 1928."

Page 2, line 8, strike out "$607.41" and insert "657.41."

Page 4, after line 17, insert:

"To Ishmael J. Gauntés, American consular messenger at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, the sum of $100, such sum representing a donation in order to enable him to obtain a partial reimbursement of the reasonable value of necessary personal property lost as a result of the hurricane at Santo Domingo, September 3, 1930."

Page 4, fater line 17, insert:

"To the estate of the late Robert M. Ott, formerly American vice consul at Belize, British Honduras, the sum of $115.95, such sum representing the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the hurricane at Belize, September 10, 1931."

Page 5, line 16, strike out "$3,816" and insert "$4,016."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is the matter the gentleman spoke to me about this morning?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. These amendments pertain to differences in claims.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3687), to extend the period during which the purposes specified in section 7 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act may be carried out by payments by the Secretary of Agriculture to producers, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am assured by the gentleman from Texas that this is agreeable to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]; otherwise I would ask to have this put over.

Mr. JONES. I may say for the RECORD this amendment was adopted by a unanimous vote of the committee and it is agreeable to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], to bring the matter up at the first opportunity. I have that understanding with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after "relate", insert: "Provided, That an annual accounting shall be made to Congress as to the expenditures of this money and for what specific projects it was thus expended."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONES moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3687) to extend the period during which the purposes specified in section 7 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act may be carried out by payments, by the Secretary of Agriculture, to producers, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, and, on page 2, after line 9, of the House bill, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Section 9 of such act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"'The Secretary shall transmit to the Congress a report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for each fiscal year thereafter, of the operations for such year under sections 7 to 14, inclusive, of this act, which report shall include a statement of the expenditures made and obligations incurred, by classes and amounts.'"

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of one of our colleagues, WARREN J. DUFFEY.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of cancer and to include therein a report known as a Report on Cancer of 1936, by Dr. Hoffman, which is in excess of two pages and requires an estimate from the printer, which I have obtained.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a commencement address made by my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] at Cumberland University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Hon. James Farley at the dedication of the Vicksburg, Miss., post office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by me yesterday at Valley Forge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of no quorum, but I shall withhold it until these gentlemen present their announcements.

(Mr. MERRITT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two short quotations from the national anthem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have authority to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and I now ask to extend them at this point on the subject of reorganization of the Government, and to include therein some references made on this subject by former President Hoover and a former Member of the House, the late Honorable James Beck, who was also Solicitor General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

REORGANIZATION OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the Republican caucus of the House has gone out of its way to adopt two resolutions opposing parts of the President's reorganization plan. It is curious that the Republicans have picked out for opposition the particular parts of the program which were advocated repeatedly by the last Republican President in his messages to Congress. They condemn the President for advocating a single personnel administrator in the place of the Civil Service Commission. Yet the identical recommendation was made to Congress by President Hoover in a special message to Congress on February 17, 1932.

Without expressing myself in any way as to the merits of the suggestions received by the committee from the President's committee or the Brookings Institution, I want to call attention to a little history.

The President's reorganization plan would authorize the President to separate the administrative aspects of independent regulatory commissions, and make these aspects, such as budgeting and personnel, subject to the review and supervision by the Executive. This power was specifically granted to the President in the Economy Act of 1932 (Public, No. 428, 72d Cong., 2d sess.) in the grant of authority to the President "to segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character."

This language was also incorporated in the Reorganization Act of 1932. President Hoover made exactly the same recommendation in a message to Congress on December 3, 1929, when he said:

It seems to me that the essential principles of reorganization are two in number. First, all administrative activities of the same major purpose should be placed in groups under single-headed responsibility; second, all executive and administrative functions should be separated from boards and commissions and placed under individual responsibility; while quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial and broadly advisory functions should be removed from individual authority and assigned to boards and commissions. Indeed, these are the fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded, and they are the principles which have been adhered to in the whole development of our business structure, and they are the distillation of the common sense of generations.

It is said by the resolution of the Republican caucus that the abolition of the office of Comptroller General would remove the control by Congress over expenditures. In the first place, it has never been proposed to abolish the office of Comptroller General, but the recommendation was to take away from that office the executive functions which it now exercises, leaving the office all of the duties and authority which belong to an independent auditor. The executive functions which this office exercises, such as preaudits and the prescribing of accounting systems, were exercised by the Treasury Department for over 130 years prior to 1921, and no one said then Congress had surrendered its power over the purse strings. According to those who are members of the President's committee, the President's plan, which calls for an independent auditor general, who is required to make reports to a special joint committee of the Congress, is designed to restore to the Executive those powers which are essentially executive in character, but to establish more effective accountability of the executive branch to the Congress itself instead of to the Comptroller General.

On December 9, 1932, President Hoover transmitted to the Congress an Executive order transferring certain of the functions of the Comptroller General to the Treasury, pointing out that the General Accounting Office was exercising purely administrative functions. A distinguished committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce in 1934 recommended the creation of a general accounting office directly under the President and the transformation of the Comptroller General's office to that of an auditor general. Did anyone then accuse this committee of attempting to deprive the Congress of its control over the purse strings?

EXCERPTS FROM MESSAGES OF PRESIDENT HOOVER TO CONGRESS RECOMMENDING THE ADMINISTRATIVE AND QUASI-JUDICIAL ACTIVITIES SHOULD BE SEGREGATED AND ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIVITIES PLACED UNDER SINGLE-HEADED DEPARTMENTS AND QUASI-JUDICIAL ACTIVITIES PLACED UNDER BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS

Because of its direct relation to the cost of government, I desire again to bring to the attention of the Congress the necessity of more effective organization of the executive branch of the Government, the importance of which I have referred to in previous messages. This subject has been considered many times by the Executive and by the Congress, but without substantial results. Various projects are now before the Congress.

The need for reorganization is obvious. There has been with the years a gradual growth of the Government by the accretion in its departments and by independent executive establishments, boards, and commissions as problems requiring solution confront the President and the Congress. Today the Government embraces from 150 to 200 separate units, dependent on the method of notation used. Governmental units when once set up have a tendency to grow independently of other units. This leads to overlapping and waste. Moreover, there is a marked tendency to find new occupations when the initial duties are completed. The overlap and the number of agencies can be reduced. (Message to Congress, Feb. 17, 1932.)

There is little hope for success in this task unless it is placed in the hands of someone responsible for it, with authority and direction to act. Moreover, the consummation of a comprehensive reorganization should be undertaken gradually and systematically, predicated on a sound and definite theory of government and effectuated as the result of study and experience gained in the actual processes of reorganization.

I recommend, therefore, that the Congress provide for—

(a) Consolidation and grouping of the various executive and administrative activities according to their major purposes under single-headed responsibility, the Congress designating the title of the officer to be placed in immediate charge of such groups as are not now possible under existing organizations.

(b) Adoption of the general principle that executive and administrative functions should have single-headed responsibility and that advisory, regulatory, and quasi-judicial functions should be performed by boards and commissions, thus permitting the transfer of certain regulatory functions from executive officials to existing boards or commissions and executive functions from boards and commissions to executive officials. (Message to Congress, Feb. 17, 1932.)

QUOTATIONS AND NOTES FROM STATEMENT OF JAMES M. BECK, SOLICITOR GENERAL, AT A HEARING OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE JUDICIARY OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES WITH REFERENCE TO TWO BILLS REGARDING THE AUTHORITY OF THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL

In this statement Solicitor General James M. Beck reviewed in detail the history of the appointing and removing power of the President and discussed the constitutionality and questions of policy of the Budget and Accounting Act provisions making the Comptroller General subject to removal only by the President.

The following are some of the significant quotations from his statement and also notes summarizing other parts. In opening his statement he reviewed the history of the Budget and Accounting Act and quoted from the veto message of President Wilson of the first bill as follows:

It has, I think, always been the accepted construction of the Constitution that the power to appoint officers of this kind carries with it, as an incident, the power to remove. I am convinced that the Congress is without constitutional power to limit the appointing power and its incident, the power of removal derived from the Constitution.

The section referred to not only forbids the Executive to remove these officers but undertakes to empower the Congress, by a concurrent resolution, to remove an officer appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. I can find in the Constitution no warrant for the exercise of this power by the Congress.

In my opinion, this intent and purpose and the provisions of the act giving them effect are clearly unconstitutional. The duties of the General Accounting Office are beyond question executive in character, and Congress has attempted to take from the President by those provisions a part of the executive power lodged in him by the Constitution.

The function of appropriating money is legislative, and it is concededly within the power of Congress to designate the purposes for which the money shall be spent and the manner in which it shall be spent. The spending of it, however, and the accounting for its expenditure are not legislative functions but executive; and it is not only the right of the executive branch of the Government under the Constitution to carry out the purposes of Congress in making the expenditures but it is the duty of the Executive to see that proper accounting is made for those expenditures.

When, therefore, we find that Congress has created an officer who is independent of the President and of the other executive branches of the Government, who is not amenable to the suggestions of the Attorney General or guided by his opinions, but who assumes the right to review their official action, to pass upon the propriety of their exercise of discretion, and who claims to be responsible merely to Congress, the result is what might have readily been foreseen. Instead of simplifying, coordinating, and harmonizing the accounting system of the Government it has resulted in complication, confusion, and discord.

The heads of departments exercising their respective powers as parts of the executive power under the President have been reduced to a position of subserviency in the fiscal concerns of the Government to an officer who claims responsibility to Congress alone.

If this be accepted as a fact, an essential portion of the executive power of the Government has been taken from the President and given to an agent of the legislative branch. If this may lawfully be done, Congress may assert the same power over the heads of each of the executive departments and over all officers of the Government not protected by the Constitution by making them removable only by joint resolution of Congress; and when that has been accomplished the President's power of appointment will have been effectually destroyed, for any officer appointed by the President may the next day be removed by Congress.

* * * * * * *

Article II, section 1, of the Constitution provides that—

"The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America."

And the final clause of section 3 of article II is:

"He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

It will be noted that the Constitution does not say that such executive power as Congress shall delegate to him shall be vested in the President. The language is "The executive power"—that is, the executive power vested in the Nation by the Constitution. It will also be noted that his duty is to take care that "the laws" be faithfully executed, not such laws as Congress shall see fit to entrust to his care for their faithful execution.

The language of the oath which he is required to take is significant:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

His oath is not merely to execute laws or to perform such duties as may from time to time be imposed upon him by Congress, but to "execute the office", the office of President, an office clothed with the complete executive power of the Nation and charged with an indivisible responsibility for the faithful execution of all laws. Congress can neither take from him any of that power nor relieve him of any of that responsibility.

When, therefore, an act of Congress purports to take from him power to execute the will of Congress in respect to appropriations and to relieve him of the care of seeing that they are faithfully executed, it is plainly void. It is void for the further reason that it is an attempt by Congress to appropriate to itself executive power, for I find in the Constitution no grant of executive power to Congress, and I believe that Congress has no power to create any office by which it shall itself exercise executive functions.

* * * * * * * *

Prior to the Budget and Accounting Act, the Comptroller of the Treasury claimed very extensive powers, and the extent of his claims has varied from time to time as the office has been held by different men. So far as I have been able to ascertain, he did not claim the right to interfere with the Attorney General with respect to the conduct of litigation. He did in some instances claim that he was not bound by the opinion of the Attorney General on matters of law. While he did at times claim that the powers given to him were to be exercised independently of the Secretary of the Treasury, nevertheless his office was part of the Treasury Department—a part of the executive branch of the Government—and, like all officers of that Department, liable to removal by the direction of the President. This, of course, tended to harmony and coordination of effort.

I am told that during the first administration of President Cleveland, when Mr. Garland was Attorney General, the officer who exercised the powers afterward conferred upon the Comptroller of the Treasury declined to follow an opinion of the Attorney General. Mr. Garland brought the matter to the attention of the President, who summoned the officer and told him, in substance, that the Attorney General was the legal adviser of the President and of the heads of the executive departments, and that if the Comptroller was unwilling to be guided by his advice his resignation would be at once accepted. After that interview the Comptroller saw the matter in a different light.

I understand from those who have had years of experience in the matter of adjusting claims and settling Government accounts that in years past the rulings of the Comptroller have been regarded as conclusive on the different executive departments, but generally he was disposed to follow the opinions of the Attorney General; that in matters of disbursements of appropriations, disbursed as provided in the various acts on the authorization, approval, or within the discretion of the head of a department, the Comptroller accepted the action of the head of the Department as to necessity and propriety, and that no issue ever arose between him and the Attorney General or the head of a department which was not ultimately adjusted without unseemly controversy.

The extent of the Comptroller's powers, however, has always been a somewhat vexatious one. These powers should properly be very large, and the performance of his duties must necessarily be attended with great difficulties and even, at times, involve strong differences of opinion. As long as that officer is, however, under the control of the Executive, there can arise no conflict which the Executive cannot adjust.

Such supervisory power, lodged ultimately in the President, who is himself elected by all the people and who alone is responsible to all the people, makes for uniformity, harmony, and efficiency. A lack of such supervision tends to confusion, discord, and waste of effort. The President cannot take "care that the laws be faithfully executed" when their execution is in the hands of an officer over whom he has no control.

This situation has brought about numerous conflicts and clashes between the Comptroller and the executive departments and bureaus, the details of which are already known to you and with which, therefore, I shall not burden you.

It seems to me to be intolerable that a statute should purport to confer upon any accounting officer power to override the executive departments and the Attorney General, who is by law their adviser, and who by the terms of the statute creating his office is only amenable to the authority of the President. It impairs the dignity and authority of the President to have such an officer in a position to question and annul the official acts of his Cabinet advisers, who act under his authority and are subject to his control.

After reviewing the position of the attitude of the Comptroller of the Treasury, who, though he insisted he had the right to disregard positions of the Congress, followed the practice of conforming to such decisions and the opinions of the Attorney General, Mr. Beck cited the following quotations from the Comptroller General in which he refused to be bound by the decisions of the courts:

The attitude of the present Comptroller General is indicated by the following rulings:

In considering the question of expenditures by the Employees' Compensation Commission, Comptroller General McCarl said, February 26, 1924 (vol. 3, Decisions of the Comptroller General, p. 547):

"This is a question for determination solely by the Comptroller General of the United States and may not be adjudicated by any court. While courts may render judgments against the United States in certain cases, such judgments are payable only after specific provision for such payment is made by the Congress and upon settlements made by the General Accounting Office. * * * The question as to the right and duty of the accounting officers to require this evidence and to refuse to allow credit for payments unsupported by evidence deemed necessary to determine their legality and for payments made in direct contravention of decisions of the Comptroller General of the United States is not a question which properly may be submitted to and determined by any court. The decision and judgment of a court upon an action against your disbursing officer and the surety under his bond for the recovery of the balance found due from him to the United States in the settlement of his accounts would not be determinative of the question here involved."

In another decision, February 7, 1924 (vol. 3, Decisions of the Comptroller General, p. 479), Comptroller General McCarl said:

"Under the act of June 10, 1921, responsibility to settle and adjust claims against the United States and to determine the availability of appropriations for their payment is upon this office, and while opinions of the court are given most careful consideration, especially where it appears that the merits or legal principles involved have been fairly presented to and fully considered by the court, it is not believed that this office would be justified in applying the decision in the Quinn case to the case here under consideration."

The Quinn case was a decision by the Court of Claims. In other words, the Comptroller General practically holds that he is not bound by the decisions of the courts and that he is the court of last resort upon questions relating to the obligations of the Government to its creditors; that while the opinions of the courts may be useful to him in the performance of his duties there is no obligation upon him to follow them.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Waters (133 U. S. 208) quotes with approval the following language of the Court of Claims (21 Ct. Cls. 37, 38):

"The Comptroller decides whether or not the items are authorized by statute and are legally chargeable. He has no power to review, revise, and alter items expressly allowed by statute, nor items of expenditures or allowances made upon the judgment and discretion of other officers charged with the duty of expending the money or of making the allowances. His duty extends no further than to see that the officers charged with that duty have authorized the expenditures or have made the allowances."

These decisions of the Comptroller General serve to illustrate the wide contrast between the views of the Comptroller General, with respect to the powers and duties of his office, and the sound conception of what are his functions as declared by this decision of the Supreme Court.

Many illustrations could be given to show that while the Comptroller General's assumption of extraordinary power may have its advantages, it also has its great disadvantages. While it may at times save, on other occasions it wastes. Where at times it helps the other departments of the Government to function, at times it disarranges the machinery of the Government as that machinery has worked from the beginning. Many illustrative cases could be given.

* * * * * * *

The best method of handling the intricate accounting system of the Government is a matter which can best be discussed by those who are familiar with the vast detail of its operations. In a broad way, however, the following conclusions seem to me to be beyond question sound:

1. There should be no official at the head of an accounting department who is not directly or indirectly responsible to and removable by the President.

2. There should be no official at the head of an accounting office who is not required to be guided upon legal questions by the advice of the Attorney General.

Since the passage of the act of 1789 the Attorney General has been the legal adviser of the President and the executive departments of the Government. Since 1861 he has had supervision of the United States district attorneys. Since 1870 he has been the head of an executive department, and since 1886 he has been in direct line of succession to the Presidency.

3. There should be no official at the head of an accounting office who has the right to interfere with the Attorney General in the conduct of litigation.

4. The chief accounting official of the United States should unquestionably hold an office of great power, prestige, and dignity, and he should have all the authority necessary to bring about simplification, coordination, harmony, and efficiency. This cannot be accomplished, however, by making him independent of the Executive and the executive departments. To bring about this result there must be cooperation between him and the heads of the other departments. That cannot follow when he is their superior. It can only result when they all work together under one who is superior to them all, the President.

I do not say I am in full accord with what Mr. Beck said, but my purpose is to call to the attention of the Republican Members what this outstanding member of their party advocated.

The Republican caucus overlooked the statements of their own leaders when they were in power. No one ever accused former President Hoover or the Honorable James M. Beck of trying to destroy the authority of the Congress or of exalting unduly the power of the President. But when the same recommendations are made by President Roosevelt, they are condemned as an attempt to enlarge the Executive power at the expense of Congress.

I have refrained from giving interviews relative to the activities of the House or joint committee and this statement is solely to call attention to the inconsistency of the Republicans on the questions at issue. It appears to me their position is the suggestions were sound when we had a Republican administration but not so when the Democrats are in power.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I now make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously, a quorum is not present.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 89]

Allen, Del.	Eckert	Lambertson	Scott
Amlie	Fish	Lanzetta	Shafer, Mich.
Arnold	Fitzgerald	Lea	Shanley
Bates	Forand	Lord	Shannon
Bernard	Frey, Pa.	Lucas	Sirovich

Douglas	Johnson, Minn.	Richards	Zimmerman
Drewry, Va.	Keller	Sadowski
Eaton	Kelly, N. Y.	Schneider, Wis.
Eberharter	Kvale	Schuetz

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixteen Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAX BILL

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, there will be before us today a very important measure, the District of Columbia tax bill, which contains some unjust and unfair provisions. I shall offer some amendments which will give the District more taxes, amendments to increase the inheritance and gift taxes and to place an increased tax upon the owners of real estate here, who are getting by on the lowest tax of any city in the country. [Applause.] I shall also offer amendments with respect to other taxes which will bring to the District the revenue it wants.

However, I do not propose to support any bill which seeks to place an income tax upon Congressmen, who are already taxed under the Federal law and under the State laws of many of the States, or they should be taxed under such laws. I do not propose to support any measure which seeks to have the District of Columbia impose a tax upon Members of Congress in addition to all the other taxes Members are compelled to pay. [Applause.]

I hope, Mr. Speaker, sufficient time will be allowed for us to offer some real amendments to this bill. For instance, I shall propose that we exempt up to a value of $5,000 all homes actually owned by their occupants, and then impose a graduated tax upon the owners of the big apartment houses and hotels of this city, who are making more money than is the case in any other city of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAX BILL

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and, pending that motion, I ask that general debate may be limited to 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by the ranking minority member of the committee and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7472; and pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill may be limited to 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the ranking minority member of the committee. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Virginia there is already a unanimous-consent request pending.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Then, reserving the right to object, I would like to make a brief statement, if agreeable to the chairman of the committee.

We have before us today the bill about which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has just talked. It is a bill with seven titles covering different sorts of taxes which are being imposed upon the residents of the District of Columbia and upon nonresidents of the District of Columbia. The bill was reported but was not printed until Friday morning. The committee obtained unanimous consent to have until midnight Friday night to file its report. The report on the bill was not printed until Saturday morning, and was not available to the Members of the House.

The bill contains 80 pages. It seeks to impose taxes on nonresidents of the District of Columbia. We do not know what effect the bill will have. It has not been printed long enough for Members to digest it properly or find out what effect the bill may have on their constituents back home.

We ought not to go into the consideration of the bill this morning, and I shall be forced to ask for a division on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO]. If the House will vote down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on this bill, we shall not have to consider it in this half-baked fashion. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia and Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky objected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7472.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 30, noes 167.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] makes the point of order there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and sixteen Members are present, not a quorum.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7472.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 227, answered "present" 1, not voting 128, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I had no idea that the House of Representatives so misunderstood this proposed legislation that the action which has just been taken by the House might happen. Had I had any idea of this, I would have made an attempt to gain recognition before this time to explain to the Members what would happen in the event they did what they have just done. Since I have had no opportunity before, I want to point out to you at this time that the government of the District of Columbia is some $6,000,000 short of funds enough to run the District government.

There are only two ways that this money can be raised. One way is to place a tax upon the citizens of the District of Columbia so that they themselves who reside here shall pay the cost of their own government. This is one way. The only other way is by Federal contributions; and when it comes by Federal contributions your constituents and mine pay or help to pay the cost of government in the District of Columbia, and you, today, by your action have said that you do not want the citizenship of the District of Columbia to pay taxes to maintain their own government, but that you want your constituents to contribute to the support of the government that you will not permit the people themselves to maintain.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; I cannot yield. You have voted not to consider this legislation.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman pointed at me.

Mr. NICHOLS. I refuse to yield, Mr. Speaker. The effect of this action is that if the tax bill for the District of Columbia is not considered and passed before July 1, then there likely will be no police department, there likely will be no fire department—they certainly will be reduced by at least 50 percent. [Laughter.] Laugh, if you will, but let us see. The Federal Government has contributed $5,000,000 by your vote to help pay the cost of the District of Columbia government, and, unless this bill passes, only the tax of $1.50 on real estate and the small amount of tax which is paid by the public utilities will be the revenue provided for the District of Columbia, and they will be $6,000,000 short of enough money to carry on the government.

Many of you gentlemen today voted against the motion to consider this bill because you were advised by Members and by the press that this bill was about to impose a tax on the incomes of Members of Congress. This is not the case. No one will pay an income tax under this bill in the District of Columbia who is not domiciled within the District of Columbia, and if you are familiar with the definition of the term "domicile", domicile is synonymous with legal residence, or unless you maintain a permanent place of abode within the District of Columbia and live there for at least 3 months out of each calendar year.

What Member of Congress comes within the classification of an employee of the Federal Government, or what Member makes this a permanent place of abode? If he does, then I say that he should pay an income tax within the district where he lives as a permanent residence.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I do this for the purpose of finding out what is to take place the remainder of the afternoon. Has the District any other bills?

Mr. PALMISANO. There are three other bills, one of them a bill respecting beauty parlors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Would it be in order at this time to move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order under the rules of the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, there is only one other route that the Committee on the District of Columbia can pursue, and I do not know what that committee will do. If Members of this House are not willing to consider on the floor of the House legislation which is brought to the floor by a regular standing committee of this body, not even willing to go into the consideration of the legislation that is recommended to you by one of your own committees, then there is only one other route. That committee must go to the Committee on Rules and ask for a rule. Perhaps they will get a rule. If they do, then the legislation can only be considered at such time as the Calendar of the House will permit its being considered. This is the 14th day of June, and it is entirely conceivable that July 1 may get here before this House can again take up consideration of this bill. If that happens, then the responsibility for the District of Columbia Government not having funds with which to operate is squarely upon your shoulders by reason of the vote cast in this House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, of course, I do not care to object, but it seems to me after having lost an hour and a half of time already, the District Committee ought to go on with its program. If the gentleman from Virginia or any other gentleman desires time, I shall be very glad to grant it to him.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to finish talking about this matter.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think we could have finished this thing properly had we gone into debate upon the bill instead of "gassing" about what ought or ought not to be done. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the subcommittee handling this matter of taxation, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I object.

COSMETOLOGY

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 6869, to regulate the occupation and practices of cosmetology, to create a District of Columbia Board of Cosmetology for the examination and licensing of persons to carry on or to teach such practices, to insure the better education of such practitioners, to provide rules regulating the proper conduct and sanitation of cosmetological establishments and schools, for the protection of the public health, and to provide penalties for violation thereof, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up the bill H. R. 6869, on the Union Calendar, and asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I want time in opposition to the bill. If the gentleman will agree to give me 30 minutes I shall not object.

Mr. DIES. I want some time.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate proceed for 1 hour, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] to control 30 minutes, and I to control 30 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Unless the time is regularly parceled out so that we may participate in at least one-half of the time, I shall object.

A MEMBER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF HOUSE

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION—COSMETOLOGY

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6869) to regulate the occupation and practices of cosmetology, to create a District of Columbia Board of Cosmetology for the examination and licensing of persons to carry on or to teach such practices, to insure the better education of such practitioners, to provide rules regulating the proper conduct and sanitation of cosmetological establishments and schools, for the protection of the public health, and to provide penalties for violation thereof, and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 1½ hours, 30 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], 30 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], with the understanding that he allow some time to other Members, and 30 minutes to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO]?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] that there is not any reason that I know of why one-half of the time should not be accorded to this side. If we have time to spare, we can parcel it out over here just as well as the gentleman can on that side. I shall have to insist on that equal division of the time.

Mr. PALMISANO. Very well. I may say that under the rules unless debate is limited, any Member of the House who can obtain the floor will be recognized for 1 hour. So if you want to go ahead and kill this bill or kill the rest of the day, it is all right with me.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But we are automatically entitled to one-half the time, and, Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the request.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6869, with Mr. MCREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in the bill upon which we just voted on the motion to resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I think a little explanation is due to the Members of the House in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], who indicated that the House perhaps did not understand what it was doing when it voted not to consider this bill and did not understand the result of its vote. I think I can safely say that the House understood exactly what it was doing. [Applause.] The gentleman from Oklahoma said there was no route to take after we had voted down consideration of this bill. I want to say for the District Committee, in all friendliness and kindliness—I know they have a difficult job, because I was a member of that committee, and I would not have it again for anything—there are two routes you can take that will settle this matter very easily. One route is to strike out everything in this bill after the first title. The first title provides that the District Commissioners may draw on the Federal Government in advance for its needs.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am not going to yield, because I only have 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Virginia is not proceeding in order. He is addressing himself to a matter that has already been disposed of. The matter now under consideration is a bill dealing with cosmetology.

The CHAIRMAN. This is general debate, and the gentleman from Virginia may proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am surprised at the interruption of the gentleman from Illinois. I would have thought that everybody in this Committee would like to have the House thoroughly understand the matter so that there would not be any question, and that when one side had been heard I think the other side should be heard.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I seem to have a mistaken idea of the attitude of some Members on the District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I understand we are discussing the bill under consideration. We are not in general debate. Under the rules, if that is true, debate must be confined to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. We are not under unanimous consent. We are under the general rules of the House, and the gentleman from Maryland has 1 hour and he has yielded 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, who can talk about whatever he pleases.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. May I appeal to the Chair that none of this interruption be taken out of my time?

I want to say to the House there are two distinct routes that this Committee can take. One is to adopt title I of this bill, which would permit the District to draw in advance for their needs during the coming fiscal year, and during that interim they would have ample time in which to make a study of the tax situation in the District of Columbia and bring in a bill that would be comprehensive.

That is one route that can be taken, one way to settle this controversy. The other route that can be taken, if the committee will take it—and I cannot for the life of me understand why the committee will not do it—the other route that is very simple is for the committee to strike out that title in the bill which undertakes to impose an income tax for the benefit of the residents of the District of Columbia upon those people who reside back in your district and my district and who have to pay their taxes back home. If anybody can give any good reason why a man living in Oklahoma who merely happens to draw an income from here by reason of being here for 3 months in the year should have to pay an income tax to the Federal Government, an income tax to the State of Oklahoma, and then an income tax for the purpose of running the District of Columbia, I wish he would take the floor and tell us what it is.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

A strange thing about this, as I said before we took this vote, is that this bill was not printed and available to the Members of the House until Friday morning.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that is not correct.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The bill was not printed until Friday. We should have more time in which to consider it. I want the gentleman to understand that I am not unfriendly.

Mr. NICHOLS. Why has the gentleman said that this bill was not available until Friday? As a matter of fact, the bill has been in the House for 10 days. The gentleman is correct as to the report; the report was not printed until Saturday.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Now, I want the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] to correct me if I am wrong about this: The bill was not printed until Friday, June 11, as shown on the face of the bill itself. There was a previous bill introduced, but that bill differs from this bill. The bill that we were asked to consider today was never printed until Friday. I do not know exactly what was in the other bill, but my understanding is that these most controversial points were not in there.

Mr. MAVERICK. The bill has never been printed?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No; that is another bill. It was printed; but this bill that we were asked to consider today was not printed and ready for the House until Friday morning, and the report upon which the bill was based was not available until Saturday. You are asked to digest a bill of 80 pages in one afternoon.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one brief question?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. This bill provides for deductions to those paying income taxes in the States.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That brings me to one other point that I think interests the Members of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I am advised that several amendments have been prepared by members of the committee which would exclude those who already have paid an income tax in other States.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. We could not know what the amendments were; the amendments were not available. We would have to vote on whatever amendments were thrown at us. What I am saying is that we ought not to be required to digest, with such little consideration, and vote upon a bill which may affect many of our constituents, and it does affect thousands of my constituents living right here adjacent to Washington.

If the members of the committee would agree to strike out the income-tax features of this bill I am sure they would have no trouble in passing it today. If the committee would say that they were willing to do that, I think they could still call the bill up today.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman certainly would not want to pass the inheritance-tax provisions of this bill in their present form, would he?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not know, I have not given any attention to that, I do not know anything about it. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection except to those clauses in the bill which impose on my constituents, who are already paying two income taxes, another income tax in order to maintain the District of Columbia. That is my chief objection to the bill. If the committee will agree to strike out the income-tax features I have no doubt but what they still could pass the bill today.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take the floor on this subject, but inasmuch as the income-tax question has been raised by various Members, I think I should make a little statement in regard to it.

I think I told the gentleman from Virginia in the cloakroom that I had prepared an amendment to eliminate the features that Members were objecting to. I offered such an amendment in the committee. It passed by one vote, but upon reconsideration it lost by one vote. At the time I did not believe the Members of the House were in sympathy with that provision.

I think, if the Members had considered this bill, unquestionably the income-tax feature would have been eliminated. I cannot see why the Members refused to consider the bill which has to do with equalization of taxes. There is another tax provided for in this bill which, in my opinion, would not affect the Members of the House or the people of their districts. By virtue of the vote that has been taken, that provision cannot be considered. There are also other provisions that affect only the people of the District. I am sorry the question is settled, and I hope the Rules Committee will give the District Committee a rule to bring this bill up for consideration immediately.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The gentleman states he expects to ask for a rule from the Rules Committee. I hope this matter may be taken back to the District Committee and the controversial feature eliminated before the Rules Committee is asked for a rule, because I am afraid if that is not done the gentleman will have the same trouble.

Mr. PALMISANO. I may say we will request an open rule which permits the Members of the House to offer all sorts of amendments to eliminate the objectionable features.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. In view of the action just taken by the House, does the gentleman feel he can approach the Rules Committee with any degree of confidence in that direction?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. If the gentleman will yield, I will answer "yes"; I think we can.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUINN].

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, we are now going from the material and sordid things of taxes, revenue, and controversial matters into something involving charm and beauty. The committee deliberately presented this bill following the highly controversial bill that has been eliminated from consideration by the House today with the hope it might place perfumed oil upon our troubled waters this afternoon and that we might be permitted to proceed in an orderly manner so far as the present bill is concerned.

All down the ages, since man came out of the wilderness as a semisavage, the beauty of women has been paramount. Great artists have painted her immortal picture upon canvass; sculptors have carved her charm and beauty in marble; and above and beyond all her crowning glory is her hair.

This bill with a high-sounding title, cosmetology, does nothing more than protect a very intimate personal service, possibly the most intimate personal service that the public contacts. That is the regulation of beauty parlors in the District of Columbia. Forty-two States have enacted this law to throw safeguards around women and their health. This bill pertains to women's contact with beauty parlors. It is a parallel of practically all other State bills of the Nation, and I can see no good reason why it should not be on the statute books of the District of Columbia. Very much to my surprise, I find there is going to be some opposition. It is rather mysterious to me to find a charming gentleman, like the gentleman from Texas, opposed to this bill, and I am rather curious to find out what his objections are. I anticipate that the Members, with their usual gallantry, will, by unanimous vote, pass this measure which simply protects the health of women who enter beauty parlors. It has to do with sanitary measures and other features.

There is no expense connected with it so far as the public or the District of Columbia are concerned. A board is provided which regulates the method of procedure, and there are inspectors to see that the regulations are carried out. The bill is self-supporting in view of the fact the license fee goes to pay for the expenses involved. It is a worthwhile measure, and I know of no city in the Nation where there is more urgent or crying need for sanitary regulation of beauty parlors than in the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUINN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Does the measure now under consideration provide for Sunday closing of these beauty parlors and a penalty if they fail to close on Sunday?

Mr. QUINN. It provides they shall close 1 day a week and register the day on which they will close, which may not necessarily be Sunday.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. The bill permits only 6 days' operation for each of these institutions?

Mr. QUINN. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUINN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Are the beauty-parlor operators in favor of this legislation?

Mr. QUINN. The beauty-parlor operators throughout the Nation have helped and encouraged the adoption of this bill.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I mean in the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUINN. Absolutely. It has the approval of all the organized beauty operators here.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUINN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. How many such schools of cosmetology are there in the District of Columbia?

Mr. QUINN. Some four or five.

Mr. PATMAN. What is the object of stating that not more than two members of the board shall be graduates of the same school?

Mr. QUINN. The object is to prevent a particular school from dominating the profession.

Mr. PATMAN. There are four or five schools now?

Mr. QUINN. Possibly that many; yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

RESTRICTING BUSINESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to all bills of this type whether the specific bill applies to beauty-parlor operators or the manicurists, as this bill does, or applies to real-estate operators or other groups or classes who expect to obtain passage of laws that will permit them to restrict their business to a few. If we want more unemployment in this country and if we want to render it more difficult for people to change from one business or profession to another in case of an emergency we can cause just such situation by placing every business in a strait jacket.

If this was such a business as medicine, or law, or professions of that kind, it is all right to license them and they should be licensed, but is the business of a beauty-parlor operator or a manicurist such a business that we should consider it a profession and not permit anyone to practice, not even permit girls going to school who work their way through school by doing this beauty work, because we have said that you must be licensed by the board?

You must have a permit, you must have operated in this line of business for a number of years, or you must have gone to a certain school and received a certain training. Otherwise you cannot have a license to operate under this bill.

This bill is just a forerunner of other bills. At one time I was on the Committee on the District of Columbia. I know many people in the District are wanting to place the realty business in a strait jacket, to fix it so only certain people can engage in the real-estate business. They have almost a monopoly on the handling of real estate, rents, hotels, and apartments, and they want a full and complete monopoly. Therefore, when we pass this kind of a bill, it will be used to boost the real estate bill. The object of such legislation is to keep the other fellow out, to restrict the field to the few who are in, and keep everybody else out.

I was in Philadelphia not long ago and learned something there about such boards as would be set up here. During a certain campaign a certain political party wanted to raise so much money from all these different groups, from the barbers so much money, from the manicurists so much, from the beauty-parlor operators so much, and also from workers in some of the other occupations which came under boards. All these people had to do was to tell their inspector to go around and solicit money. If he happened to run across one who said, "No; I do not believe that way; I belong to the other party and I want to contribute to the other party", he would say. "Remember, you have about 500 rules to go by here, and you are always violating these rules. Of course, you think they are very minor and insignificant, but at the same time I can charge you with violating them and bring you up before the board, and you may lose your license. Maybe you had better speak to So-and-So over in your district about it before you make up your mind." The So-and-So referred to is the political leader of the political party.

When Mr. So-and-So comes around, he invariably gets a contribution. You build up all kinds of rackets like this. The people who are in charge of the work and the inspectors have unlimited power over the workers, managers, and operators. It is like anything else where laws or rules and regulations require lots of things, violations can always be found. If we need health laws to protect the people who patronize this business we should enact them, but no board should be permitted to restrict the number in this business.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. QUINN. The gentleman cited an instance in Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I cited that instance. The gentleman is from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUINN. There is such an act in the State of Texas. Would this practice be adaptable to use there?

Mr. PATMAN. It all depends on whether you have angels or devils administering these laws. You do not always get good people to administer them, and you give such persons plenty of power. Of course, if you have good people all the time, possibly it will be all right, but sometimes, regardless of the party in power, you will have a person who is not so honest.

Mr. QUINN. That is the human element.

Mr. PATMAN. That is the human element. Should we place in the hands of even a few dishonest people the great power which is lodged in such a bill as this? The gentleman's bill will fix it so no one can come here from the outside and engage in beauty-culture work or even become a manicurist. I believe the gentleman is honest and sincere, but I believe the gentleman will admit the object of this bill is to keep the outsiders out and arrange it so that there will be only one or two or three schools here, which will train these people. There are provisions in the bill requiring people who wish to engage in this occupation to go to a certain school in the District of Columbia and to be trained by people here in the District. Also they have to be residents of the District of Columbia.

My theory has always been that this is a Federal city, that people from all over the country have a right to come to Washington and practice law if they want to, or do anything else they want to, so long as they comply with reasonable rules and regulations relating to the real professions. I know and the gentleman knows that the lawyers are trying to get just such a bill as this through to keep out the outside lawyers. Will not the gentleman admit they are urging his committee to pass such a bill right now, which would prevent outside lawyers from coming into the District of Columbia to practice law?

Mr. QUINN. No.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman will not admit that?

Mr. QUINN. No.

Mr. PATMAN. I was on this committee, and I will admit it, because I know it is true. They were always after the members of the committee to do that.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. QUINN. I want to answer in regard to that.

Mr. PATMAN. Do not answer; just ask me a question. The gentleman can speak later.

Mr. QUINN. The gentleman admits the District of Columbia is now a dumping ground for operators of beauty parlors who are unable to qualify in other and neighboring States?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is trying to keep them from being operators. The gentleman has it fixed so a manicurist will have to have a license. What is there about manicuring nails so difficult one would have to go to school in the District of Columbia in order to get a license to manicure nails?

Mr. QUINN. The same thing is true in other States.

Mr. PATMAN. That is no justification. Two wrongs do not make a right. This is a Federal city. We are going to have serious trouble right here before long if we do not take a different attitude toward this Federal city of ours.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I just want to call to the attention of the gentleman the fact we had up in the last Congress a bill to give the local lawyers a monopoly of the business here.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; and the gentleman had never heard of it.

Mr. McFARLANE. We killed it on this floor.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

I may say that I have never heard of as many rackets or would-be rackets in any city of the world as there are right here in Washington, D. C. They are always trying to get a fresh hold on the throats of the people who come to the District. We have had all kinds of rent trouble. The taxicab men one time brought in a bill claiming they wanted insurance. It was not for that purpose, and I knew it was not. No one claimed it was for insurance. It was to restrict the number of cabs so as to permit a few people to get control of the cab business in Washington. They will bring in a bill in one way or another, then after it is passed a board will have a right to administer the law, and the members of the board will do what they originally intended. These people expected to cut down the number of cabs and double the taxicab rate.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know anything about any bill that was ever brought in here providing for liability insurance for all automobiles, the purpose of which was to limit the number, but on several occasions I have offered an amendment to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and I may assure the gentleman that my only interest in offering such an amendment was that if anyone were hurt in the District of Columbia he or she would have somewhere to go to be reimbursed for personal injury or property damage. All automobiles should be required to carry liability insurance.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not object to real insurance because that is all right, but insurance is quite different from what they want, I will say to my good friend from Missouri. They want a law that will restrict the number of taxicabs, and watch all these bills that come to this District of Columbia Committee, and you will find several Negroes in the woodpile in practically every one of them where they restrict the number of people who can engage in any particular work here in the District.

I think, really, this should be a Federal city. Personally, I should like to see a certain part of the District set aside, for instance, with sufficient area to take in the Library of Congress, the Capitol, the House Office Buildings, and the buildings on Constitution Avenue, as well as other Government buildings, which would constitute a small area, and in this area not permit anyone to live, and then turn the rest of it back to Maryland. Then the people now in the District will be permitted to vote, they will be permitted to have their own city and elect their own officers, and we will have a real Federal City here in charge of Federal officers. If we were to have serious trouble here in Washington, we do not know whether we would have police protection or not. We have as a Congress in many ways lost control of Washington, D. C. It is in different hands. Possibly we would have protection, or possibly we would not. We should go back and make a real Federal City out of this area and stop a few racketeers from getting a monopoly on every business and trade.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PALMISANO. The gentleman spoke about taxicabs. I presume the gentleman knows there are more taxicabs in the District of Columbia than in any other city in the Union?

Mr. PATMAN. That is right. We need more of them here. That is the only thing that is cheap, but if you restrict them——

Mr. PALMISANO. Does not the gentleman realize——

Mr. PATMAN. If you permit them to have control of taxicabs like they have of rents, we will pay taxi fares here that will be in proportion to rents.

Mr. PALMISANO. Does the gentleman favor having taxicab drivers work 18 hours a day?

Mr. PATMAN. No; that is a different question entirely. We are not talking about hours and wages.

Mr. PALMISANO. They are compelled to do that now in order to make a living.

Mr. PATMAN. That is what any monopolist would tell you. He would tell you that in order to get you to vote for such a bill, and in that way he would get control of and a monopoly on the business. That is a good argument for anyone who does not look all the way down the line.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman support a bill limiting the hours of taxicab drivers to 10 hours a day?

Mr. PATMAN. Bring in such a bill and I will be very pleased to consider it, and if I can consistently do so I will be glad to support it, as I am for good wages; but I think every bill should be voted on on its own merits, and we have a bill before us now to make professional people out of beauty culturists and manicurists. The question is, Do we want to go that far? Do we want to set up a board here that will have such unlimited power?

Mr. QUINN. My recollection is that $2 is the fee for a temporary license.

Mr. PATMAN. What would be the fee for a continuance of the license and how much of a fee would a school have to pay?

Mr. QUINN. The fees are very reasonable and they are much lower than in other States and cities.

Mr. PATMAN. It is just the case of a camel getting his nose under the tent. It is just getting started, and this is to keep the outsiders out and the insiders in and keep a few people in the business.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. QUINN. The gentleman does not believe there is any Ethiopian in the lumber yard of this bill, does he?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, it is the same type of bill that has been brought in here for a long time, and I have always found several Ethiopians in every one of them.

Mr. QUINN. The gentleman will admit that it is necessary to place some safeguard around a business of this sort for the benefit of health and sanitation, because the operators of beauty parlors come into intimate and personal contact with the people.

Mr. PATMAN. Where it is a business which should be recognized as a profession, like law or medicine, it is all right; but should we bring in all these other different lines of business and trade and treat them the same as the professions? If we do that, we will soon have all business in this country in a strait jacket so that people will find it very difficult to change from one line of employment to another. If we need laws to protect the health of the people, let us enact them.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. In reading this bill, it seems to me it would require any maid or any hired help who is looking after anyone's children to be a licensed cosmetologist before they could comb their hair or give them a bath or administer any of the thousand things they may have to do for the children. [Laughter.]

An ordinary nurse in a hospital would also have to be a licensed cosmetologist before she could take care of any of the patients in a hospital.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not care to go into detail, but I invite your attention to page 2 of the bill and ask you to read the definitions on that page and see for yourself just how far this measure goes.

If you believe in this type of legislation, this is a good time for you to make a start, but it is a type of legislation in which I do not believe.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not yield.

Mr. Chairman, after you pass this bill, if you do pass it, the next will be the real-estate bill, and next any other kind of business where you can conceive of how a few people can get control of it through a board. I ask you to take this bill and read the definitions, read the power of this board of three persons to be appointed by the District Commissioners.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. PALMISANO. Has the gentleman ever voted for a board in the District of Columbia?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; probably so; but not like this, not to carry out business like this board is to carry out.

Mr. PALMISANO. The gentleman has voted for a board and given that board large powers?

Mr. PATMAN. It is not just a board. This board is set up to protect these people against competition. That is the object of it, and it will protect them against competition, and for that the board will collect from these people who receive the benefits. The people who receive the benefits will be glad to pay, because they are receiving more in return for it. They are keeping competitors out; they are keeping outsiders from coming in here and entering into business. They will prevent students and others from engaging in this business even to a limited extent. They would have to come here and have to go to a school. What are the powers and duties of the board? The board would fix the eligible requirements for examination, how old these applicants must be, and that they must go to a certain school, and that they must go there for a certain length of time. Read the requirements in respect to the school and about the certificates. Then there is the matter of practical experience, and the examinations and the fees; and then, after you have read this bill, if you believe it is a fine thing to do, to leave the matter to a board of three in the District to say who can manicure nails and then who can sell real estate, and do all of these other things, vote for the bill, because that will be a long step in that direction. Then before it is over you will find that some of your lawyers from your districts are coming here and are debarred from practicing law. They will have to employ a lawyer in the District in order to get their cases properly considered.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. QUINN. I want to correct the gentleman when he says it is necessary for the operator from some other State to come here and go to school.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; unless the board grants a special dispensation.

Mr. QUINN. A license.

Mr. PATMAN. Will they grant a special dispensation?

Mr. QUINN. Not necessarily a special dispensation; it is a license. If an operator from Texas, which has a similar law, comes in here——

Mr. PATMAN. It will be left to the board.

Mr. QUINN. Just the same as they do in Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I am not against this bill because it applies to these particular people. I am against this type of legislation.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. SOUTH. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that a license, where trades and professions are involved, should be granted when the public interest requires it, and not when the person applying for the license needs it for his own protection?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; where there is a public demand by reason of an evil existing. No evil has been shown to exist in the district necessitating the passage of this bill. The evil is the harm done by the competitors, the student, the part-time operators. They feel that the students who engage in this are unfair competitors, and they want to fix it so that they will have to go to a regular school.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN rose.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, I want to ask him to yield to me at some time in the course of his remarks.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall be glad to yield later on.

I think history records that once upon a time a Minister of Finance in France was asked by the King as to what the problem of taxation was. His answer to the king was that "the problem of taxation is to pluck the goose so that the goose won't squawk." We had an example of that last Friday in the enactment of nuisance taxation, which in my own humble opinion, is a tax abomination, because it is taxation by misrepresentation. I have kept that thing in mind in wrestling with the problem of taxation for the District of Columbia.

I believe it is necessary to present to this committee a perspective picture of what has happened so that you can appreciate the present fiscal difficulty of the District. The District of Columbia subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which appropriates every dime that can be expended in the District of Columbia, brought a bill into this House some months ago, which was enacted and went to the Senate, and is probably now in conference.

As a result of that appropriation bill there was a deficit of approximately $6,100,000 in the District fund. There is a reason for that deficit that goes back several years. There was a time when they had an unexpended balance of $18,000,000 in the Treasury. That balance has shuttled up and down. There was a time back in 1929 when they had surplus revenues of $9,000,000 for a single year. Those revenues and those balances for the most part have disappeared, with the result that when the District of Columbia appropriation bill came in this year there was a deficit of $11,100,000. The Appropriations Committee then proposed that $5,000,000 in a lump sum be given to the District so that the deficit was reduced to $6,100,000. When that appropriation bill passed the House, it became incumbent upon the House District of Columbia Committee to devise ways and means of raising the necessary revenue, namely, $6,100,000, to offset that deficit. The chairwoman of the District of Columbia Committee [Mrs. NORTON] appointed two subcommittees to examine into these problems. At a subsequent time those subcommittees were consolidated into one committee under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY]. Today I wish to pay testimony to that gentleman, who, in addition to all his responsibilities as subcommittee chairman, is also chairman of the Claims Committee of the House. There are 2,500 private claims pending in his committee today. He has to reach down in his pocket and out of his own money hire extra help so that he can discharge the responsibilities of the Claims Committee as they should be discharged.

But notwithstanding all that, that gentleman has given generously and freely of his time, along with the other members of that subcommittee, for the purpose of working out what we thought was an acceptable and agreeable tax bill. The Commissioners came and sat with us day after day. The corporation counsel and the assistant corporation counsel, together with the other officials of the District, counselled with us daily. Together we wrestled with this problem of taxes.

There were some forms of taxes that were, in a sense, noncontroversial. For instance, the Commissioners suggested to the committee that we should raise some money from automobiles. Heretofore, and even now, you could obtain a license tag for your automobile for $1. It makes no difference whether it is a 600-pound pleasure car or a 16,000-pound truck, it cost exactly $1. The average license rate in the 48 States on pleasure cars is $8.72. The average for all cars, including busses and trucks, in the 48 States, is about $12.35. Thus we thought we might raise $1,500,000 by raising the tax on vehicles in the form of a weight tax, beginning with $5 and going up to $12 for passenger cars; starting with $12 on trucks and going up to $150. That was a noncontroversial tax. It is one of the titles in the bill that was so summarily disposed of in this House this afternoon without a hearing.

Another noncontroversial item was the inheritance and estate tax. With the exception of Nevada, every State in the United States has an inheritance tax or an estate tax, or both. There was paid into the Federal Treasury by the District of Columbia, as the result of the Federal estate tax in 1935, about $2,000,000.

In 1936 it was about a million and three-quarters dollars. We felt that in view of the fact that other States had that kind of taxation we should with propriety enact it in the District of Columbia. There is a title in this bill providing for an inheritance tax and for the recapture of 80 percent of the Federal estate tax under the law of 1932, precisely as is done by virtually all of the States in the Union.

Still another item that was noncontroversial was a proposed tax upon the net premiums paid to life insurance, fire insurance, and other kinds of insurance companies in the District of Columbia. At the present time the rate is 1½ percent of the net premium. There are 21 States in the Union that have a premium tax of 2 percent; 19 that have a premium tax of more than 2 percent; we therefore raised that tax from 1½ to 2 percent in the hope of raising approximately $220,000. The singular fact is that the underwriters and others representing insurance companies came before the committee and agreed that that was a proper tax, and they had no objection to it. That tax, wholly noncontroversial, is covered by one of the titles in the bill that came to such a premature demise today.

There were some taxes suggested that were controversial. For instance, the Commissioners suggested to us that we raise the gas tax from 2 to 3 cents. There is a reason why we could not very well embrace that. In the first place, the District of Columbia is entitled to share in the road funds that are appropriated by the Congress of the United States, provided they do not divert their gas-tax revenue. Some question arose as to whether there was a diversion of the gas-tax fund, with the result that we placed a title in this bill, lumping all these sums that are derived from motorists to obviate all charges of diversion, and found the fund would suffice for the purpose of taking care of street improvements, construction, and other proper items. There was therefore no justification for raising the gas tax from 2 to 3 cents.

That proposal was then laid upon the table. There were other proposals, such as a sales tax, a 2-percent tax on all retail sales, with the exception of crude-food items—those things that you buy in the raw in the grocery stores. Nothing else was exempt outside of staple food. I may say that I am personally opposed to a sales tax, and I always have been opposed to it, because I think it violates one of the essentials of taxation, namely, the principle of capacity to pay. It seems to me, if we are ever going to get out of the welter of taxation, if we are ever going to get away from the taxation hodgepodge that exists in the Federal Government and in the State jurisdictions as well, we will have to recast our tax structure, both State and National. Sooner or later we must predicate a law on the particular ground that taxes ought to be paid in proportion of ability to pay.

The other items of taxation in this bill included a gross privilege tax and an income tax. I have read a lot of newspaper accounts and I have heard a lot of comment of one kind or another. I want to say to the Members this afternoon that we can defend this whole program upon the floor if we had the opportunity, and if summary and biased judgment had not been manifested by the House.

The program embraced in this tax bill is founded upon scientific taxing principles. Let me say that there is an association in this country known as the National Tax Policy League. They have laid out a model tax program for State and local purposes, and in that program is included first a property tax on real, personal, and intangible. This we have at the present time. They include next a gasoline and vehicle tax. This we have or it is proposed. They include an inheritance and estate tax, which we proposed in this bill; then a gross privilege tax, such as obtains in West Virginia and New York, and which is proposed in this bill; and finally a personal and corporate income tax, which is also proposed in this bill.

Now, it seems that the Members of the House were shying away from the idea that they might be included within the provisions of the income tax. Speaking only for myself, not seeking to commit anybody to the principle, I believe that that tax is justified.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I want to make this short statement at this time and thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I know that since the 17th of March the special subcommittee, under the leadership of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and others, have given to this subject of taxation in the District of Columbia every proper and sincere consideration. I believe that this afternoon the House was ill-advised in its action in not allowing consideration on the measure. I like the gentleman's statement; I agree with him in most of his remarks, although there are items in that bill with which I was not in agreement and would have fought on the floor. The House should have, in my opinion, amended and refined the bill on the floor of this body.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman very much for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to the Members that whether they realize it or not, in 31 States today there is personal or corporate income tax law on both. I remember when I was a student in college reading Professor Seligman, who at that time, in my judgment, was the outstanding tax authority in this country. Over, and over, and over again he reaffirmed the principle that no matter what the yield might be, every jurisdiction, State and National, ought to have an income tax, because the purpose and the foundation of the income tax is essentially sound and based on ability to pay. So we proposed an income tax here. It does not differ essentially from the provisions set up in the Federal law except that it starts with 1 percent on net incomes of $1,000 and is graduated upward until it reaches a maximum of 5 percent on $50,000 of net income or over. Corporations would pay a flat 5-percent tax.

The crux of this matter therefore seems to be whether Members of Congress were included. Let me say to the members of the committee that possibly they were not aware of the fact that almost this identical measure passed the House of Representatives on the 16th of December 1931. The provision on page 69 of the instant bill providing for a tax on nonresidents based on earnings which accrued in the District of Columbia was carried in that bill. I examined the debates, I examined everything I could find on the earlier bill, which had been introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. That bill passed in 1931 without a dissenting vote; so I wonder why, with that history behind us, we had all the billingsgate and fury this afternoon with respect to this income tax, as if it were an innovation or a novelty. It passed the House and went to the Senate. The Bureau of Efficiency at that time passed upon it and suggested amendments. I suppose it might have gotten through the Senate also had it not been so near the close of the session.

It seems rather singular to me that so very little was said about it at that time but so much is said about it at this time. Speaking for myself, I do not see how you can have an income tax in the District of Columbia that is worthy of the name unless you include Members of Congress and members of the Cabinet, as well as the Federal employees. There are 127,000 Federal employees in the District of Columbia. You know, and I know, that many of them have lived here 20 years and more. They use all of the services that are supplied by this municipality. They have all the rights and privileges, and share in every service that this municipality has to offer; yet they vote back home, they go back home once a year or perhaps once in 2 years, maintain a legal residence. When we come along and suggest that by means of an income tax they ought to pay something like a fair share of the cost of operating this municipality they throw up their hands in horror as if we were proposing a novelty or as if we were proposing to confiscate their property and their earnings.

Those in the lower brackets would not be touched because of the exemptions. Those in the higher brackets would pay their share, and rightly so.

Do you think it is fair for anybody to use all of the facilities of the District for 20 or 30 years and not make proper remuneration to the District for the services they enjoy? We proposed putting all Federal employees under this bill. We proposed putting certain others under the bill, with respect to which I will give you an illustration. A man came to me about 2 weeks ago and said: "I understand you are going to tax the nonresidents." I said: "We are going to do the same as they did with the income taxes in 28 States. We are going to tax that proportion of the earnings of the nonresident that accrues and is earned within the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia." I began to inquire, and I found this man lived in another jurisdiction. He has been in the District for 10 years and has practiced before the departments and made his money here. He lived in a rented establishment. He was bringing up his family here and probably schooled his children in the schools of the District of Columbia. When I suggested, however, that he ought to pay an income tax, oh, he thought that the very earth was going to descend upon him because it was a monstrous kind of a proposition and never heard of before. Yet this same bill practically passed the House in 1931.

How are you going to get these attorneys who practice before the Federal departments and who for all practical purposes live here year in and year out unless you also include Members of Congress? In all justice and in order to avoid captious criticism on the part of the taxpayers of the country, how are you going to include Federal employees in the low-salary brackets unless you also include Members of Congress so far as those earnings that accrue while they are resident in the District of Columbia are concerned? We could not resolve the problem equitably without bringing in everybody, and as a result there is a provision in the bill to that effect. Yet there are some who feel that somehow they should not be taxed.

There is a lot of confusion upon this subject of income taxes. Members do not pay any State income taxes on their salaries today, even if they live in a jurisdiction which has an income tax. You pay a Federal tax, not a State tax, because it has been determined long ago by an unbroken line of court decisions that the State cannot tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government and the Federal Government cannot tax State salaries and functions. I think if we pass an income-tax law, and if we lend ourselves to it sympathetically and tolerantly, we are going to make some progress on behalf of an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] sometime ago. He dropped a resolution in the hopper calling for a constitutional amendment so that each State might tax Federal salaries and the Federal Government might tax State salaries.

Mr. Chairman, are you aware of the fact there are three and a half million employees—State, local, township, and county—who, if net income is large enough, may pay a Federal or State income tax, but not both?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, there are 3,500,000 public employees who may pay one or the other of these taxes, if they come within the brackets, but who do not pay both. Yet the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker, the man in the shoe store, the man behind the grocery counter, the man who is in the office in the various districts back home, if he comes within the income bracket, must pay both a State and Federal tax.

We talk about tax evasion and tax avoidance. This very day we have appointed a joint committee of the House and Senate to investigate.

We might stop right here on this matter of tax avoidance in order to bring these people within the purview of the Federal and State income tax. It seems to me if we unselfishly made a start and paid our $25 or $30 to the District of Columbia for the service we share, as well as the domiciled residents, we might have gone a long way toward equitable taxes and not opened ourselves to the criticism that is bound to follow.

I know of no other way to get momentum behind this thing and give it impetus so that these inequities will be resolved as quickly as they possibly can unless you and I pay our share. I, for one, was willing to come within the purview of that provision in the bill that we brought into the House for consideration, but the House said "no", and that ends it until such time as procedure can be devised to bring it in again.

I stand on that bill from the standpoint of principle. It was resolved on a scientific basis, with the help of organizations that have tax experts among their personnel, such as the Tax Policy League, the National Tax Association, and others, and we have in the main followed the pattern which they laid down. The details could have been ironed out and refined by House action in reading the bill section by section. I think those who opposed consideration have given out to the country today the impression that you are willing to vote for taxes, such as nuisance taxes, so long as they are hidden and invisible, but the minute the tax collector threatens to put his hand into your pocket and make you conscious of the burdens of government you run like a flock of shy and frightened children.

There, in brief, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, is our bill. By way of recapitulation, let me say that it embraces an increase in the tax on insurance premiums, an inheritance tax, an estate tax, a weight tax on motorcars and trucks, a business-privilege tax, and an income tax. It is a forward-looking program. I for one shared the hope that it was a beginning in setting up a tax model that might conceivably be followed in other States of the Union. This program will produce adequate revenue. It is fair, it is elastic to meet the growing needs of the District, and it is based upon sound principles.

But what is most amazing about the strange performance of the House today is that after all the years of wrangling and futile fury over rents and high cost of living and the alleged sponging proclivities of the District, we present an effective tax program under which the residents of the District would be compelled to pay their way and it is turned down.

There is, however, small comfort in your adverse vote today. This House passed the appropriation bill which binds the District on expenditures. This House has undertaken to say how much shall be expended in the Nation's Capital for all purposes and for what items, and now it becomes the responsibility of this House to provide the revenues unless it wishes to reach into the Federal Treasury for a larger contribution. You can shirk your duty, but the tax problem is still there. For my part, I shall want to see this identic bill returned to this House without a single change, for to make changes would be but to yield to expediency. I fancy that this selfsame bill will come back before many days roll by.

There has been some discussion about raising the rate on real estate on the theory that it does not pay its share, and that in other jurisdictions the real-estate tax is much higher than in the District. While the rate is only $1.50 per hundred in the District of Columbia, it is assessed against the full fair cash value of the property, and insofar as home owners are concerned the amount actually paid in taxes does not vary greatly from that paid in other jurisdictions. Quite aside from that, I am opposed to increase in the real-estate tax. As a general thing, taxes on real property in the United States are much higher than in any other nation that has come to my attention.

In the District of Columbia, real estate for a 10-year average has produced about 84 percent of the gross revenues. Little by little it becomes onerous and burdensome to the point where home building and home owning is discouraged. The tendency today is to attempt to limit the tax on real estate to 1 percent. Efforts are being made now to effect such a limitation and I for one feel that it is a step in the right direction because it produces an incentive for home owning and home building.

I have listened to all the arguments pro and con for this kind and that kind of a tax; I have listened to a multitude of alternative proposals, and when all is said and done, I still feel that we have produced a tax pattern that is sound and from which I do not care to recede.

I cannot conclude without saying that the fabrication of this bill and the interchange of thought and opinion with the officials of the District, with witnesses before the committee and with fellow members of the committee has been an enriching experience. It afforded an opportunity to make an examination into the merits and demerits of many kinds of tax proposals, it was instructive, even though laborious, and whether it is accepted or rejected by this House, I for one am the richer for the information and experience gained which I can devote to the welfare of the folks in my district in Illinois whom I represent.

Mr. Chairman, I stand on this bill because I think it is a good bill. My colleagues on the subcommittee have rendered yeoman service when they brought this kind of a bill in here for the consideration of the Members of the House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the fervent speech made by my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, in which he has rather heroically declared he is willing to submit to a District income tax. As one Member of this House I am not willing to submit to it in addition to Federal and State income taxes, and I see no reason why Members of Congress should not frankly state their position, regardless of any criticism they may receive from the newspapers in the District.

Members of Congress already pay a heavy Federal tax, about which many people do not know. We are willing to pay income taxes to our home States. We are not allowed to deduct from our tax returns the heavy expenditures that we are compelled to incur during election year. A large part of the salary of the Members of Congress, as every Member of this House will bear witness, is consumed in the effort to be reelected, and in addition to that Members of the House have innumerable items of expense that the average man does not have to pay. We have to pay our local and State taxes, and I am perfectly willing to pay a State income tax.

Members of Congress are compelled to maintain establishments in their home towns, and then, when they come to the District of Columbia, are compelled to pay enormous rents for the privilege of living here to discharge their official business. Therefore, as one Member of the House, I do not hesitate to say it is not right and is not just to impose an income tax for the support of the District Government on Congressmen in view of all the other expenditures and taxes Members of Congress must pay.

No one in the House objects to a reasonable and fair tax bill. It seems to me from my observation in the District that the residents of this city who own property escape a great deal of taxation. I know in my own home town taxes are three or four times as high as they are in the District of Columbia. For a long time I have been in favor of a graduated land tax. I have been in favor and am still in favor of exempting small homes and small farms from all taxation. We know a large percentage of our citizenship in the United States have become tenants. We are now confronted with the great problem of tenancy, which is steadily growing worse. In some sections of the country 65 percent of the farmers are tenants, and in many cities of this country tenants are in the majority. We know that the Federal Government cannot finance a program adequate to place all these people in their own homes or on their own farms. If we want to give the District of Columbia an adequate and fair tax bill, why not exempt owners of small homes up to a value of $4,000, $5,000, or $6,000, and then place a graduated land tax upon those who own magnificent homes and huge apartments from which they derive enormous profits? In doing this we shall be establishing a precedent for the entire country, for when we enact a tax bill for the District it represents our idea of taxation. My idea of taxation is and has been for a long time that we should encourage the ownership of homes and farms on the part of a majority of our people. The only way this can be accomplished is by exempting the small homes and farms from taxation, and then imposing a graduated land tax to break up the ownership by a few of millions of acres of land and of huge city properties.

We talk about the concentration of wealth into the hands of a few, yet by some of our policies we aggravate this condition instead of mitigating it. When this Republic was established, our fathers sought to establish a political democracy. It was their idea that in order to preserve freedom and independence equality of opportunity must be preserved at all hazards and at all times. In the course of years, however, there has grown up in the United States an economic feudalism within the framework of a political democracy. We have political institutions based primarily upon the laws of competition, but under these political institutions and existing side by side with them we have seen develop through the course of years an economic feudalism steadily increasing in power and influence, until today there are in the United States gigantic monopolies and corporate interests spreading from coast to coast, until it is said by many people that opportunity no longer exists in this land of freedom.

This condition cannot be corrected by some of the enormous expenditures of money we vote out of the Federal Treasury, millions and millions of dollars. Who derives the greatest benefit from some of this expenditure? Certainly not the man or the woman for whom it is intended. There is a veritable army of parasites, men who subsist without physical toil, who exact their toll, until finally, when the money reaches the hands of those for whom it was intended, there is very little left.

Therefore I maintain, Mr. Chairman—and I say it in all seriousness—that this country cannot survive half competitive and half monopolistic. This country is not in a position constitutionally to deal with economic feudalism unless we prohibit its existence. We have vainly sought to recognize the legal status of these gigantic corporate enterprises and then to regulate their existence.

However, we know, and every man who has dealt with the question knows, that by their tremendous wealth and shrewd manipulation some of them are able to evade the letter and the spirit of the law. We talk about taxing them, and we undertake to bring about decentralization of wealth through gift and inheritance taxes, through income taxes, and through various other devices, but at the same time, Mr. Chairman, we permit them an avenue of escape through tax-exempt bonds. We say, "We will increase your income taxes, we will increase your corporate taxes", but the men who possess immense wealth know they can buy Government bonds and then retire to Florida or to California and spend the remainder of their lives in ease, with the taxpayers of the United States paying the bill.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, until we get at the root of our economic trouble and courageously face the facts, we cannot cure this great national disease. We cannot cure it by palliatives, by undertaking to rub salve and ointment on it. We cannot cure it by administering drugs and opiates, by the expenditure of vast sums of money, which only tend to demoralize those who receive it. We must go to the very source of the disease and apply courageously and intelligently the remedies necessary to effectuate a cure.

One of the great curses in my country and in yours is the fact there has been a trend for a half century toward the ownership of land in the hands of a few. In my own congressional district a few great corporations own millions of acres of land, and this is true in other congressional districts, while there are millions of our people, who, today, have no roof above them, no home to call their own, and yet we expect, Mr. Chairman, to resist and prevent radicalism. I say to you that the very first thing we must do in this country is to encourage people to live on their own land, in their own homes; and I would like to see a tax bill written for the District of Columbia that would represent a model tax bill for the other States and cities of this Union.

I would like to see the small home owner in the District and in every State of the Union enjoy his home and the protection of his home, free from taxation, and I would impose a graduated tax upon those who own thousands and millions of acres of land, those who own great apartment houses, and in this way make up the deficiency and get whatever taxes are needed to administer the affairs of the District.

Not only would I do this, but let me suggest to the Committee that you increase your gift and inheritance taxes in this bill. You have imposed a nominal tax in the bill. Why not bring in a tax bill that will represent a real honest attempt to decentralize the wealth not only in the District of Columbia but which will represent the attitude of the Congress of the United States toward the Nation at large. The only way you can bring about this decentralization about which we have talked so much is through gift and inheritance taxes. All other taxes, with the possible exception of income taxes in competitive industries, are passed on to the ultimate consumer. You cannot decentralize gigantic concentrations of wealth in this country by imposing corporate taxes. You cannot do it by many of the methods we are using. The ultimate result is that the one against whom the tax is levied passes it on to the consumer.

Therefore, there is a magnificent opportunity for this committee to bring in a tax bill that will affect those who own these large apartment houses and hotels. Many of them are nonresidents who come here and invest their money in apartment houses, and every day a new apartment house is being erected in the District because taxes here are comparatively cheap, regardless of what anyone may tell you. They may undertake to cite figures to show this or that, but any man who owns property in his own State and who has had occasion to observe the tax rate in the District and the valuations, knows that in the District the tax is considerably less, while the rent is tremendously high.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to make an observation?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Does the gentleman know that in the city of Washington with rents as high as they are, the tax rate is only $1.50, which is more than a dollar lower than the tax rate in any other comparable city?

Mr. DIES. Of course, that is true.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Let me first answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

That is absolutely true, and there is not any justification for the imposition of nuisance taxes when you permit the monopolists who own the apartment racket in Washington to escape just and reasonable taxation. Therefore I would like to see this committee bring in a bill that will exempt the small homes here, so that the little Government worker and those who want to own a home may be encouraged to do so, and then you can put on a graduated land tax that will get taxes from the pockets of these people who are making greater returns through enormous rents than people in any other place in the United States. You know they are doing this, and what is the use of arguing about it. Compare what you pay for an apartment in Washington with what you pay for one in your home town or in any city in your district, and you must admit the truth of my statement. I know colleagues of mine who are renting two rooms for $125 or $150 a month. This is absolutely ridiculous, and, of course, as long as they can get by on a low tax valuation and a low tax rate and agitate for some other form of taxation, they are going to do it, for it increases the profits they make.

I believe if the District Committee will come in with a bill that seeks to accomplish the purposes I have outlined, first, to encourage the little man to own his own home in the District and then place a comparable tax upon the owners of apartments and big hotels who are not at all conscientious when it comes to charging rents——

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHORT. Of course, I believe, as I think all the Members of Congress believe, that the Federal Government should make a reasonable and fair contribution toward the cost of government in the District of Columbia——

Mr. DIES. That is right.

Mr. SHORT. But it should not be overlooked or forgotten that at the present time the people in the District of Columbia pay no income tax, they pay no gift tax, they pay no inheritance tax, they pay no estate tax, they pay no sales tax, they pay no county tax, they pay no State tax, they pay a tax of only 2 cents a gallon on gasoline, whereas in other cities in different States of the Union they pay from 4 to 7 cents per gallon, and they pay here only $1 a year for registration of their automobile, whether it be a $10,000 limousine or a Ford or Chevrolet——

Mr. DIES. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SHORT. And they pay only $2.67 in taxes on cars of the value of the Packard.

Mr. DIES. I appreciate the gentleman's observation very much. I might say that I have no objection whatever to equalizing the gasoline tax, to make it the same in the District as the average in other States. I certainly believe that the license on vehicles should be increased, to be comparable with the charge in the States, but the point I am trying to stress is this: Why permit the owners of these great apartment houses and magnificent homes to escape any increase in taxation, when you propose to place this tax upon the rank and file of the citizens of the District?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. To say this, if the gentleman will permit. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] has pointed out all of this lack of taxes being levied in the District, and the cheapness of taxes. That is correct, and this bill which we brought here this morning for consideration is the first bill that has been brought on the floor of the House since I have been a Member of the House that would have required the citizens of the District of Columbia to pay these taxes.

Mr. DIES. Why did the gentleman leave out any increase in the gasoline tax?

Mr. NICHOLS. First, because the Federal Government, in the Hayden-Cartwright Act, has said that it will not give Federal aid to any jurisdiction which converts gasoline tax funds. Under the amount of money to be expended by the District of Columbia on streets and highways and highway improvements and construction, it is not possible for the District of Columbia to use more than 2 cents without converting those funds, and if they do that, then the District of Columbia will lose about seven or eight hundred thousand dollars a year from Federal aid.

Mr. SHORT. That is quite true, because at the present time there is a surplus in that fund.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. SACKS. In answer to the gentleman I say that the Cartwright bill would not affect this in any way, that the original 2 cents which would go to the maintenance of roads and highway construction in Washington is enough to take care of it, and the additional 2 cents, as we wrote it into the act that it was to go into the general fund, would not be affected by the Cartwright Act at all.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, that would be a conversion.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I think the gentleman agrees with me that the District of Columbia is the tax-dodgers' paradise, that people come here from all over this country to dodge all sorts of taxes, and that there has never been any civic pride in the residents of the District to contribute to anything. I have never seen them contribute to bringing one convention here. The people just come here to avoid income taxes. Unfortunately this morning the vote went off on the theory that Congressmen's salaries are taxed in the bill. Of course, the bill did not apply to that and could not apply. Will the gentleman agree on that?

Mr. DIES. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman tell me how it could apply?

Mr. DIES. There are members of the committee who say that it does apply.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have not heard that.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] just made an argument that it did and should apply.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman attempt to justify the position taken by the residents of the District of Columbia? I am talking about the people who come here and make a permanent residence, never go back home to vote, do not pay any taxes back home, who live under the lowest tax rate in America and who do not contribute to their city, who contribute nothing to the beautification of the city, who do not ever build anything in the city. Why, even the Boy Scouts' jamboree, which will bring millions of dollars to the District of Columbia, is being financed by the Federal Government. With such a convention in any other city the merchants in that city would raise hundreds of thousands of dollars to bring that convention there. These merchants of the District of Columbia and the residents and property owners will never contribute one cent for the benefit of the District, but will continue to be leeches on the Federal Government, for which my people back home have to pay.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, but the people here have to put up with Congressmen living here.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows that there is no disposition on the part of any Members of this House to permit such a condition as he has described to continue.

Getting down to the bill which is under consideration, as I said, Mr. Chairman, we have in this country two classes of people, those who are subject to the laws of competition, the farmers, the little merchants, those who have not been shrewd enough to avoid the laws of competition and who are compelled to produce and sell on an open market. Then we have another class in the United States, those who have freed themselves from the laws of competition by all manner of corporate devices. One of the strangest things in our economic history is the origin of corporations. They did not exist to any extent at all prior to the War between the States. After the War between the States, when the fourteenth amendment was placed in the Constitution for the purpose of protecting the Negroes from enforced slavery, the Supreme Court of the United States interpreted that provision to mean corporations, so that we have had a situation in the United States for half a century under which two or three men can go into the State of Delaware, which is smaller than my congressional district, and secure a corporation charter.

They are able to escape personal liability by reason of that transaction. They are able to perpetuate their business for a hundred years or sometimes hundreds of years. They are able to protect themselves even as a person or citizen of the United States can protect himself. Then having been created under the laws of the State of Delaware, that corporation is able to go into the great State of Texas and when we undertake to properly regulate them we are told that under the Constitution we can do nothing to abridge the immunities and privileges given that corporation in the State of Delaware.

So, by all of these fictions, by all of these schemes and devices, we have built up in the United States a class that is not subject to the laws of competition, and we have a nation half competitive, or competitive as to the many and monopolistic as to the few.

I know that our objectives in the past 4 years have been most laudable; that we have sincerely sought to decentralize wealth in the United States and to bring about a restoration of equality of opportunity, which is the foundation upon which our Government was erected; but I sometimes inquire whether or not the ultimate effect of some of our measures is not to strengthen monopoly instead of decentralizing it. I sometimes wonder whether or not the process of wealth concentration is not steadily moving forward in the United States. Some day we must reckon with this great political truth, that either we must make our economic system conform to our political system or we are going to be compelled to make our political system conform to the economic system. That, to my mind, is the greatest question which the American people must answer, and in my judgment they must answer that question soon.

Now, this bill under consideration is another attempt to bring about a monopolistic condition, an attempt to restrict a class of people who ought to have a right to engage in their occupation without unreasonable interference and molestation; without having to go to some board and beg consent, or conform to a number of rules and regulations; people who are engaged in a very simple business, the business of manicurist or beauty-parlor worker, dyeing hair and cleaning hair. Of course, no one opposes any reasonable sanitary regulation in the interest of public health.

This is the trend of the times. Steadily, day by day, we are throwing one restriction after another around the independence and freedom of the American people. What does it lead to? It leads to fascism in the United States, for when men are compelled to constantly comply with innumerable rules and regulations of some board, when they are compelled to watch every step and every move for the mere right, a right which our fathers fought and died for, to engage in business without being continually hamstrung by the Government or by boards or by bureaus, they become discontented. We all know perfectly well what the tendency of it is. When a board is established, if that board were dominated by politics, or if the members of the same occupation were members of that board and they wanted to keep out their competitors, what do they do? They continue to narrow the field of competition.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIES. I yield for a question.

Mr. QUINN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if the objections which the gentleman states prevail in the great State of Texas where you have a similar bill?

Mr. DIES. Well, we have some pretty bad things in Texas. We have many situations in Texas that I do not approve of, and if I had my way I would change them. So I would not want to hold up some of the actions of some of the legislators in Texas as a model for this Congress. But I will say that Texas passed a public-health bill, not a monopolistic bill such as this.

Mr. QUINN. The bill passed last year and it was admitted that the act was very satisfactory in the gentleman's State of Texas.

Mr. DIES. The bill passed by Texas might be satisfactory to the Legislature of the State of Texas and still this bill would not be satisfactory to me, because I believe that in some business, like manicuring or dyeing hair, they ought to have an inherent, inalienable right to engage in that without having to go to some board upon which sit their competitors whose only purpose is not to bring about sanitary conditions, not to prevent infection, but to narrow the field of competition so that their returns will be greater. [Applause.]

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I do not want to break the gentleman's trend of thought, but it has been said during this discussion, by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] that the Federal Government was paying the expenses of the Boy Scout jamboree in Washington.

I am afraid the statement of the gentleman is liable to be misconstrued. I agree with his statement that the District of Columbia does not make a just and adequate contribution to the Federal Treasury or to civic enterprises, but I think in justice to the Boy Scouts of America that it ought to be said that the Federal Government is not paying their expenses in connection with the jamboree that is to be held in Washington. The Federal Government is not paying the expenses of the Scouts in coming to Washington. It is not paying the expenses of the Scouts while in Washington. There are about 30,000 Scouts expected in Washington during the jamboree. Some of the finest boys in the world from all over the United States and several foreign countries will be here. It will cost the Scouts and their friends much money to come to Washington and it will cost the Scouts about $800,000 to be maintained in Washington during the jamboree. It is not costing the Federal Government anything.

It is true that the Government is furnishing the Scouts with certain camping equipment, such as tents, and so forth, but the Scouts pay for the delivery of this equipment and its return after the jamboree to the Government, paying for any necessary repairs to the equipment used. A few C. C. C. boys are helping install the camps, but all carpenter, plumbing, and general work is being paid for by the Scouts. I think the Boy Scout movement is a wonderful movement and I am sure the gentleman from New York is of the same opinion, and in his statement he was thinking principally of the selfishness of certain Washington people who want all the privileges of the Capital City without assuming the responsibilities that are customarily assumed in public and civic matters by the citizens of other localities. I make these statements with reference to the Scouts because not long ago I heard Mr. James E. West, chief executive of the Boy Scouts of America, praise the independence of the Boy Scouts, who were sponsoring in Washington such a great meeting without asking the Federal Government or the city of Washington for a penny. Here is a lesson in self-reliance by the Boy Scouts that is worthy of the commendation of Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, I did not say that the Federal Government was paying the expenses of the Boy Scouts to come to Washington, but I would like to know who is erecting all these tents, and so forth, on Government property, in Potomac Park, and so forth?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. It is my understanding that the Boy Scouts are doing it and paying for it, but the property belongs to the Government.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, when they came here before, we made a direct appropriation, but the Federal Government put up all these quarters and the District of Columbia is not providing one cent. Any other city in America would raise a fund contributed to by the merchants of at least $300,000 to get that show there.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I agree with the gentleman, but they have only been lent Government property.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Those are Government tents on Government property and are being put up for the Boy Scouts. The point I make is that the District of Columbia gets all these conventions and has all these millions spent here but the merchants here do not spend one cent to induce them to come here.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I think these gentlemen have had sufficient opportunity to air their views.

Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make is that if this trend keeps up in the United States we are going to find ourselves in the same situation that Germany or Italy is in. There are some people, of course, who like restriction, regulation, and regimentation; but the American people do not like it when it becomes unreasonable. It was for the reason that our people abhorred the eternal interference and meddling on the part of some governmental agency that they braved the dangers of the wilderness and established this great Republic.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is not opposed to regulatory measures for health, is he?

Mr. DIES. Oh, in the name of health what great evils are committed. [Applause.] I may say to the gentleman that when I was a boy I lived on a farm in Hunt County, SAM RAYBURN'S district, and we had a dairy farm. They did not have so many regulations or rules. Well, the milk was just as pure—of course once in a while the old cow's tail got in the milk but no one knew any difference, and everybody drank the milk. It was rich milk and there was no complaint, but now they want so many rules and regulations about selling milk that the farmer cannot go to town and sell his milk no matter how clean it is. Of course, we all favor reasonable regulations to safeguard the health of the people. The whole effect of this governmental trend is to surround the average citizen with innumerable requirements, regulations, and prohibitions. Between being the victim of monopoly in the business world and the Government monopoly we are establishing, the average American citizen finds it is daily growing less and less possible to move in any direction without running afoul of some kind of legal obstacle.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman would not want to do away with the United States Public Health Service, would he?

Mr. DIES. No; I would not want to do away with the splendid Public Health Service, but when we establish some bureau like the Public Health Service, those who work in the bureau, of course, are anxious to expand their operations. They, therefore, begin to agitate for every conceivable plan whereby they can make people healthy whether they want to be healthy or not. [Applause.]

You have a situation in the District of Columbia in which you have a bunch of bureaucrats who are self-perpetuating, self-governing; and these bureaucrats, many of them, are engaged day and night in what business? In one business, and that is trying to expand their functions. They write pamphlets and clutter up my desk with them every morning. No one ever reads them, but that does not keep the bureaucrats from writing pamphlets; and constantly they are finding new means and new schemes and new functions to do what? To superimpose upon our political institution a gigantic bureaucracy, a bureaucracy which will be just as dictatorial, just as destructive of liberty as the Fascist government of Italy or the Nazi government in Germany, for they are all predicated upon the same premise, that of so-called brain—I will not use the phrase "brain trust", for that is misconceived and misinterpreted sometimes [laughter]—but people who feel that they are superior to the legislative body. There they sit in their offices. They do not have to run for reelection; they never have to go back and appease an irate constituency. [Laughter.] As a result they become more and more impressed with their own importance as the days go by, and finally, when a Member of Congress telephones them, they become outraged to think that a Member would humbly solicit their aid in the performance of the duty with which they are entrusted. This illustrates the result of bureaucracy in any country; and I do feel, Mr. Chairman, with all the sincerity in my heart, that we can accomplish the necessary objectives of government, that we can bring about greater privileges for the underprivileged, that we can achieve all of these liberal objectives that we are seeking without pursuing a remedy which sometimes I think may be worse than the disease itself.

This is only an illustration of what we propose to do. When we shall have set up this board, then there is a clamor tomorrow for another board, and another board, until finally, Mr. Chairman, the American citizen when he gets up in the morning will have to telephone some board to find out whether he can comb his hair.

Then he will have to telephone another board to find out whether or not he can wear a blue suit or a white suit. Then he will have to get somebody's permission as to the route he must pursue to go to work, and, finally, when he gets to his job, he will be subject to another set of rules and regulations. Where will there be any liberty left?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I saw last night in the March of Time the desolation which exists in a part of Texas, which has been laid to waste by dust storms. It was shown that the people locally were unable to cope with the problem and it was a governmental agency that had gone down there the past few years and attempted by education and assistance to the people to solve that problem.

Mr. DIES. There is no objection to this fine work. But, on the other hand, I may say to the gentleman that while I have no objection to the Federal Government doing something absolutely necessary which cannot be done by local communities, the gentleman knows as well as I do that some county judges and Governors are constantly beseeching us to get larger appropriations for what purpose? So that they can make a big showing in the next election. This has brought about a spirit of rivalry between various Governors as to which one is going to get the most. One Governor says, "I got $500,000 last year out of the Federal Government that you will not have to pay back." That necessitates the Governor in the adjoining State to undertake to make a big showing, with the result that the Federal Government has embarked upon a great many enterprises, the utility of which may be the subject of some doubt.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. In other words, there is a mad scramble among local politicians throughout the entire United States today to see which one can become the biggest beggar and the biggest thief in robbing the National Treasury?

Mr. DIES. I would not go that far.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Is that limited to any one party?

Mr. DIES. I think the answer is self-evident.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Is the gentleman giving us some of the same philosophy he sometimes gives us in the cloakroom?

Mr. DIES. I do not know how good it is, I may say to the gentleman, but I think the time has come when the Congress of the United States must seriously consider the question as to whether or not we are going to delegate to boards, bureaus, and commissions of all sorts and character the legislative power that the Constitution vested in us. I do not mean by that that some discretionary power should not be vested in boards; but I do say, Mr. Chairman, the trend of this House, as far back as I can remember, and I remember from the days when Woodrow Wilson was President and my father was a Member of the House, year by year is toward an encroachment upon State sovereignty. With one voice we say, "We are for State rights", but by our acts and by our conduct we legislate to further encroach upon the sovereignty of the respective States.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman is making a very excellent speech. Does he not think it is also time that the Congress say outside what they say in the cloakroom so that the people will be advised?

Mr. DIES. If it does, there will be some new faces here.

Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to delay consideration of this bill; but I think the House is entitled to consider the measure very carefully. It involves a principle which, if continued in the United States, will result in a complete Fascist government, a government such as Mussolini proclaimed—everything for the State, nothing outside the State, and nothing against the State. Throughout Europe today the one principle that underlies all the Fascist governments is regimentation, the declaration that the State can do no wrong, that the individual is a servant of the State; and because I want to resist that trend I shall oppose this measure and vote against it.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. The gentleman has made a very wonderful speech, and he always does. The gentleman does not imply by his opposition to this bill that he would necessarily oppose a bill which would really bring about sanitation? The gentleman does not mean to imply he would oppose a good law that would require more sanitation in the barber shops and beauty parlors of the District of Columbia?

Mr. DIES. I do not oppose that; but I do oppose in the guise of sanitation a bill to promote this monopolistic tendency in the United States, a bill which has for its object the shutting of the doors of equal opportunity to the people of our land.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will read the definitions on page 2, he will discover this law will apply to barbers. The barber in pursuing his trade or business in the future will have to become a manicurist or a beauty culturist.

Mr. DIES. In the guise of sanitation and health, the bill gives the board dictatorial powers which are not needed to accomplish the avowed purposes of the bill, but which may be used to narrow the field of competition so that competent and worthy people will be denied an opportunity to make a living. No one opposes any sane measure to promote health and sanitation. This is not such a bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. That the following words or phrases, unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, shall have the meanings ascribed to them in this section:

(a) The word "cosmetology", as used in this act, shall be defined and construed to mean any one or any combination of practices generally and usually, heretofore and hereafter, performed by, and known as the occupation of, beauty culturists, or cosmeticians, or cosmetologists, or hairdressers, or of any other person holding him or herself out as practicing cosmetology by whatever designation and within the meaning of this act and in and upon whatever place or premises; and in particular "cosmetology" shall be defined and shall include, but otherwise not be limited thereby, the following or any one of a combination of practices, to wit: Arranging, dressing, styling, curling, waving, cleansing, cutting, removing, singeing, bleaching, coloring, or similar work, upon the hair of any person by any means, and with hands or mechanical or electrical apparatus or appliances, or by the use of cosmetic preparations, antiseptics, tonics, lotions, or creams, massaging, cleansing, stimulating, manipulating, exercising, beautifying, or similar work, the scalp, face, neck, arms, bust, or upper part of the body, or manicuring the nails of any person, exclusive of such of the foregoing practices as come within the scope of the Healing Arts Practice Act in force in the District of Columbia at the time of the passage of this act.

(b) Any place or premises, or part thereof, wherein or whereupon cosmetology or any of its practices are followed or taught, or any person therein or thereabouts practicing cosmetology, whether such place is known or designated as a cosmetician, cosmetological or beauty shop, establishment, or school or whether the person is known or holds him or herself out as a cosmetician, cosmetologist, or beauty culturist, or by any other name or designation indicating that cosmetology is practiced or taught, shall be subject to the provision and within the meaning of this act. For the purpose of this act such place shall hereinafter be considered and referred to as a beauty shop or school of cosmetology, as the case may be, and the person practicing cosmetology therein, as a cosmetologist: Provided, however, That any appropriate name herein mentioned may be used, but shall be displayed upon or over the entrance door or doors of such place designating it as a beauty shop or school of cosmetology within the meaning of this act.

(c) A person who is engaged in learning or acquiring any or all practices of cosmetology, and while so learning, performs or assists in any of the practices of cosmetology, under the immediate supervision of a registered or licensed practitioner or instructor of cosmetology, shall be known as an apprentice or student of cosmetology and hereinafter referred to as a student.

(d) Any person, not an apprentice or a student, following or practicing cosmetology, not owning or managing a beauty shop or school of cosmetology, shall be known as an operator cosmetologist and hereinafter referred to as an operator.

(e) Any person, being an operator, and managing, conducting, or owning a beauty shop or school of cosmetology, shall be known as a manager or managing cosmetologist and hereinafter referred to as a manager.

(f) Any person being an operator and teaching cosmetology or any practices thereof in a school of cosmetology shall be known as an instructor of cosmetology and hereinafter referred to as an instructor.

(g) Any person who engages only in the practice of manicuring the nails of any person shall be known as and hereinafter referred to as a manicurist.

(h) The agent or employee of any manufacturer of beauty shop and cosmetological products and equipment employed by the said manufacturer for the purpose of conducting sales demonstrations, lectures, or expositions shall be known as a demonstrator and hereinafter referred to as such.

(i) Whenever the word "board" shall appear or be used, it shall mean and refer to the Board of Cosmetology as hereinafter provided.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PATMAN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill, according to its terms and definitions, will include the barbers. The bill provides that anyone who is engaged in arranging the hair of any person by any means whatsoever, with the hands or mechanical or electrical apparatus or appliances, or anyone who dresses hair or styles hair, as well as curling, waving, cleaning, or cutting hair, must get a license. This bill includes the barbers. It would probably put the barbers out of business.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. It would also include the maids and cooks, or anyone who waits on your family.

Mr. PATMAN. This is a very far-reaching bill. If the Members of the House want to go in the direction discussed by my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], this is a good opportunity to make a long start in that direction. However, if you want to go in the direction of preventing these useless and unnecessary boards and bureaus which harass and annoy people for the purpose of keeping people out of business, fixing prices, and establishing rates for a few, I insist you vote for this motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have listened very attentively to the arguments both of the gentleman and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. It occurs to me that facts have a way of knocking arguments into a cocked hat. I should also state that you have this law in Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. That is all right; maybe it is or is not the same law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is substantially the same.

Mr. PATMAN. Perhaps the legislature made a mistake. I do not agree that every law in Texas is a wise law. If the legislature passed a law like this, it made a mistake, and I would tell the legislature so. Because some legislature passed some law in some State, that does not make that law a perfect law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may state to the gentleman that approximately 40 States have this law on their statute books.

Mr. PATMAN. I venture to say they did not pass a law like this proposed one.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Substantially like this.

Mr. McFARLANE. There is no law like this on the statute books of Texas.

May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Democratic national platform provides we shall eliminate useless boards and commissions? This does not mean we shall continue to create more useless boards and commissions.

Mr. PATMAN. This is creating another board or commission. If the House wants to adopt this, it is perfectly all right with me. It does not make any difference about this particular board or the people engaged in this particular work, but it is the trend to which I object. I hope the House today goes in the direction of stopping this trend.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Does the gentleman feel the same way about barber-shop inspection laws?

Mr. PATMAN. It is not the same thing. I feel the same way about barber shop inspection laws, except where they are purely health and sanitation laws. Anything which relates purely to health and sanitation is all right, but this is not the object of the pending bill. This bill comes about by reason of the desire of certain people to keep the other fellow out of their business and to keep students from working their way through college in competition with the people engaged in that business. You cannot blame them, in a way, because they want just as much of the business as possible.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Since reference has been made to the situation in Texas, may I ask my friend the gentleman from Texas, if it is not a fact that Texas has barber inspection laws as well as beauty-parlor inspection laws, that boards have been set up under the same general principle as set out in this bill, and that the law is enforced in the gentleman's city, in my city, and in every other city in Texas and has given practically unanimous and universal satisfaction?

Mr. PATMAN. I venture to say that law is to protect the health of the people and for the purpose of sanitation and is not for the objects and purposes disclosed in this bill. I venture to say further Texas does not have any such law as this or as restricted as this.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I want to get the gentleman's viewpoint. Does the gentleman feel the same way about milk and water inspection?

Mr. PATMAN. We are talking about this particular bill. He is now referring to health and sanitation laws, something I favor.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I am talking about the principle involved.

Mr. PATMAN. I am in favor of protecting the health of the people, but there is no reason why under the name of health and sanitation we should place every business in a strait jacket and harass and annoy people who want to engage in such lines of business.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Where would the gentleman put that responsibility?

Mr. PATMAN. The responsibility? We have it now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about this bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUINN], who introduced the bill, has told you the facts about it, as has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who is a member of the subcommittee. However, I cannot understand the position of the gentleman from Texas. It seems to me this is a Texas field day in opposition to the bill.

I have always taken the position that whatever I give to my State I shall give to the District of Columbia. Texas has such a law as this, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] has told you every man, woman, and child in that State approves. Texas also has a barber bill such as will follow the bill now under discussion. Texas has such laws, yet four or five Members from the State of Texas tell you what is good for their State shall not prevail in the District of Columbia. I say it is not good sportsmanship when men argue for one thing for themselves but deny to their fellows the same thing they claim for themselves.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman states the barber bill will follow this measure, and the gentleman has a real-estate bill to follow that bill, has he not?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes; and I think the opposition of the gentleman from Texas to this bill leads to opposition to the real-estate bill under which the District of Columbia will receive some revenue by charging a real-estate man $50 a year to obtain a license. If I had my way every business in the District would pay a license fee and there would be no necessity for the great bill that the gentleman from Texas sponsored some time ago, known as the Robinson-Patman bill, which meant nothing so far as the little merchant is concerned. I want an individual licensing bill in order to put the little man on an equality with the chain store, which was supposed to have been accomplished by the Robinson-Patman bill.

I am seeking to help the little man and I say to you that this bill does not hurt anyone. It gives the people of the District of Columbia the right to regulate their own affairs the same as we do back in our own States. I understand there are 40 States of the Union that have a law which is identical with the one we are asking you now to consider. If there is any phrase in the bill that is wrong, amend it and strike it out, but do not vote for this motion which would mean striking down the whole bill.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I do not know what the situation is in Texas, but I do know that the State of New Jersey has a law very similar to this one, and if you say that every man, woman, or child in Texas is in favor of their law, I will tell you that most of the people in New Jersey are against this law. It has not worked out there satisfactorily at all. The law has just set up another board, and my State has boarditis, the same as the New Deal, and we are opposed to that particular law now in New Jersey, and I think we ought to be opposed to such a law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMISANO. May I ask how long the law has been in effect in New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. About 2 years, and the only thing that has been accomplished has been to pay out a salary to somebody.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PALMISANO) there were—ayes 38, noes 42.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUINN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. QUINN: On page 2, line 18, strike out the word "manipulating."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOARD OF COSMETOLOGY

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby created the District of Columbia Board of Cosmetology, consisting of three members to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia within 30 days after this act becomes effective. Each member of the Board shall be at least 25 years of age, shall have had at least 5 years' practical experience in the practices of cosmetology, shall be a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the District of Columbia. No member of the Board shall be a member of nor affiliated with any school of cosmetology while in office, nor shall any two members of said Board be graduates of the same school.

(b) Each member of the Board shall serve a term of 3 years, and until his or her successor is appointed and qualified, except in the case of the first Board, whose members shall serve 1, 2, and 3 years, respectively. The members of the Board shall take the oath provided for public officers. Vacancies shall be filled by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the unexpired portion of the term of a member caused by death, resignation, or otherwise. The said Commissioners are hereby empowered to remove, after full hearing, any member of the Board for neglect of duty or any other just cause.

(c) The members of the Board shall, annually, elect from among their number a president and also a treasurer, and shall annually appoint a secretary, who shall not be a member of the Board. The compensation of the secretary, to be fixed by the Board, shall not exceed the sum of $3,000 per year, and shall be paid out of the funds received by it, and no part of such compensation shall be paid otherwise by the District of Columbia. Said Board shall have a common seal, and the said treasurer shall give such bond for the faithful performance of his duties as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem necessary. Two members of the Board shall constitute a quorum.

(d) The Board shall meet in the District of Columbia not less than four times during the year and at such other times as the Board may deem advisable.

(e) The Board shall keep a record of its proceedings. It shall keep a register of applicants for certificates or licenses showing the name of the applicant, the name and location of his place of occupation or business, and whether the applicant was granted or refused a certificate or license. The books and records of the Board shall be prima-facie evidence of matters therein contained, shall constitute public records, and shall at all reasonable times be open for public inspection.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering what kind of bill could be brought in here by the District Committee that would meet with the approval of this House. This is about the third bill, I believe, that has been up here today that has been submitted to the most violent form of criticism, and inasmuch as someone has suggested that this seems to be a kind of field day for Texans, I rise in opposition to the position taken by my very warm and close personal friends, the gentlemen from Texas, Mr. DIES and Mr. PATMAN. [Applause.] I am one of those who believes that the principle of this bill, as well as the barbers' bill, which I understand is to follow, is absolutely sound and workable.

If you will pardon a personal allusion, I may say that I had a small part in the passage of such a law in the Texas Legislature and, later, as the mayor of a small city, had a little to do with the enforcement of the same act, and I want to tell you that the barbers' law in my State, in my judgment, with all due deference to my good friends who have taken an opposite view, has resulted in a very much improved sanitary condition.

I believe with respect to sanitation in barber shops and beauty parlors, that such regulation and sanitation is in a way comparable with inspection of milk, and I was absolutely surprised at my good friend from Texas [Mr. DIES], who seemed to take exception to the milk-inspection laws promulgated by the Government and by every State in the American Union.

It is a great satisfaction, may I say right along this same line, when I ride down through the grand Old Dominion State of Virginia and stop at a place to get drinking water for myself and my family, to find a sign there telling that the water has been inspected by the State health department and is fit to drink.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I agree with the gentleman and may I say that I only wish every Member of this House could see the really wonderful picture portraying the life of Louis Pasteur, which shows the work he did in protecting health and bringing about sanitary conditions.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. That is a very wonderful picture. I am glad we are living in this marvelous and modern age. I am not willing that bureaus run our Government, but I am quite willing that lawmaking bodies shall set up agencies to insure pure water and milk, inspection of barber shops, beauty parlors, hotels, restaurants, and soda fountains. I am for strict inspection, high standards, and good wages for all such places that serve the public.

I know that in my own city of something more than 100,000 people, with a large percentage of Mexican population, before the barber law was passed, there were many insanitary little barber shops where one could go in and get a shave for 10 or 15 cents and a haircut for 25 cents, with not the slightest sign or pretense of inspection. None of us want to patronize a barber shop that is not sanitary in every respect. I am one of those who believes that the principle of this bill is absolutely sound and whether it is this beauty-parlor bill or the barber bill or the taxation bill which this morning we voted not to take up, I am here to raise my voice in defense of this committee, which has spent days and weeks and, in some instances, months in trying to bring out legislation that will be of benefit to the people of this great big Capital city, which belongs to all of us.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is one of those who believes in the refinement of amendment to this tax bill that has been brought here on the floor after 3 months of work.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Inasmuch as this has been a sort of general discussion running through all these bills, I am glad that I voted this morning to take up the tax bill, and I was much impressed with the able speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] explaining the financial situation of the people of the District of Columbia.

If you do not want to put a tax on the people here in order to support their own government, it is going to require a Federal appropriation to make up the deficit, and I observe that several Members are satisfied that the bill did not apply to Congressmen, and it did not have anything in it that would have prevented an amendment to increase the taxes on real estate. So I think the thing to have done about that—and I am not saying this in a spirit of criticism—was to let that bill come up on the floor and let us thresh it out; and if the bill were not right, amend it in order to meet this local situation. I regret when I see the spirit that seems to permeate this House in respect to the District of Columbia. Of course, rents are too high, taxes are too low, a lot of big apartment houses and fine buildings are not paying their just share of the taxes, but nevertheless it is absolutely inexcusable that many Federal officials and employees are contributing little to the support of government. In a spirit of fairness and justice to the taxpayers of the District, as well as the taxpayers back home, we ought to arrive at some fair and just means by which we shall raise sufficient revenue in the District of Columbia to meet the just and fair demands of government in the District. Everybody should pay an income tax. We should pass the Cochran amendment. State, county, and city officials in every State should be required to pay an income tax. [Applause.]

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. I am a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia and I know the work that the District Committee has carried on in order to get this tax bill on the floor. There are many features in the bill that I am not in favor of, and I was prepared, if the bill were taken up today, to offer amendments that I felt would be enacted into law. I was one of those who was in favor of cutting out the income tax and raising the taxes here by an additional gasoline tax, which would raise the money much more easily, and which would raise more than the income tax would bring. I feel keenly about the House action in refusing to take this up for the reason that the people of the District are in the same position that our Colonies were when we fought against the imposition of taxes without representation. The people of the District of Columbia have no say in what their taxes should be, and they have no vote, nobody to represent them on the committee except Members of Congress from other States.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. And in view of that fact, I feel that we ought to be fair to these people and we ought to have taken the bill up this morning. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman at one time was an assistant attorney general of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. And he had something to do with boards such as we are attempting to set up here.

Mr. SACKS. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman state whether or not they are operating satisfactorily or unsatisfactorily?

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, it was my good fortune as deputy attorney general of the State of Pennsylvania to represent some 30 of these boards before I came to Congress. Those boards which regulated the business, and which had on them members of that business did not work so well. However, those boards that were appointed by the Governor from amongst the people to regulate a business, did very well.

I am afraid that wherever you create a board and put men on that board who are actively engaged in the business, their greatest desire is to protect themselves and their fellow members in the business, to the detriment of the general public.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is there any board created in the tax bill?

Mr. SACKS. No. The gentleman was talking about this particular bill.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY. Is it not a fact that in connection with the various boards which we have in the State of Pennsylvania there have been abuses in conjunction with their functions that have been in some cases scandalous?

Mr. SACKS. There is no doubt about that. It is those boards that have been appointed out of the membership of those engaged in the business.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. DIES. With reference to the tax bill, since it had no mention of real-estate taxes in it, an amendment to increase the tax rate on real estate would not have been germane, so that insofar as the House being able to write any views it might have on an increase in the real-estate rate was concerned, it could not have done so.

Mr. SACKS. That is a question that might have been raised. The gentleman may be right, but I still say, in view of the fact that July 1 is so near at hand and that is the beginning of the fiscal year, and in view of the fact that we are acting as guardians of the people of the District of Columbia, we should at least have accorded them the right to take up this tax bill on the floor. I agree with the gentleman from Texas that there were many features in that bill that were not right, but I was willing to take up the bill and willing to appear on the floor and fight for those things which we thought were right, to take the place of those things now in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. SACKS. All right. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The Commissioners of the District all along have had authority to increase the tax rate, and the subcommittee considered that in the consideration of this bill. We thought this was not the time to do that, because there is no question but that if we increased the tax rate, it would be passed on to the tenants in increased rental rather than decreases.

Mr. SACKS. I, like the gentleman from Texas, am in favor of protecting the small-home owner, the man who is earning a meager living and buying his own home, but I am not in favor of protecting these big hotels and apartment houses which we all know are receiving exorbitant rates and paying very little toward carrying on the government of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am very much in sympathy with what the gentleman is saying and I was very much inclined to vote against consideration of the bill. I did not vote for its consideration, for this reason: It is an income-tax bill, and I think we deserve a week to consider its provisions. I believe that is the reason why many Members voted against the bill today.

Mr. SACKS. While I am on the question of income taxes, we had a message from the President of the United States telling us that the income-tax law which was passed by this Congress was being violated; that there were such loopholes in it that yachts were able to go through them, and other things; that we were not collecting half of the tax that was due.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

REGULATION BY THE BOARD

SEC. 3. The Board is hereby empowered to make and enforce such rules and regulations, subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE BOARD

SEC. 4. The Board shall have the power to refuse, revoke, or suspend licenses or certificates, after full hearing, on proof of violation of any provisions of this act or the rules and regulations established by the Board under this act, and shall have the power to require the production of such books, records, and papers as it may desire. Before any certificate shall be suspended or revoked for any of the reasons contained in this section, the holder thereof shall have notice, in writing, of the charge or charges against him or her, and shall, at a day specified in said notice, which shall be at least 5 days after the service thereof, be given a public hearing with a full opportunity to produce testimony in his or her behalf. Any person whose certificate of registration has been so suspended or revoked may, after the expiration of 90 days, on application to the Board, have the same reissued to him or her upon satisfactory proof that the disqualification has ceased.

APPEAL FROM ACTION OF THE BOARD

SEC. 5. An appeal may be taken from any action of the Board to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the decision of the said Commissioners shall be final.

PRACTICE OF COSMETOLOGY WITHOUT REGISTRATION PROHIBITED

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person in the District of Columbia to practice or teach cosmetology or manage a beauty shop, or to use or maintain any place for the practice or teaching of cosmetology for compensation, unless he or she shall have first obtained from the Board a certificate of registration as provided in this act. Nothing contained in this act, however, shall apply to or affect any person who is now actually engaged in any such occupation, except as hereinafter provided.

REQUIREMENTS TO PRACTICE

SEC. 7. Before any person may practice or teach cosmetology or manage a beauty shop, such person shall file with the Board a written application for registration, accompanied by a health certificate issued by a registered licensed physician of the District of Columbia, under oath, on a form which shall be prescribed and supplied by the Board, and such applicant shall submit satisfactory proof of the required age, educational qualifications, and be of good moral character, shall deposit with the said Board the registration fee, and pass an examination as to fitness to practice or teach cosmetology or manage a beauty shop, as hereinafter provided in this act.

ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR EXAMINATION

SEC. 8. No person shall be permitted by the Board to take an examination to receive a certificate as an operator unless such person shall be at least 16 years of age, of good moral character, has received an education equivalent to the completion of the eighth grade of elementary school, and either has been registered as a student and has had training, as hereinafter provided in this act, in a school of cosmetology duly registered by the Board or has been registered and served as an apprentice at least 8 months as hereinafter provided in this act: Provided, however, That the Board may permit a person to take an examination without the prior studentship or apprenticeship herein required if such person shall establish, to the satisfaction of the Board, that he or she has been an operator in the active practice of cosmetology for at least 24 months within the 5 years next preceding the effective date of this act. No person shall be permitted to take an examination for a certificate to teach cosmetology or act as manager of a beauty shop unless such person shall be at least 18 years of age, of good moral character, has received an education equivalent to the completion of the eighth grade of elementary school, and either has had at least 3 years' experience as an operator in a beauty shop or has served as such operator in a registered beauty shop for a period of not less than 6 months and shall have a training in a registered school of cosmetology of not less than 2,000 hours, including the hours of study necessary to become an operator. The sufficiency of the qualifications of applicants for admission to the examination or for registration shall be determined by the Board, but the Board may delegate the authority to determine the sufficiency of such requirements to the secretary of the Board, subject to such provisions as the Board shall make for appeal to the Board.

LIMITED CERTIFICATES

SEC. 9. A limited certificate of registration to manicure the nails only may be applied for and granted under all of the terms and conditions of this act, except that the examination therefor may be limited to such practice only and the required schooling shall be not less than 100 hours. A limited certificate of registration for any one or a combination of practices as license is applied for may be granted under all of the terms and conditions of this act, except that the examination therefor shall be limited to the subjects in question, and a proportionate number of hours of training as determined by the Board shall be required.

REQUIREMENTS OF A SCHOOL OF COSMETOLOGY

SEC. 10. No school of cosmetology shall be granted a certificate of registration unless it shall attach to its staff as a consultant a person licensed by the District of Columbia to practice medicine and employ and maintain a sufficient number of competent instructors, registered as such, and shall possess apparatus and equipment sufficient for the proper and full teaching of all subjects of its curriculum which shall be as prescribed by the Board; shall keep a daily record of the attendance of each student, maintain regular class and instruction hours, establish grades, and hold examinations before issuance of diplomas; and shall require a school term of training of not less than 1,500 hours within a period of not less than 8 months for a complete course comprising all or the majority of the practices of cosmetology as provided in this act; and to include practical demonstrations and theoretical studies and study in sanitation, sterilization, and the use of antiseptics, cosmetics, and electrical applicances consistent with the practical and theoretical requirements as applicable to cosmetology or any practice thereof, as provided in this act. In no case shall there be less than 1 instructor to each 25 pupils. Any person, firm, or corporation teaching any or all practices of cosmetology shall be required to comply with all provisions applying to schools of cosmetology within the meaning of this act.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. QUINN: Page 11, line 5, after the word "medicine", insert "and surgery or osteopathy and surgery."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

STUDENT PRACTICE UPON THE PUBLIC FOR PAY PROHIBITED

SEC. 11. It shall be unlawful for any school of cosmetology to permit its students to practice cosmetology upon the public under any circumstances except by way of clinical work upon persons willing to submit themselves to such practice after having first been properly informed that operator is a student. No school of cosmetology shall, directly or indirectly, charge any money whatsoever for treatment by its students or for materials used in such treatment, until such student shall have had at least 500 hours of training: Provided, That any law now in force or which may hereafter be enacted providing for minimum wages and hours of labor in the District of Columbia shall be applicable to any student for whose services a charge shall be made.

PRACTICE IN BEAUTY SHOPS ONLY

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any person to practice cosmetology for pay in any place other than a registered beauty shop: Provided, That a registered operator may in an emergency furnish cosmetological treatments to persons in the permanent or temporary residences of such persons by appointment. Every beauty shop shall have a manager, who shall have immediate charge and supervision over the operators practicing cosmetology.

EXCEPTIONS TO EXAMINATION REQUIREMENTS; PRESENT STUDENTS AND APPRENTICES

SEC. 13. The Board may issue the certificate of registration required by this act without an examination or compliance with the other requirements as to age or education to any person who has practiced or taught cosmetology or acted as a manager of a beauty shop or school of cosmetology in the District of Columbia for at least 6 months immediately prior to the passage of this act: Provided, That such person shall make application to the Board for a certificate of registration within 90 days after the effective date of this act. Such application shall be accompanied by an affidavit of a registered licensed physician that the applicant was examined and is free from all contagious and infectious diseases and the registration fee required by this act. Any person studying cosmetology in a school of cosmetology or as an apprentice in a beauty shop in the District of Columbia at any time this act goes into effect shall receive credit for such time and studies without complying with the requirements of this act as to age and preliminary education: Provided, That such person shall make application to the Board for registration as a student or apprentice within 3 months after this act goes into effect. Students, upon graduating from registered schools of cosmetology, may apply for and receive from the Board a temporary permit to practice as an operator until the next regular examination held by the Board under the provisions of this act.

APPRENTICES IN BEAUTY SHOPS

SEC. 14. Any cosmetologist who is a beauty-shop owner and who is a holder of a teacher's certificate may instruct apprentices: Provided, That there shall be no less than three licensed operators for each apprentice in any shop and there shall be no more than two apprentices in any shop, and provided such shop is not held out as a school of cosmetology. Such apprentices may apply for examination at the end of their apprenticeship at the next regular examination held by the Board and, if successful therein, shall be registered as operators. Registered apprentices, upon completion of their required term of apprenticeship, may apply for and receive from the Board a temporary permit to practice as an operator until the next regular examination.

DEMONSTRATORS

SEC. 15. The agents or employees of manufacturers of beauty-shop and cosmetological products and equipment employed by the said manufacturers for the purpose of conducting sales demonstrations, lectures, or expositions shall be required to register with the Board within 3 days after such employment. The Board shall issue permits to such agents or employees for the purpose of permitting such persons to conduct sales demonstrations, lectures, and expositions of beauty-shop and cosmetological products and equipment upon the payment of the required fee: Provided, however, That no charge of any kind, whether for materials used or services rendered, shall be made by the manufacturer, his agent or employee, for said services rendered or said materials used in connection with or incidental to the conduct of such sales demonstration, lecture, or exposition. In the event of the termination of the employment of such agent or employee referred to in this section, the said employer herein referred to shall immediately report such fact to the Board, and the permit of such person shall thereupon be canceled and voided. No person canvassing the residents of the District of Columbia, in connection with the advertisement or sale or both of cosmetological products or equipment, shall be permitted to give practical demonstration of such products or equipment unless each such person or his agent shall first have procured from the Board a certificate of registration and a license so to demonstrate upon the payment of the required fee as hereinafter provided.

RECIPROCITY

SEC. 16. The Board may dispense with examinations of applicants as provided in this act and may grant a certificate of registration as provided in this act in all cases where such applicants have complied with the requirements of another State, Territory, or foreign country, state, or province, wherein the requirements for registration are substantially equal to those in force in the District of Columbia at the time of filing application for such certificate, or upon due proof that such applicant has continuously engaged in the practices or occupation for which a license is applied for at least 5 years immediately prior to such application and upon the payment of the required fee.

CERTIFICATES OR LICENSES

SEC. 17. If an applicant to examination to practice cosmetology passes such examination to the satisfaction of the Board, and has paid the required fee, and otherwise complies with the requirements provided in this act, or an applicant otherwise for registration, has paid the required fee and complies with the requirements for registration as provided in this act, the Board shall issue a certificate or license, as the case may be, to that effect, signed by the president and secretary of the Board and attested by its seal. Such certificate or license shall be evidence that the person to whom it is issued is entitled to follow the practices, occupation, or occupations as an operator, manager, or instructor, or own and maintain a beauty shop or school of cosmetology as stipulated therein and as prescribed in this act. Such certificate or license shall be conspicuously displayed in his or her principal office, place of business, or employment.

EXAMINATIONS

SEC. 18. The examination of applicants for a license to practice under this act shall be conducted under the rules prescribed by the Board and shall include both practical demonstrations and written or oral tests in reference to the practices for which a license is applied for and such related studies or subjects as the Board may determine necessary for the proper and efficient performance of such practices; and shall not be confined to any specific system or method; and such examination shall be consistent with a prescribed curriculum for a beauty school or school of cosmetology and the practical and theoretical requirements of the occupation of cosmetology as provided by this act. The Board shall hold public examinations on the third Tuesdays in January, April, July, and October in the District of Columbia, at such hours as the Board shall prescribe.

FEES

SEC. 19. The initial registration fee for the issuance of a license, with or without examination, shall be as follows: $10 for owners, managers, and instructors; $5 for operators; $3 for manicurists; and $100 for schools of cosmetology. Annual renewal fees shall be $5 for owners, managers, and instructors; $3 for operators; $2 for manicurists; and $50 for schools of cosmetology. The fee for a temporary certificate for a student or an apprentice shall be $2. For the issuance of a certificate to a sales demonstrator or lecturer or to an itinerant demonstrator, canvassing the residents of the District of Columbia, the fee shall be $5. For the issuance of a certificate without examination to operators or instructors licensed in jurisdictions meeting the requirements of the District of Columbia, or to those who furnish satisfactory proof that they have been engaged elsewhere in the occupation of cosmetology for a period of 5 years, the initial fee for a certificate of registration shall be $15. On failure to pass an examination the fees shall not be returned to the applicant, but within the year after such failure he or she may present himself or herself and be again examined without the payment of an additional fee. Out of the fees paid the Board there shall be defrayed all expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act, together with a fee of $10 per day for each member of the Board and the actual and necessary expenses incurred for each day he may be actually engaged upon business pertaining to his official duties as such Board member: Provided, That such expenses shall in no event exceed the total of receipts: Provided further, That at the close of each fiscal year any funds unexpended in excess of the sum of $1,000 shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia.

PERSONS CALLED TO AID OF BOARD

SEC. 20. The Board may call to its aid any person or persons of established reputation and known ability in the practices as provided in this act for the purpose of conducting examinations, inspections, and investigations of any or all persons, firms, or corporations affected by this act. Such aid or aids shall not be connected with any school teaching cosmetology. Any person called by the Board to its aid as provided herein shall receive for his or her services not more than $10 for each day employed in the actual discharge of his or her official duties, and his or her actual and necessary expenses incurred, to be paid in the same manner as herein provided for the payment of compensation and expenses of members of the Board.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, today is the one hundredth birthday of Gen. A. S. Daggett, one of the bravest and most distinguished officers of the United States Army. Born in the great State of Maine and entering the Army as a volunteer in 1861 as a second lieutenant in the Fifth Maine Infantry, General Daggett participated in practically every important battle of the Army of the Potomac. He was at the first and second battles of Bull Run, Gaines Mill, Sharpsburg, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, and Petersburg. Through heroism and leadership, he rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

In the days immediately following the War between the States General Daggett was on duty with the Army in the South. He proved himself a magnanimous friend to the people of the South and often spoke of the reconstruction period as the darkest page in American history. He was a great student and admirer of Gen. Robert E. Lee.

General Daggett served in numerous Indian wars. He fought in the battle of San Juan during the Cuban campaign and in many engagements in the Philippine Insurrection. He lead the China relief expedition in the successful assault on the gates of the imperial city in Pekin in 1900. Decorated for repeated acts of gallantry and recognized as a gallant soldier and fearless leader he was retired from the Army with the rank of brigadier general in 1901.

"The glory of man", said Solomon, "is strength." General Daggett has indeed been strong. He has been physically strong as evidenced by the fact that today he enters the second century of life. He has been mentally strong as attested by his brilliant record as strategist and soldier. He has been morally strong, standing four square to the winds of destiny and holding steadfast in his devotion to duty. Although a hundred years old, General Daggett has not lost his sense of humor. Last fall after the election, as a Maine Democrat, he wrote one of his Republican friends here in Washington:

Several persons voted for Roosevelt lately. In case you have not heard of it I thought I would let you know.

Today the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, and the Chief of Staff of the Army have conveyed to General Daggett their congratulations. I join in those congratulations to this great soldier, a generous foe, a distinguished citizen. In doing so I know that I voice the sentiment in the hearts of all patriotic Americans. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SANITARY RULES

SEC. 21. The said Board shall, with the approval of the District of Columbia health authorities, prescribe such sanitary rules as it may deem necessary, with particular reference to the precautions necessary to be employed to prevent the creating and spreading of infectious and contagious diseases, and it shall be unlawful for the owner or manager of any beauty shop or school of cosmetology to permit any person to sleep in or use for residential purposes any room used wholly or in part as a beauty shop or school of cosmetology. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to practice cosmetology except in a bona-fide established beauty shop or school of cosmetology, wherein the requirements of the Board as to proper, sanitary, and exclusive practices of cosmetology are complied with: Provided, however, That a person may practice outside of such establishment under the direction and control of an owner or manager thereof under such regulations as the Board may provide.

HEARING MAY BE HELD BY ANY MEMBER

SEC. 22. Any investigation, inquiry, or hearing which the Board is empowered by law to hold or undertake may be held or undertaken by or before any member or members of said Board and shall be deemed to be the finding or order of said Board when approved and confirmed by it.

TEMPORARY LICENSES

SEC. 23. The Board may issue a temporary license to any person who otherwise is subject to examination as provided in this act, upon documentary or other satisfactory evidence that the applicant therefor has the necessary qualifications to practice any one or any combination of practices of cosmetology for which a temporary license is applied for: Provided, however, That such application for a temporary license is accompanied by an application for an examination as provided in this act and the necessary fee therefor and a fee of $2 for such temporary license. Such temporary license shall remain in force until the next regular meeting of the Board at which examinations are held and no longer. Two such temporary licenses may not be issued to the same person. Each temporary license shall state the date of expiration and the temporary license shall after such date be void and of no effect.

TO WHOM THE PROVISIONS OF THIS ACT SHALL NOT APPLY

SEC. 24. Nothing in this act shall prohibit service in case of emergency, or domestic administration, without compensation, nor services by persons authorized under the laws of the District of Columbia to practice medicine, surgery, dentistry, chiropody, osteopathy, or chiropractic, nor services by barbers, insofar as their usual and ordinary vocation and profession is concerned, when engaged in any of the following practices, namely: Arranging, cleansing, cutting, or singeing the hair of any person; or in massaging, cleansing, stimulating, exercising, or similar work, the scalp, face, or neck of any person, with the hands, or with mechanical or electrical apparatus or appliances, or by the use of cosmetic preparations, antiseptics, tonics, lotions, or creams.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. QUINN: Page 21, section 24, line 20, strike out the period, insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following:

"Nor shall anything in this act apply to the practice of psychotherapy, or massaging, stimulating, or exercising of the head, neck, arm, bust, or upper part of the body when done for purposes of health and hygiene rather than for cosmetic purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

RENEWAL OF CERTIFICATES

SEC. 25. The certificates of registration issued in the year in which this act goes into effect shall expire as of April 15, 1938. Thereafter certificates shall be issued for no longer than 1 year. All certificates shall expire on the 15th day of April next succeeding unless renewed for the next year. Certificates may be renewed by application made prior to the 15th day of April of each year accompanied by a health certificate in the manner prescribed in section 7 and the payment of the renewal fees provided in this act. The holder of an expired certificate or license may have within 3 years of the date of expiration the certificate restored upon the payment of the required renewal fee and satisfactory proof of his or her qualifications to assume practice or occupation.

PENALTIES

SEC. 26. (a) Any person who shall violate or aid or abet in violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300 or imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for not more than 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) Any operator, manager, instructor, student, or apprentice who shall practice the occupation of cosmetology while knowingly suffering from contagious or infectious disease, or who shall knowingly serve any person afflicted with such disease, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300 or imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for not more than 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

PROSECUTIONS

SEC. 27. It shall be the duty of the corporation counsel, or one of his assistants, to prosecute in the name of the District of Columbia all violations of the provisions of this act.

EFFECT OF PARTIAL INVALIDITY OF ACT

SEC. 28. Each section of this act, and every part of each section, is hereby declared to be independent of every other, and the holding of any section or part thereof to be void or ineffective for any cause shall not be deemed to affect any other section or part thereof.

REPEAL

SEC. 29. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6869) to regulate the occupation and practices of cosmetology, to create a District of Columbia Board of Cosmetology for the examination and licensing of persons to carry on or to teach such practices, to insure the better education of such practictioners, to provide rules regulating the proper conduct and sanitation of cosmetological establishments and schools, for the protection of the public health, and to provide penalties for violation thereof, instructed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 60, noes 28.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 221, nays 69, not voting 143, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAX BILL

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7472.

Pending this motion, the gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill may be limited to 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is this the tax bill that the House refused to consider earlier in the day?

The SPEAKER. The bill that is now being called up is the bill which the House refused to consider earlier today.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 35, noes 114.

So the motion was rejected.

EXCISE TAX ON DEALERS IN MARIHUANA

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6906) to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know that there is any special objection, but I think the gentleman should explain the bill briefly to the House.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, marihuana is a dangerous narcotic drug that is found in the resin extracted from the flowering tops, leaves, and seeds of the hemp plant. It is a drug used by the medical profession to a very limited extent, but its illicit use is extensive. We cannot regulate its use by bringing it under the Harrison Narcotics Act, because the Harrison Narcotics Act applies to drugs which are not grown in this country, while this plant, Cannabis sativa L., is grown practically throughout the United States. Moreover, fiber from the stems, and the seeds are used commercially in a legitimate manner.

In this bill we have presented for the consideration of the Congress a combination of the Harrison Narcotics Act and the National Firearms Act. By it dealers in marihuana must be registered and an occupational tax will be levied on them. Further, a reasonable revenue-producing tax of $1 an ounce is to be placed upon those transfers of marihuana which are legitimate and $100 an ounce placed upon those which are illicit. The illicit dealings in marihuana consist principally in the sale of cigarettes into which the leaves and tops of the plant are manufactured. The growth of this trade in the last few years has been phenomenal. Some years ago it was only in the southwest part of the country where the plant was grown and sold at all, but today it grows wild in almost every State of the Union. The worst thing about this trade is not that hardened criminals use the drug to steel themselves for their operations but it is being peddled by itinerant dealers and peddlers throughout the country and sold to our high-school students, starting the young out as drug addicts. There is hardly anyone that appeared before our committee who was not horrified at the growth of the traffic and at its effects.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. It is true that extensive hearings were held on this bill before the Ways and Means Committee and that the bill has been reported unanimously by the committee, there not being any opposition from any source to the passage of the bill?

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Congress from time to time has passed legislation to suppress the traffic in narcotics. This has been done with some measure of success by invoking the taxing power of the Federal Government. The bill, H. R. 6906, now before the House for consideration, has for its chief purpose the suppression and, if possible, the destruction of traffic in a deadly drug sold in the form of a cigarette. This new smoke is known by several names, but the name applied to it in this country is marihuana. This demoralizing dope is sold by a class of degenerate peddlers in dens, dives, and on the streets of cities throughout the country.

The most alarming aspect of this illicit traffic is the sale of marihuana cigarettes to the boys and girls, especially those of high-school age. The testimony given by experts shows that the use of the drug leads to insanity and crime.

I commend to every Member of the House a careful study of the hearings on this bill. I may add for the benefit of those who have not had time to read the testimony given to our committee that it was shown that in one city alone in the United States 125 out of 450 prisoners were addicted to the use of marihuana and that slightly less than one-half of the murders were committed by marihuana addicts. The statement was made before our committee that the major criminal in the United States is the drug addict, and that of all the offenses committed against the laws of this country, the narcotic addict is the most frequent offender.

A case was presented to us from California where "a man under the influence of marihuana actually decapitated his best friend and then, coming out of the effects of the drug, was as horrified as anyone over what he had done." Another case is recorded where "A young boy who had become addicted to smoking marihuana cigarettes, in a fit of frenzy because, as he stated while still under the marihuana influence, a number of people were trying to cut off his arms and legs, seized an ax and killed his father, mother, two brothers, and a sister, wiping out the entire family except himself." I mention these cases to illustrate the effects of this deadly drug.

This drug known as marihuana is found in the flowering tops, seeds, and leaves of Indian hemp. It is a plant that grows in practically all parts of the United States. Within the last few years its cultivation for illicit purposes has increased rapidly and over a large area of the country. It is grown in the back yards of city lots and sold to peddlers, who make it into cigarettes, which they then retail to school children and to their adult victims.

The general use of cigarettes by all classes of society makes it easy for the drug peddler to foist the marihuana cigarette upon the unsuspecting boy and girl who think it smart to try something that promises a kick in it. The experts told our committee that 10 years ago there was little traffic in this country in marihuana except in parts of the Southwest. The record shows that traffic in this drug had so increased that in 1936 there were 338 seizures of this drug in 29 States. The State of Pennsylvania destroyed 200,000 pounds of this product.

There are 50 nations that recognize the seriousness of this evil traffic and each one has enacted a national law to combat it. The United States has no law with which to deal with the problem.

The Treasury Department assures the Ways and Means Committee that the enactment of the bill before us will enable the Government to stamp out the illicit traffic in this dangerous and deadly drug.

It is proposed to do this by using the taxing power of the Federal Government. The Treasury Department stated to the Ways and Means Committee that:

> In accomplishing this general purpose two objectives should dictate the form of the proposed legislation: First, the development of a scheme of taxation which would raise revenue and which would also render virtually impossible the acquisition of marihuana by persons who would put it to illicit uses, without unduly interfering with the use of the plant for industrial, medical, and scientific purposes; and, second, the development of an adequate means of publicising dealings in marihuana in order that the traffic may be effectively taxed and controlled.

The bill before the House is based upon the principles found in the Harrison Narcotics Act and the National Firearms Act, both of which have been sustained by the courts.

I am glad to support this bill for the reasons which I have stated. I have fought the traffic in narcotics for many years. I worked in close cooperation with the late Admiral Richmond P. Hobson, of Spanish War fame, who practically dedicated his life to this important work.

Every citizen interested in protecting society from crime, and in throwing the safeguards of Federal law around the youth of the land to save them from contact with this horrible and illicit traffic should be glad to cooperate with the Government to achieve these ends.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course, I am opposed to the use of the drug taken from the hemp, but is this bill so drawn that it will not interfere with or injure the production of hemp for commercial purposes in a legitimate way?

Mr. BUCK. This bill defines marihuana so that every legitimate use of hemp is protected.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON] is present. Kentucky is a hemp-producing State. I would like to have a statement from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. The industry was represented in the person of Mr. Lozier and it was agreed that the language in the bill took care of the industrial end of it. May I say, if the gentleman will permit, that the term "marihuana" refers to the same thing that we heard throughout the years termed "hashish."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make just one observation. The other day when this bill was called up for consideration I reserved the right to object, at which time the majority leader moved that the House adjourn. I was only attempting to get an explanation of the bill at that time. I have no objection now, and I would not have had ojection at that time if an explanation had been made. I am heartly in favor of the bill.

Mr. MEEKS. Is this substance that is called marihuana used in the manufacture of commercial articles for sale besides drugs and cigarettes?

Mr. BUCK. The fiber of the plant and the stem of the plant are used to manufacture twine. There are no poisonous materials contained in that fiber or stem. The poisonous material is contained in the flowering top and the leaves. That is what we define as marihuana in this bill, and that is what we propose to control.

Mr. MEEKS. It does not interfere with the manufacture of the fiber and the other elements of the stem?

Mr. BUCK. It will not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act—

(a) The term "person" means an individual, a partnership, trust, association, company, or corporation and includes an officer or employee of a trust, association, company, or corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who, as such officer, employee, or member, is under a duty to perform any act in respect of which any violation of this act occurs.

(b) The term "marihuana" means all parts of the plant Cannabis sativa L., whether growing or not; the seeds thereof; the resin extracted from any part of such plant; and every compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of such plant, its seeds, or resins; but shall not include the mature stalks of such plant, oil or cake made from the seeds of such plant, any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of such mature stalks (except the resin extracted therefrom), oil, or cake, or the sterilized seed of such plant which is incapable of germination.

(c) The term "producer" means any person who (1) plants, cultivates, or in any way facilitates the natural growth of marihuana; or (2) harvests and transfers or makes use of marihuana.

(d) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury and the term "collector" means collector of internal revenue.

(e) The term "transfer" or "transferred" means any type of disposition resulting in a change of possession but shall not include a transfer to a common carrier for the purpose of transporting marihuana.

SEC. 2. (a) Every person who imports, manufactures, produces, compounds, sells, deals in, dispenses, prescribes, administers, or gives away marihuana shall (1) within 15 days after the effective date of this act, or (2) before engaging after the expiration of such 15-day period in any of the above-mentioned activities, and (3) thereafter, on or before July 1 of each year, pay the following special taxes respectively:

(1) Importers, manufacturers, and compounders of marihuana, $24 per year.

(2) Producers of marihuana (except those included within subdivision (4) of this subsection), $5 per year.

(3) Physicians, dentists, veterinary surgeons, and other practitioners who distribute, dispense, give away, administer, or prescribe marihuana to patients upon whom they in the course of their professional practice are in attendance, $1 per year of fraction thereof during which they engage in any of such activities.

(4) Any person not registered as an importer, manufacturer, producer, or compounder who obtains and uses marihuana in a laboratory for the purpose of research, instruction, or analysis, or who produces marihuana for any such purpose, $1 per year or fraction thereof during which he engages in such activities.

(5) Any person who is not a physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner and who deals in, dispenses, or gives away marihuana, $3 per year: Provided, That any person who has registered and paid the special tax as an importer, manufacturer, compounder, or producer, as required by subdivisions (1) and (2) of this subsection, may deal in, dispense, or give away marihuana imported, manufactured, compounded, or produced by him without further payment of the tax imposed by this section.

(b) Where a tax under subdivision (1), (2), or (5) is payable on July 1 of any year, it shall be computed for 1 year; where any such tax is payable on any other day, it shall be computed proportionately from the first day of the month in which the liability for the tax accrued to the following July 1.

(c) In the event that any person subject to a tax imposed by this section engages in any of the activities enumerated in subsection (a) of this section at more than one place, such person shall pay the tax with respect to each such place.

(d) Except as otherwise provided, whenever more than one of the activities enumerated in subsection (a) of this section is carried on by the same person at the same time, such person shall pay the tax for each such activity according to the respective rates prescribed.

(e) Any person subject to the tax imposed by this section shall, upon payment of such tax, register his name or style and his place or places of business with the collector of the district in which such place or places of business are located.

(f) Collectors are authorized to furnish, upon written request, to any person a certified copy of the names of any or all persons who may be listed in their respective collection districts as special taxpayers under this section, upon payment of a fee of $1 for each 100 of such names or fraction thereof upon such copy so requested.

SEC. 3. (a) No employee of any person who has paid the special tax and registered, as required by section 2 of this act, acting within the scope of his employment, shall be required to register and pay such special tax.

(b) An officer or employee of the United States, any State, Territory, the District of Columbia, or insular possession, or political subdivision, who, in the exercise of his official duties, engages in any of the activities enumerated in section 2 of this act shall not be required to register or pay the special tax, but his right to this exemption shall be evidenced in such manner as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe.

SEC. 4. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person required to register and pay the special tax under the provisions of section 2 to import, manufacture, produce, compound, sell, deal in, dispense, distribute, prescribe, administer, or give away marihuana without having so registered and paid such tax.

(b) In any suit or proceeding to enforce the liability imposed by this section or section 2, if proof is made that marihuana was at any time growing upon land under the control of the defendant, such proof shall be presumptive evidence that at such time the defendant was a producer and liable under this section as well as under section 2.

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person who shall not have paid the special tax and registered, as required by section 2, to send, ship, carry, transport, or deliver any marihuana within any Territory, the District of Columbia, any insular possession, or the Canal Zone, or from any State, Territory, the District of Columbia, any insular possession of the United States, or the Canal Zone, into any other State, Territory, the District of Columbia, insular possession of the United States, or the Canal Zone: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall apply to any common carrier engaged in transporting marihuana; or to any employee of any person who shall have registered and paid the special tax as required by section 2 while acting within the scope of his employment; or to any person who shall deliver marihuana which has been prescribed or dispensed by a physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner registered under section 2, who has been employed to prescribe for the particular patient receiving such marihuana; or to any United States, State, county, municipal, District, Territorial, or insular officer or official acting within the scope of his official duties.

SEC. 6 (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, whether or not required to pay a special tax and register under section 2, to transfer marihuana, except in pursuance of a written order of the person to whom such marihuana is transferred, on a form to be issued in blank for that purpose by the Secretary.

(b) Subject to such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, nothing contained in this section shall apply—

(1) To a transfer of marihuana to a patient by a physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner registered under section 2, in the course of his professional practice only: Provided, That such physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner shall keep a record of all such marihuana transferred, showing the amount transferred and the name and address of the patient to whom such marihuana is transferred, and such record shall be kept for a period of 2 years from the date of the transfer of such marihuana, and subject to inspection as provided in section 11.

(2) To a transfer of marihuana, made in good faith by a dealer to a consumer under and in pursuance of a written prescription issued by a physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner registered under section 2: Provided, That such prescription shall be dated as of the day on which signed and shall be signed by the physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner who issues the same: Provided further, That such dealer shall preserve such prescription for a period of 2 years from the day on which such prescription is filled so as to be readily accessible for inspection by the officers, agents, employees, and officials mentioned in section 11.

(3) To the sale, exportation, shipment, or delivery of marihuana by any person within the United States, any Territory, the District of Columbia, any of the insular possessions of the United States or the Canal Zone, to any person in any foreign country regulating the entry of marihuana, if such sale, shipment, or delivery of marihuana is made in accordance with such regulations for importation into such foreign country as are prescribed by such foreign country, such regulations to be promulgated from time to time by the Secretary of State of the United States.

(4) To a transfer of marihuana to any officer or employee of the United States Government or of any State, Territorial, District, county, or municipal or insular government lawfully engaged in making purchases thereof for the various departments of the Army and Navy, the Public Health Service, and for Government, State, Territorial, District, county, or municipal or insular hospitals or prisons.

(5) To a transfer of any seeds of the plant Cannabis sativa L. to a person, registered as a producer under section 2, for use by such person for the further production of such plant, or to a person, registered under section 2 as a manufacturer, importer, or compounder, for use by such person for the manufacture of birdseed or for the manufacture of seed oil, seed cake, or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture, or preparation of such oil or cake.

(c) The Secretary shall cause suitable forms to be prepared for the purposes before mentioned and shall cause them to be distributed to collectors for sale. The price at which such forms shall be sold by said collectors shall be fixed by the Secretary, but shall not exceed 2 cents each. Whenever any collector shall sell any of such forms he shall cause the date of sale, the name and address of the proposed vendor, the name and address of the purchaser, and the amount of marihuana ordered to be plainly written or stamped thereon before delivering the same.

(d) Each such order form sold by a collector shall be prepared by him and shall include an original and two copies, any one of which shall be admissible in evidence as an original. The original and one copy shall be given by the collector to the purchaser thereof. The original shall in turn be given by the purchaser thereof to any person who shall, in pursuance thereof, transfer marihuana to him and shall be preserved by such person for a period of 2 years so as to be readily accessible for inspection by any officer, agent, or employee mentioned in section 11. The copy given to the purchaser by the collector shall be retained by the purchaser and preserved for a period of 2 years so as to be readily accessible to inspection by any officer, agent, or employee mentioned in section 11. The second copy shall be preserved in the records of the collector.

SEC. 7. (a) There shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all transfers of marihuana which are required by section 6 to be carried out in pursuance of written order forms taxes at the following rates:

(1) Upon each transfer to any person who has paid the special tax and registered under section 2 of this act, $1 per ounce of marihuana or fraction thereof.

(2) Upon each transfer to any person who has not paid the special tax and registered under section 2 of this act, $100 per ounce of marihuana or fraction thereof.

(b) Such tax shall be paid by the transferee at the time of securing each order form and shall be in addition to the price of such form. Such transferee shall be liable for the tax imposed by this section but in the event that the transfer is made in violation of section 6 without an order form and without payment of the transfer tax imposed by this section, the transferor shall also be liable for such tax.

(c) Payment of the tax herein provided shall be represented by appropriate stamps to be provided by the Secretary and said stamps shall be affixed by the collector or his representative to the original order form.

(d) All provisions of law relating to the engraving, issuance, sale, accountability, cancelation, and destruction of tax-paid stamps provided for in the internal-revenue laws shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with this act, be extended and made to apply to stamps provided for in this section.

(e) All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by the act of December 17, 1914 (38 Stat. 785; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 26, secs. 1040–1061, 1383–1391), as amended, shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this act, be applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by this act.

SEC. 8. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person who is a transferee required to pay the transfer tax imposed by section 7 to acquire or otherwise obtain any marihuana without having paid such tax; and proof that any person shall have had in his possession any marihuana and shall have failed, after reasonable notice and demand by the collector, to produce the order form required by section 6 to be retained by him, shall be presumptive evidence of guilt under this section and of liability for the tax imposed by section 7.

(b) No liability shall be imposed by virtue of this section upon any duly authorized officer of the Treasury Department engaged in the enforcement of this act or upon any duly authorized officer of any State, or Territory, or of any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or of any insular possession of the United States, who shall be engaged in the enforcement of any law or municipal ordinance dealing with the production, sale, prescribing, dispensing, dealing in, or distributing of marihuana.

SEC. 9. (a) Any marihuana which has been imported, manufactured, compounded, transferred, or produced in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture and, except as inconsistent with the provisions of this act, all the provisions of internal-revenue laws relating to searches, seizures, and forfeitures are extended to include marihuana.

(b) Any marihuana which may be seized by the United States Government from any person or persons charged with any violation of this act shall upon conviction of the person or persons from whom seized be confiscated by and forfeited to the United States.

(c) Any marihuana seized or coming into the possession of the United States in the enforcement of this act, the owner or owners of which are unknown, shall be confiscated by and forfeited to the United States.

(d) The Secretary is hereby directed to destroy any marihuana confiscated by and forfeited to the United States under this section or to deliver such marihuana to any department, bureau, or other agency of the United States Government, upon proper application therefor under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

SEC. 10. (a) Every person liable to any tax imposed by this act shall keep such books and records, render under oath such statements, make such returns, and comply with such rules and regulations as the Secretary may from time to time prescribe.

(b) Any person who shall be registered under the provisions of section 2 in any internal-revenue district shall, whenever required so to do by the collector of the district, render to the collector a true and correct statement or return, verified by affidavits, setting forth the quantity of marihuana received or harvested by him during such period immediately preceding the demand of the collector, not exceeding 3 months, as the said collector may fix and determine. If such person is not solely a producer, he shall set forth in such statement or return the names of the persons from whom said marihuana was received, the quantity in each instance received from such persons, and the date when received.

SEC. 11. The order forms and copies thereof and the prescriptions and records required to be preserved under the provisions of section 6, and the statements or returns filed in the office of the collector of the district under the provisions of section 10 (b) shall be open to inspection by officers, agents, and employees of the Treasury Department duly authorized for that purpose, and such officers of any State, or Territory, or of any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or of any insular possession of the United States as shall be charged with the enforcement of any law or municipal ordinance regulating the production, sale, prescribing, dispensing, dealing in, or distributing of marihuana. Each collector shall be authorized to furnish, upon written request, copies of any of the said statements or returns filed in his office to any of such officials of any State or Territory, or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any insular possession of the United States as shall be entitled to inspect the said statements or returns filed in the office of the said collector, upon the payment of a fee of $1 for each 100 words or fraction thereof in the copy or copies so requested.

SEC. 12. Any person who is convicted of a violation of any provision of this act shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 13. It shall not be necessary to negative any exemptions set forth in this act in any complaint, information, indictment, or other writ or proceeding laid or brought under this act, and the burden of proof of any such exemption shall be upon the defendant. In the absence of the production of evidence by the defendant that he has complied with the provisions of section 2 relating to registration or that he has complied with the provisions of section 6 relating to order forms, he shall be presumed not to have complied with such provisions of such sections, as the case may be.

SEC. 14. The Secretary is authorized to make, prescribe, and publish all necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act and to confer or impose any of the rights, privileges, powers, and duties conferred or imposed upon him by this act upon such officers or employees of the Treasury Department as he shall designate or appoint.

SEC. 15. The provisions of this act shall apply to the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, the Canal Zone, and the insular possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands. In Puerto Rico the administration of this act, the collection of the special taxes and transfer taxes, and the issuance of the order forms provided for in section 6 shall be performed by the appropriate internal-revenue officers of that Government, and all revenues collected under this act in Puerto Rico shall accrue intact to the general Government thereof. The President is hereby authorized and directed to issue such Executive orders as will carry into effect in the Canal Zone and the Virgin Islands the intent and purpose of this act by providing for the registration with appropriate officers and the imposition of the special and transfer taxes upon all persons in the Canal Zone and the Virgin Islands who import, manufacture, produce, compound, sell, deal in, dispense, prescribe, administer, or give away marihuana.

SEC. 16. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 17. This act shall take effect on the first day of the second month after the month during which it is enacted.

SEC. 18. This act may be cited as the "Marihuana Tax Act of 1937."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York, Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, Mr. DIES, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. MAHON of Texas asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TEIGAN] may have permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein an editorial in the Philadelphia Record of Monday, June 14, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the United States Daily.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. MCGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House this afternoon is to endeavor to clear up some confusion and misunderstanding which I am aware exists in the minds of Members of Congress regarding the so-called and once popularly styled old-age pension movement as the "Townsend plan."

It is well known in Congress and throughout the country that I was the first sponsor in Congress of this Townsend plan which, for a time, justly boasted of a vast following among the people, but which is now a complete and total wreck due, I believe, wholly to the erratic and dubious methods employed by the man whose name the movement bore.

When I came to Washington as a new Member of the Seventy-fourth Congress I felt that if I could help in any way to secure a Federal pension for the aged citizens of our country not otherwise provided for in national legislation, I would have performed a real service. I felt that the effort to achieve this desirable goal would be greatly speeded if there were an organized movement back of it. And I found that this was the case. In my home State of California and in every State of the Union there were thousands of Townsend Clubs, active and filled with the spirit of crusade, the memberships increasing by leaps and bounds until at last it loomed as the greatest movement in the political history of this Republic.

A GREAT ORGANIZER

This amazing achievement was the work of Robert E. Clements who ranks as perhaps the greatest organizer I have ever contacted in a somewhat long career both as a public official and a working journalist. The movement came to attain such political power and influence that no candidate for public office anywhere in the country could afford to ignore it.

In close touch with Clements during the heyday of the movement, I saw him forging ahead to the accomplishment of his objective, which was the election of a sufficient number of pledged Townsendites to control the Congress. And I am here to tell you he was on his way. He had mapped the United States into congressional districts in which he was throwing Townsend Clubs hourly like a general throwing new armies into a battle. He was on his way to have in every congressional district in this country a balance of political power, if not a clear majority of the electorate. The result at which he aimed was to seat in this present Congress a bloc sufficiently strong in numbers to tie the Congress in a knot. To create a situation that would compel the Congress to bargain with the Townsendites, or, if in the event of refusal, to find itself unable to turn a wheel.

And he certainly would have brought that very situation about had not happened a certain unexpected and unlooked for thing.

DR. TOWNSEND'S MONKEY WRENCH

The thing that happened was the sudden decision of Dr. Townsend himself to throw a monkey wrench into the Clements machinery. Able and efficient as Clements was, he made one fatal mistake—he overplayed Dr. Townsend. Clements had realized that the crusade must have an idol, a Peter the Hermit, a Richard of the Lion Heart. And here, to his hand, was an idol more perfect for the purpose than Peter and Richard put together. An old country doctor whose heart burned with love for all humanity. An old country doctor who had forded swollen streams and braved wintry blizzards to allay human pain and save human life.

So well did Clements succeed in this that Dr. Townsend became the best known and most talked of man in America. His picture appeared daily in the great newspapers and constantly in the magazines. His every utterance, indeed his slightest word, was greedily devoured by news hawks everywhere. Every nod of his head was news. He was front-page stuff to the exclusion of all possible rivalry.

At the same time, however, the news writers sensed that the fine Italian hand of Clements was back of it all. So, the news began to take note of Clements. His picture also began to appear in the newspapers and magazines. He also was regarded as news.

The good doctor could not stand for a rival. He had come to believe he really was what Clements had built him up to be in the minds of the crusaders. And when this state of affairs had come to pass, Clements had to go. There was no room for two idols.

CLEMENTS EXITS

The doctor had the power to act. The movement was controlled wholly by a common-law corporation composed of three directors of whom the doctor and his brother were—and I think still are—two.

On 6 hours' notice one eventful day Clements was summarily kicked out of the bed he occupied. But he left clean sheets behind him. No debts, every obligation met and discharged, $130,000 in the bank and a reserve fund of $15,000 for the Townsend Weekly.

With the exit of Clements went the brains of the Townsend movement. It is a long story from that day to this. A long story of a once tremendous power crumbled to wreck and ruin.

ENTER MR. JOHNSON

There is now on the Clerk's desk of the House a petition to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from a House resolution which represents this wreck. It is called "the general welfare act" by its author, the latest of the adventurers to enter the once lush green Townsend pastures which are now a waste of withered grass. It is a strange document. I am embarassed beyond words to learn that Members of the House think it is my bill and have signed the discharge petition in that understanding. It is not my bill. I have nothing to do with it. I trust that Members of the House who have signed the petition will remove their names from it. If they do not do so I fear they will live to regret it. They are in danger of losing the respect and confidence of the people. Their names on the petition places them in the unenviable position of aiding and abetting an effort to raise $5,000,000 in nickels and dimes from the old folks on the promise of Dr. Townsend that he be given that huge sum to enable him to pass his $200 a month "general welfare" bill in the present Congress. That is what your name means on the petition. Your names have appeared in the Townsend Weekly 6 consecutive weeks as backers of the campaign to get the old folks to raise $5,000,000, hand it over to Dr. Townsend without any strings on it, and on the understanding that they will get $200-a-month pensions at this session of Congress—not away off in the future, but now. That is the word, the word "now", published in the Townsend Weekly. My dear colleagues, can you afford to lend your names to this palpable fraud? You cannot. You must take your names off the petition.

BUT THE FIGHT GOES ON

But let no one think for one moment that the collapse of the Townsend organization means that there is an end to the fight for old-age pensions.

On the contrary, the fight goes on in greater vigor, greater strength, and far greater determination than ever. The thousands of old-age pension clubs throughout the country are still intact. Thousands of new clubs are being organized. As an instance. let me cite the case of the famous Club 93 of Los Angeles, with a membership exceeding 100,000 men and women. It holds daily meetings. The founder and organizer of this vast organization, Mr. George Highley, is now on a speaking tour of the States, addressing huge audiences. He addressed a gathering of 10,000 people in Indiana last week. He is at present in Washington and, I believe, at this moment sitting in the House gallery. No nickels and dimes are being collected from these clubs to maintain a central oligarchy in Chicago, Washington, or elsewhere. The clubs handle their own funds and keep their nickels and dimes in their own pockets.

THE REAL PENSION BILL

There has been no disbandment of the forces, but merely a purge. These forces are now behind a bill, H. R. 10, which I introduced in the House last January. It is a bill worked out of the experiences of the past. It fixes a pension to be paid pro rata from a levy of a transaction tax, the amount not to exceed $100 a month. The compulsory spending clause has been eliminated. It is a straight pension bill and nothing else. It is not designed to cure all human ills, as does this preposterous, so-called general welfare bill of Mr. JOHNSON's, a petition in favor of which some Members of the House have unwittingly signed.

No. The battle to secure the aged citizens of our country against want is not ended. It has not been abandoned even. Indeed, the fight has just begun.

I have asked a hearing for H. R. 10 by the Ways and Means Committee, from which I shall doubtless hear in due time. I am proceeding in the regular way.

And I now ask all Members of this House to secure copies of H. R. 10, to study it, and to help to perform a duty which should have been performed long ago. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

FLAG-RAISING DAY

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, today the people of these United States display flags, large and small, in commemoration of that June 14 of 160 years ago when Congress resolved:

> That the flag of the United States be 13 stripes, alternate red and white; that the Union be 13 stars, white on a blue field, representing a constellation.

No State, however great, however prosperous; no organization, no matter how influential or how powerful; no person, whether he be rich or poor, aristocrat or peasant, should forget the debt owed to these Thirteen English Colonies that made this great Nation possible. It is this feeling of gratitude which led to the establishment of Flag-raising Day, which was first recognized on June 14, 1894, when, at the request of the Sons of the Revolution and the Colonial Dames of America, the Stars and Stripes were raised on all public buildings.

As early as 1700 most of the Colonies had badges of their own to distinguish their vessels from each other's and from those of England, and with the coming of the Revolutionary War each State adopted a flag of its own. But with the Declaration of Independence, a common emblem of unity was called for, and in 1775 a committee was appointed to consider a design for a single flag for the 13 States. The result of this consideration was the recommendation that the union jack be retained in the upper corner next the staff, with 13 horizontal stripes alternately red and white for the remainder of the field of the flag. George Washington displayed this Grand Union or Cambridge flag when he first took command of the Army at Cambridge. This was the flag that John Paul Jones hoisted, not over the Bonhomme Richard, but over his first naval ship, the Ranger.

This flag, bearing the British union jack, was not altered until the Declaration of Independence, nearly 1 year later. With the signing of that declaration the new nation refused to use the union jack as a part of their flag, and so, on June 14, 1777, that congressional resolution which provided the foundation of our present emblem was passed, a flag with 13 alternate red and white stripes for the Thirteen Original Colonies and 13 white stars on a field of blue. The Treaty of Paris in 1783, by which Great Britain acknowledged each one of these Thirteen Colonies by name to be a free, sovereign, and independent state, admitted this, our national flag, to the august company of historic banners of the Old World. There is today one of those great banners older than ours. This one is the white cross on a field of red, that represents the free confederate states of Switzerland.

Let us never lose sight of the debt the whole world owes to these Thirteen Colonies. Those 13 stripes stand to Europe and the world as the sign and token of a free people requiring of their government a charter of liberty, a written contract, limiting the power of rulers and reserving to themselves all the powers not granted to those rulers. Not until a Bill of Rights was embodied in the first 10 amendments did the Colonies agree to a ratification of their Constitution. And since that time, every State, without exception, has repeated in her own constitution, this guaranty of the personal, religious, and intellectual freedom of man.

Whenever we fling our banner to the breeze, we are apt to speak of it as Old Glory. No doubt this is done partly on account of its age, because our flag is 23 years older than the present flag of Great Britain, 17 years older than that of France, nearly 100 years older than the tricolors of Germany and Italy, and 8 years older than the flag of Spain.

But the chief reason why we speak of our national banner as Old Glory, is its glorious history. Wherever it was hoisted, tyranny had to give way to freedom; despotism was superseded by liberty. It had its origin in that long and tedious conflict that brought independence to the Colonies. In 1812 it demonstrated to the world that American seamen cannot be compelled to serve on foreign ships. In 1845 Old Glory gave liberty to Texas. In 1861 it carried freedom to 4,000,000 slaves. In 1898 it spread abroad the spirit of true liberty in Cuba and the Philippines. What the Stars and Stripes achieved during the World War is scarcely necessary to recount. You are acquainted with the facts. We all know that it led our armies on to victory.

Moreover, Capt. C. P. Hall carried our national emblem into the Arctic regions; Rear Admiral Peary hoisted our national colors at the North Pole; and in 1909–10 the Smithsonian African expedition, under the direction of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, carried the American flag into the Dark Continent.

In view of these facts, how appropriate that we should show our appreciation of our national blessings and our triumphant banner.

Of course, a true American always honors his national emblem and all that it stands for, but it is only proper that we should, at least once a year, set aside one day for the express purpose of giving due respect to our flag.

Let us then renew our pledges of loyalty, allegiance, and obedience. Let us think of what it really means to be an American at this advanced stage of our country's history. Let us be mindful of America's blessings and opportunities and, with Longfellow, say:

> Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
> Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
> Our faith triumphant, o'er our fears,
> Are all with thee, are all with thee.

[Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DOCKWEILER, indefinitely, on account of death in the family.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1937

Rev. Richard A. Cartmell, assistant rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Heavenly Father, who art beyond the highest reaches of human thought and yet the very breath of life, we pray Thee that, amid the feverish turmoil of our worldly needs, we may never lose the sense of Thine abiding presence. May Thy indwelling impart to us such consecration and depth of purpose that we forget those smaller issues of self which provoke the spirit of strife. So draw our wills into Thy greater will that, though there be diversities of gifts among us, yet there may be one spirit. Engraft in our hearts the conviction that it is Thy work, not ours, we are called upon to do, and that when we have employed the highest of our human powers and still the way is dark, Thou art there to lead us on and bring to pass that which is beyond our reach. Through Him who came to set men free, Jesus our King. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, June 14, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2924) for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of war, catastrophes of nature, and other causes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3687) to extend the period during which the purposes specified in section 7 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act may be carried out by payments by the Secretary of Agriculture to producers, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6869. An act to regulate the occupation and practices of cosmetology, to create a District of Columbia Board of Cosmetology for the examination and licensing of persons to carry on or to teach such practices, to insure the better education of such practitioners, to provide rules regulating the proper conduct and sanitation of cosmetological establishments and schools, for the protection of the public health, and to provide penalties for violation thereof; and

H. R. 6906. An act to impose an occupational excise tax upon certain dealers in marihuana, to impose a transfer tax upon certain dealings in marihuana, and to safeguard the revenue therefrom by registry and recording.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 665. An act for the relief of the estate of Everett P. Sheridan; and

S. 1112. An act awarding a Navy Cross to John W. Thomason and Robert Slover.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

ROBERT F. KELLEY—NOTIFICATION OF CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as in executive session, I desire to submit a request. Yesterday the nomination of Robert F. Kelley to be Foreign Service officer of class 3, a consul general and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, was confirmed. It is necessary that his confirmation be completed, and, out of order, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

DEFAULT IN PAYMENT OF WAR DEBTS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, today is the day upon which the countries owing money to the Government of the United States should make payment. I understand that all except Finland have defaulted. I ask that a short editorial from the Washington Herald relating to the subject be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEFAULT DAY SHOULD BE "KEEP OUT OF WAR DAY"

Almost every other day European cables intimate the regret of the ex-Allies that they ever permitted the default of war debts. Their crying need at present is money, money with which to pursue the insatiable race for armaments. And there is only one place they can get that money—the United States.

To that end London, Paris, and Rome have been figuring out ways and means by which they can circumvent the Johnson Act. One plan is merely to recognize the war debts once more and resume token payments—a pitifully small sum compared with the original debts. Another plan is to pay 5 or 10 cents on the dollar. Still the latest is to negotiate trade agreements, particularly with Great Britain and France, by which they would be permitted to pay off their war debts in kind.

These suggestions might be entertainable were it not for the fact that the sole motive behind them is to get more money out of the United States, and thus drag us eventually into the next war.

For it is axiomatic, as proved conclusively by the Senate Munitions Committee, that war follows trade and loans.

In view of these facts the Washington Herald proposes that instead of bartering the war debts away for a mess of pottage, they become a national monument to remember the last war, and to remind of the dangers of the next.

Hereafter let June 15 become "keep out of war" day—the day on which the war debts of Europe were defaulted. Let that day be burned into the mind of the Nation. Let every veteran of the last war pause to think, on June 15, of the horrors of the past war and its bills which never have been paid.

Let every Gold Star mother and every mother of potential veterans pause to remember, on June 15, the war that was fought "to end wars", and the present drift of the world into the next catastrophe.

If now the defaulted war debts can be seared into the national mind as a reminder that the debts of the last war still are unpaid and that the debts of future wars also never can be paid, then these defaulted debts will be worth far more than any 5 cents or 50 cents or 90 cents on the dollar which Europe would offer.

They will be worth the entire total of $11,000,000,000.

The United States can afford to pay that much and more to stay out of the next war. Let us remember June 15 as "keep out of war" day.

RADIO APPLICATION OF MACKAY RADIO & TELEGRAPH CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 133 (submitted by Mr. BORAH and agreed to May 17, 1937), memoranda and reports prepared by various departments of the Commission in connection with the applications of the Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., for modification of licenses to add Oslo, Norway, as a point of communication, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent memorial relating to protection of the copper-mining industry

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

The production of copper constitutes a major industry of a number of Western States, and in certain respects it is the leading industry of Arizona.

It is the principal resource and dependence of a score or more populous cities and towns of this State.

It provides the sole means of support of many hundreds of Arizona families, and indirectly of several thousands.

It is the largest purchaser of Arizona farm products, and contributes in important measure to the prosperity of Arizona farmers, fruit growers, and stockmen.

It accounts for the use of large quantities of Arizona timber and lumber, and is a source of material profit to the transportation industry.

Its annual expenditures for improvements run into the millions, and it forms an extensive market for the heavy goods industries.

As a source of essential war material it is of utmost importance that the copper mines of Arizona and other Western States be kept in continuous operation, for the renewal of equipment, unwatering mines, and renovating abandoned workings is a long and expensive procedure.

These are just a few of the reasons why it is of the utmost importance that the copper industry of the United States be afforded the benefits of a price level for raw copper consistent with profitable operation.

To maintain such a price level it is necessary that dependable protection be provided against the influx of foreign copper produced by means of the cheapest of labor and under conditions more conducive to low production costs than those which characterize the copper deposits of this country.

Under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress approved June 28, 1935 (ch. 333, U. S. Stat., 74th Cong.) the present protective duty on copper of 4 cents per pound expires on June 30 of the present year. With the removal of such protection a comparatively small drop in the world price of copper will almost certainly result in the invasion of United States markets by huge supplies of foreign copper against which it will be impossible for home producers to compete, with the inevitable result of the closing of many mines.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona (the Senate concurring) earnestly requests:

1. That at least the present protection afforded to United States copper be continued and made permanent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the statement of Wilhelm Kuehne, secretary-treasurer of the Federation of Building Trades Workmen of America, Jamaica, N. Y., relative to the so-called Black-Connery bill, to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ASHURST presented memorials of sundry citizens of the State of Arizona, remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1270) to regulate barbers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2257) to provide old-age compensation for the citizens of the United States, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Beloit, Elk City, Eureka, Howard, Independence, Moline, Neodesha, Pittsburg, and Severy, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the Federal excise tax on cosmetics, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish the Federal Reserve System as at present constituted, and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from John B. Wenzler, Esq., of South Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the alleged persecution of the Catholic Church in Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the enactment of pending legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which was ordered to lie on the table.

FARMERS' DRAFT OF PROPOSED AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. BANKHEAD presented a paper in the nature of a petition from officers of various farm organizations, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 10, 1937.

To the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Chairmen and Members of the Agricultural Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, for and on behalf of themselves and for the organizations they represent and for the producers of the major agricultural commodities in the areas they represent, hereby endorse the provisions of the farmers' draft of the proposed bill designated "Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1937", dated June 10, 1937 [which farmers' draft is attached hereto]. The undersigned will use every rightful influence before Congress to secure support for this bill and to aggressively support the provisions of the proposed bill with their respective organizations and in their respective areas.

The large acreages already planted to the basic agricultural commodities covered in the bill are such that if followed with normal growing conditions will result in burdensome surpluses and resultant serious declines in the price levels for such commodities.

We therefore respectfully urge your favorable consideration of the proposed bill and its enactment by Congress before its summer recess, that the Government may be prepared to establish a permanent program in cooperation with farmers to control excessive supplies as may be necessary to keep the price levels of these commodities on a fair and stable basis and to insure the consumers adequate supplies at fair prices.

Respectfully submitted.

Edw. A. O'Neal, president, American Farm Bureau Federation, Florence, Ala.; Earl C. Smith, president, Illinois Agricultural Association, Detroit, Ill.; C. Y. Thompson, president, Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation, Lincoln, Nebr.; J. W. Schwartz, president, Wisconsin Farm Bureau Federation, Spring Green, Wis.; A. D. Stewart, Mississippi Cooperative Cotton Association, Jackson, Miss.; Francis Johnson, president, Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, Des Moines, Iowa; R. E. Aldrich, Mississippi Cotton Cooperative Association, Michigan City, Miss.; H. G. Lucas, president, Texas Agricultural Association, Brownwood, Tex.; F. W. White, president, Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, Marshall, Minn.; H. G. Chalkley, Jr., president, Louisiana Farm Bureau Federation, Lake Charles, La.; H. B. Test, president, South Dakota Farm Bureau Federation, Frederick, S. Dak.; Chas. G. Henry, general manager, Mid-South Cotton Growers' Association, Memphis, Tenn.; O. O. Wolf, president, Kansas Farm Bureau, Ottawa, Kans.; N. C. Williamson, president, American Cotton Cooperative Association, New Orleans, La.; V. C. Marshall, Texas Agricultural Association, Temple, Tex.; Hayden Perry, Robstown, Tex.; George G. Chance, Texas Agricultural Association, Bryan, Tex.; R. E. Short, president, Arkansas Farm Bureau, and vice president, Arkansas Rice Growers' Cooperative Association, Brinkley, Ark.; Ben Kilgore, executive secretary, Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation, Louisville, Ky.; Addison Drake, Indiana Farm Bureau, Inc., Fairbanks, Ind.; R. W. Blackburn, president, California Farm Bureau Federation, South Pasadena, Calif.; J. F. Porter, president, Tennessee Farm Bureau Federation, Columbia, Tenn.; George M. Putnam, president, New Hampshire Farm Bureau Federation, Concord, N. H.; J. E. Winslow, president, North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation, Greenville, N. C.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1626) to amend the military record of Maurice D. Pryor, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 727) thereon.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN TAXES

Mr. HARRISON. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, with amendments, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 731) thereon.

The joint resolution, as reported, proposes to extend the so-called nuisance taxes for 1 year. I may state in this connection that I hope to call up the joint resolution for the extension of taxes at the earliest possible date. The law expires on the 30th of this month and some action by the Senate is necessary at an early date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

PRINTING OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S REPORT ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report the recent reports of the Federal Trade Commission on Principal Farm Products—Agricultural Income Inquiry, and on Fruits, Vegetables, and Grapes—Agricultural Income Inquiry—prepared in response to Public Resolution No. 61, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 27, 1935, and I move that they be printed as a Senate document. I ask that this motion may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

On page 3, line 4, after the figures "$380,000,000" to add the following: "of which sum not more than $20,000,000 shall be allocated for a national census of population, employment, and unemployment, to be taken at the earliest date, for the purpose of obtaining authentic information as to the number of persons in each of the several States and all subdivisions thereof who are employed and unemployed, classified by sex, age, customary occupation, and such other pertinent standards as may be advisable of all such employed and unemployed persons, and the causes and duration of such unemployment."

MEMBERSHIP OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF PROBLEMS

Mr. HATCH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 145), which was referred to the Special Committee on Investigation of Unemployment and Relief Problems:

Resolved, That the membership of the special committee of the Senate to study, survey, and investigate the problems of unemployment and relief, created under Senate Resolution No. 36, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, agreed to June 10, 1937, is hereby increased by two Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

SYNOPSIS OF REPORT ON THE COLORADO-BIG THOMPSON PROJECT (S. DOC. 80)

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the text of a Synopsis of the Report on the Colorado-Big Thompson Project—Plan of Development and Cost Estimate, prepared by the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, may be printed, without the illustrations, as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR GIBSON AT WEST RUTLAND, VT.

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a Memorial Day address delivered by him at West Rutland, Vt., on May 31, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICA'S NEW TRADE SHIPS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GUFFEY

[Mr. OVERTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject "America's New Trade Ships", delivered by Senator GUFFEY on June 14, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LEE

[Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator LEE on June 14, 1937, on the subject "The Flag of the United States", which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY SENATOR BLACK ON FAIR LABOR STANDARDS BILL

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator BLACK on the 7th instant, relative to the so-called fair labor standards bill, which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICAN-JAPANESE TRADE RELATIONS—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY ROPER

[Mr. COPELAND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on American-Japanese trade relations, delivered by Hon. Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY PERKINS ON FAIR LABOR STANDARDS BILL

[Mr. WAGNER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement made by Secretary Perkins before the joint hearing of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and the House Committee on Labor on the 4th instant, relative to the so-called fair labor standards bill of 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE SUPREME COURT AND THE SOUTH

[Mr. COPELAND asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by Frederick H. Allen, of Charleston, S. C., and published in the New York Herald Tribune, which appears in the Appendix.]

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the emergency relief resolution, being House Joint Resolution 361.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 3, to insert the heading "Title I."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "balances", to insert "which have on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted", so as to read:

That in order to continue to provide relief, and work relief on useful public projects, in the United States and its Territories and possessions (including projects heretofore approved for the Works Progress Administration, which projects shall not be subject to the limitations hereinafter specified in this section), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1938, and to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President, $1,500,000,000, together with such unexpended balances which have on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted, as the President may determine, of appropriations made by (a) the second paragraph of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, as supplemented by the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, and (b) section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, etc.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado, in charge of the bill, make a statement concerning unexpended balances?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think, in the interest of orderly procedure, the Senator had better do so at this time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the explanation of this particular amendment involves a consideration of the general plan of appropriations, allocations, and obligations of funds allocated and appropriated.

We find from the report of the Director of the Budget, as appears on page 76 of the House hearings on the joint resolution, that on March 31, 1937, there remained unexpended, of the funds which had been appropriated for various relief purposes, $4,514,000,000. This sum represents unexpended balances which come from a series of appropriations for relief and recovery purposes.

The Director of the Budget then gave a statement of items which are to be charged against these unexpended balances, being items for which the Government has incurred obligations, entered into contracts, or in some way bound the unexpended balances. On the 31st of March last these items aggregated $3,741,000,000, leaving an unobligated balance of $773,000,000 on that date. Of course, the unobligated balance is a part of the unexpended balance.

Then the Director of the Budget made an estimate that by reason of the expenditures and obligations to be incurred between the 31st of March and the end of the fiscal year on June 30, 1937, the item of $773,000,000 of unobligated balances would be reduced until there would remain only $223,000,000 unobligated. This unobligated balance is derived from a series of seven different funds. In April 1935 there was an appropriation of $4,880,000,000; in 1936 an appropriation of $1,425,000,000; an appropriation of $789,000,000, the date of which escapes me at the moment; in June 1933 another appropriation of $3,300,000,000; in June 1934 an appropriation of $525,000,000 for drought purposes, and in the same act an appropriation for emergency relief of $899,000,000; and on February 15, 1934, another appropriation of $950,000,000 for relief.

Mr. President, it has been the custom, as relief bills have been passed, to reach back and reappropriate all unexpended balances. In the unexpended balances are included the unallocated and unobligated balances. Your Committee on Appropriations has had considerable difficulty in ascertaining the figures upon which the different members of the committee could agree. The figures given by the Director of the Budget in his testimony before the House committee, as I have said, show an unobligated balance of $223,000,000 on June 30, 1937, according to his best estimate. Another estimate given me a few days ago is $222,000,000 on the same date, being in substantial conformity with the earlier estimate. However, there is some uncertainty as to the amount of unobligated balances that will be available on the 30th day of June.

It seemed to a majority of the committee that Congress should definitely know the amount of money it is appropriating; that, instead of reaching back and taking undetermined and, in a measure, undeterminable amounts of unexpended and unobligated balances, we should fix the amount which we propose to appropriate, so that on the 1st day of July the President would know exactly the amount of money that is placed in his hands for expenditure for relief purposes, and so that we, as Members of the Congress, would know the amount of money that we have placed in the President's hands for expenditure for relief purposes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to have the Senator discuss the testimony of Mr. Bell, Acting Director of the Budget, found at the bottom of page 83 of the House hearings. He testified there would be $223,000,000 unobligated from past appropriations. Representative BOYLAN asked:

> How much of the $223,000,000 would be available to the Works Progress Administration?
>
> Mr. BELL. I suppose there would be in the neighborhood of one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five million dollars, because it takes about that amount of money to supply a cushion for the Works Progress Administration to operate on so many projects over the country. It has to spread its money over the entire country, sometimes over forty or fifty thousand projects.
>
> Mr. BOYLAN. You do not think it would be more than that?
> Mr. BELL. It runs during the year anywhere from one hundred to one hundred and fifty million dollars as a cushion, and they could not operate without it.

I take it from Mr. Bell's testimony that if the amendment which the Senator favors should be adopted, it would mean in practical effect that instead of appropriating $1,500,000,000, we would be appropriating that amount less the amount which Mr. Bell says they must have upon which to operate.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that that is not my understanding. Necessarily a so-called "cushion" exists in any business. A certain amount of cash is necessary for the conduct of the daily business. The relief authorities at this time have adequate funds to carry them up until the 1st day of July. There is no question about that. There is a question as to how much they have. They have $223,000,000 prospectively as of the 1st of July. On the 20th of May, according to Mr. Bell, the unobligated balances were $474,000,000. That was some 3 weeks ago.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whatever the amounts may be, as I understand, unless they are reappropriated they will lapse as of July 1 and will not be available for expenditure after that time. Is that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So, while the Congress heretofore has appropriated this money, the mere fact that it cannot be expended by July 1 makes it unavailable for any future expenditure under the Works Progress Administration or any of the other relief organizations. That is true; is it?

Mr. ADAMS. It is. What we are trying to do by this joint resolution is to make the relief appropriations conform to the usual, customary, statutory method of handling Government funds.

The statutes which have been on the books for years provide that when an appropriation is made it is for the fiscal year, and moneys unexpended at the end of the fiscal year are not to be drawn from the Treasury, but lapse, unless as is the case in some appropriations the Congress has made the appropriation available until expended, or until some future date. But an ordinary appropriation merely providing a million dollars for a certain purpose is an appropriation for the fiscal year, and the unobligated portions of the money will lapse so as to be unexpendable after that time. Of course, if contracts have been made which obligate the appropriation, that money may be paid out at any time within 2 years after the end of the fiscal year. That is also the provision of the statute.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. BONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, of course, under the general law, if these moneys or any moneys are not expended by the 30th day of June, they go back into the Treasury. That is the rule of law.

Mr. ADAMS. They do not go back; they simply do not come out of the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are not to be used or expended.

Mr. ADAMS. They cannot be spent.

Mr. McKELLAR. They cannot be spent. Is it not well-established practice—do we not do it in almost every appropriation bill—to reappropriate unexpended balances? Coming down to relief measures, up to date we have passed seven relief measures. Have we not in each and every one of those measures reappropriated unexpended balances?

Mr. ADAMS. We have; and, while the Senator is on his feet, may I ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly. I shall be delighted to answer it, if I can.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has been presiding as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I ask the Senator if we have not had the greatest difficulty in ascertaining accurately the amount of unexpended balances?

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator mean the case of relief appropriations?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is true. We have had a good deal of difficulty; but I think there is no question about the substantial amount of the balances that will remain in the Treasury on the 1st of July. I think we can establish that amount, and if the Senator has not the figures I think I can furnish them.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator and I both have the figures. The trouble is they do not agree.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think they do agree. I think substantially the amount is about $200,000,000; and when the Senator finishes I shall be very glad to explain the matter as I understand it.

Mr. BONE and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, if, as the Senator indicates, the appropriation lapses, as we all understand that it does, on July 1, may I ask the Senator whether the funds he has referred to—for instance, the funds appropriated in 1935 and 1936—have been reappropriated at any time; or, if not, how can they be made available by reference in this joint resolution? I am very curious about that.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that year by year, bill by bill, we have reached back in this vague way and reappropriated the unexpended balances of appropriations made by the previous bill, so that, whatever those balances may be, they have been carried along and are available to us today; and the question is whether or not we will again reach back over seven different bills and reappropriate the balances, or whether we will say how much money we propose shall be spent.

Mr. BONE. In other words, we have just been carrying these unexpended balances along and holding them in suspension, and they are now available under this joint resolution if we appropriate them. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ADAMS. The question is whether we shall do that.

Mr. BONE. I want to be sure that I have this matter straight in my own mind. It is proposed to appropriate $1,500,000,000 and split it into three or four major brackets, and make it available for relief work in the various fields referred to on pages 2 and 3 of the joint resolution. That apparently is the clear purpose of this measure.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Washington that we have provided the billion and a half dollars specifically. The joint resolution, as it came from the House, added to that amount all the unexpended balances running back to 1933. Then we have said that there are certain compartments in which not to exceed a certain amount may be spent for this purpose and not to exceed a certain amount for that purpose; but our action is not an allocation or an appropriation of those amounts of money for those purposes. The money in the first instance is appropriated for relief and work relief, subject to the discretion and disposition of the President.

Mr. BONE. Is it the Senator's opinion that more than $1,500,000,000 will be available in the long run under this joint resolution?

Mr. ADAMS. Unquestionably, if the joint resolution passes as it came from the House.

Mr. BONE. I have one more question. Adding up the figures which cannot be exceeded in the expenditures, we have $1,500,000,000; so, apparently, even though the language in the joint resolution authorizes the expenditure of any additional sum that may be available, nevertheless the Relief Administration may not spend in excess of $1,500,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that that is exactly the view I and the majority of the committee have taken—that we should appropriate one and one-half billion dollars, fix that sum definitely, give it to the President, and say, "That is the amount of money you are to have, and that is the amount that has been put into these compartments"; and if we merely take away these unobligated balances, it will not affect or reduce the billion and a half dollars or any one of these single compartments of expenditure.

Mr. BONE. Then, if there is, as I recall, somewhere from one hundred to two hundred and twenty million dollars that might be available, it could not be expended under this joint resolution, even though it were available.

Mr. ADAMS. No; if the Senator will read the joint resolution through, I think he will find some very elastic provisions in it.

Mr. BONE. That is what I wanted to get at. I am merely reading the language on pages 2 and 3.

Mr. ADAMS. There are some other provisions which might affect the matter.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The wording of the joint resolution is—

> One billion five hundred million dollars, together with such unexpended balances which have * * * been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted.

In answer to a question, I understood the Senator to say something with reference to $223,000,000. I desire to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the Director of the Budget says that in addition there are certain appropriations, such as the appropriation for highways and the appropriation for an unemployment commission, which appropriations by their phraseology are carried over from year to year, and will not be affected by this language, but will be available.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct. I think those appropriations approximate $100,000,000 in the aggregate.

Mr. BYRNES. And we were unable to get accurate information as to how many appropriations were in that exact status.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, this turning back into the Treasury, or keeping in the Treasury without their appropriation, the unexpended balances, as I understand the Senator, does not apply where contracts have been entered into or obligations made for the expenditure of certain sums out of those unexpended balances. Is that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. But where there is no obligation and no contract, any projects that might have been constructed out of the unexpended balances would have to be taken out of the $1,500,000,000 proposed to be appropriated by the pending measure.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator make that a little clearer?

Mr. BARKLEY. Any projects that are not now contracted for or obligated for, but which would be projected or completed under the unobligated portion of these unexpended balances, would now have to be taken out of the billion and a half dollars which is provided in this joint resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. For instance, if there is $100,000,000 in the two-hundred-and-some-odd million dollars of unexpended balances for which no contracts have been made and no obligations have been incurred, then that $100,000,000 worth of work would come out of the billion and a half dollars appropriated in this joint resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator's question involves several "ifs." He is thinking of work which has not been contracted for and which has not been obligated. Of course if in the future a contract should be made or an obligation incurred, and the money which might have otherwise been applied to it at this time should have ceased to be available, of course it would have to come out of a separate appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, where projects have been approved by the State authorities, the State directors of the W. P. A. or any other of these agencies, and have come up to Washington, but have not yet been approved in Washington—no contract has been made, no obligation has been incurred, but in the normal course of events the projects probably would be approved and carried on under the unexpended balances—that work would have to be done out of this billion and a half dollars.

Mr. ADAMS. I think it should be made clear to the Senator that this provision does not affect the Public Works Administration or any projects which come up as public-works projects.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am speaking of the W. P. A. projects.

Mr. ADAMS. But the Senator is speaking in terms which apply to projects coming here for approval. The Works Progress Administration is the place where persons in need are employed and put to work upon projects. All that is obligated there is the 2 weeks' wages.

Mr. BARKLEY. They go through the same process. Those projects originate locally, come up through the State director, and finally reach Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. If those in charge run out of money, of course, they have to get more money.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask the Senator whether the answer to the question of the Senator from Kentucky is not the statement of Mr. Hopkins, that of the funds available for W. P. A. there is approximately $125,000,000, $65,000,000 of which is to be paid for materials, the other $60,000,000 of which he will obligate for the payment of salaries? He obligates 2 weeks ahead. Therefore on the 1st of July he would apportion $60,000,000 to pay salaries, the money actually to be paid sometime in July. Unless a project were of that character, it would not be affected.

I admit it is a very confusing statement, but the only information we could get from the Director of W. P. A. was that his estimate was that he would have $125,000,000, $65,000,000 of which is obligated for payment of materials, and which will have to be paid out, and the other $60,000,000 will be obligated for the payment of salaries.

Mr. ADAMS. I really want to get back to the answer to the question of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. As I understand the testimony of Mr. Bell, it is necessary for W. P. A. to have between 100,000,000 and 150,000,000 as a cushion, cash on hand. If his testimony is correct—and I am accepting his testimony, knowing also that Mr. Hopkins testified in similar manner—we have a right to assume, and I think we must assume, that on the 30th of June 1938 there will still be the necessity for the 150,000,000, or 100,000,000, whatever the figure may be. It seems to me, therefore, that if we do not make that available to them, we are appropriating for the expenditure during this year, for relief purposes, not a billion and a half but a billion and a half less the 100,000,000 or the 150,000,000. That is the question I wanted to submit.

Mr. ADAMS. As a part of my answer to the Senator, I would say, in the form of a question, does he not think that if we should appropriate not merely a billion and a half, but if there should be an additional 100,000,000 for a cushion, we ought to appropriate in terms of a billion six hundred million, and fix the amount in terms, not leave it to an undetermined balance coming out of funds 5 or 6 or 7 years old?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am in absolute accord with that. I was never more surprised in my life than when I heard the testimony about the funds that had been appropriated back in 1933, 1934, and 1935. But I contend that if we arrive at the figure of a billion and a half dollars as the amount Congress wants to spend on relief this year, we ought to spend that amount, and if it is necessary to increase it to a billion six hundred million dollars, then we should increase the appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the view of the committee on the question of the cushion. I will say to the Senator from Washington that at this time we have more funds than are necessary to supply the cushion and to take us to the 1st of July, that is, we have in the funds now available $223,000,000 of unobligated balances as of July 1. That is more than would be needed for the cushion. We start in on the 1st of July with a brand new $1,500,000,000. There is the cushion to begin with, assuming we did not reappropriate the unobligated balances. There is ample money in the billion and a half to carry the cushion along for 10 or 11 months. I think that is perfectly clear. The question is whether or not we are deciding today that we are going to have to continue relief appropriations after July 1, 1938. The argument of the Senator from Washington is that we are going to have to have another cushion and to continue the appropriations beyond July 1, 1938. In that case, of course, we ought to have a cushion to go on with. I have been unwilling to concede that.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think the Senator is correct in drawing the conclusion that this cushion would be available after the 1st of July.

Mr. ADAMS. There is the billion and a half dollars.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If it is necessary for them to have a hundred million dollars cash on hand, then that will mean that during the months of May and June 1938 they will have spent the money, and they will not have that amount of money to carry them along during the last month or month and a half of the year.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me call the Senator's attention to a misunderstanding which has developed today. The unobligated balance figure is really larger by some $60,000,000 than as given for the reason that prior to the 1st of July they will obligate the expenses for the first 2 weeks of July. The pay roll for the first 2 weeks of July and the cost of all materials to be used in the first 2 weeks, and perhaps for the whole month of July, will be charged up against the fund. So that we have taken off of the unobligated balances and put into the obligated balances money enough to run the Relief Administration for fully 2 weeks as to wages and more than 2 weeks as to materials. So that there is at least $60,000,000 to be added in our computation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I note that the Senate committee amendment provides:

> Including the unexpended balances which have on the date of the enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted.

If that language should be adopted, it would mean that notwithstanding the fact that there might be 2 weeks or 10 days left in June prior to the beginning of the next fiscal year, or to the end of the present fiscal year, the Administration could not contract for the expenditure of any more of these unexpended balances between the date of the enactment of this joint resolution and July 1. So that, if it should take effect at once, they could not between now and that date enter into any more contracts or obligate any more money out of the funds available. Is not that true?

Mr. ADAMS. That would be true, but it would be very easy to correct that situation by a slight change in the wording, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the amendment is to be adopted in any form, it certainly ought to leave these administrative agencies free until July 1 to use the funds they now have available, but they could not do that under the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I assume it would be agreeable to the Senator if, instead of saying "the date of the enactment of this joint resolution", we would say "the 30th of June 1937"?

Mr. BARKLEY. That would be preferable; but I do not mean to intimate I would be for the amendment even if the date were changed.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I notice on page 3 of the joint resolution language which we have frequently used, authorizing the President to increase these amounts proportionately. But the language to which the Senator from Kentucky has adverted seems very clearly to restrict both the use and the amount of those funds, because it provides "which have on the date of the enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted." Obviously under that provision there would be no fresh amount of money available, but they would merely continue the work which has been contracted for. Am I correct in this understanding?

Mr. ADAMS. I think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, whatever the unexpended balance is, it would be frozen up between the date of the enactment of the joint resolution and July 1.

Mr. BONE. On page 2, near the top of the page, there is a reference to "unexpended balances which have on the date of the enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted." That simply means that we are authorizing going ahead with the projects concerned from unexpended balances, but we are not making the remainder of the unexpended balances available.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. The extension, with the committee amendment, limits the availability of these unexpended balances to contracts which are in existence on the date when the joint resolution is enacted.

Mr. BONE. That is correct. That seems to be the only way in which it can be interpreted.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that there is a hiatus between whatever date that is and July 1, when no funds would be available for new contracts or obligations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator, in response to a question asked by the Senator from Kentucky, to say that the language under discussion affected only the W. P. A.

Mr. ADAMS. No; I put it the other way, that it did not affect the Public Works Administration funds.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The question I desired to ask the Senator was, Does not this language apply to every dollar of money which has been transferred by Executive order from past relief appropriations to other agencies of the Government?

Mr. ADAMS. No; there are certain limitations, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin. For instance, the money which has been set aside to the workmen's compensation fund specifically remains in the Treasury as a fixed fund. Regardless of whether or not it is expended, that fund is fixed; it is a definite fund. The same thing is true as to road funds; they are specifically provided. The same thing is true as to some other funds. I do not have a list of them all here, but in the statutes providing for some of these departments there were specific directions, equivalent to the common term with which we are familiar, that they should remain available until expended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My question was prompted by the fact that, while I have not the figures before me, I recall that very large sums of money were transferred by Executive order from past relief appropriations to other agencies of the Government; and it seemed to be important, in considering this amendment, to know exactly how far reaching it may be.

Mr. ADAMS. I think I can furnish the Senator with an exact statement as to the funds in those various compartments, because the statement was furnished us by Mr. Bell, the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, with a list of the various compartments. I can find it in a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In order to answer the question of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], I will say that it is conceded that the testimony before the committee shows that the President now has in his hands $63,000,000 of unallocated money. Of course, he may allocate it between now and the 1st of July. I do not know whether he will or not; but he now has that amount from the former appropriations. The Senator concedes that the $63,000,000 will be affected by his amendment, does he not?

Mr. ADAMS. It will go beyond that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us consider a number of other allocations. The President has allocated funds to a number of cities and towns for the purpose of building electric plants. That money has not been expended, it has not been obligated, because injunctions have been issued. All that money would go back to the Treasury, and could not be expended by the President in the future, under this amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? Title II of the bill takes care of the very case which the Senator from Tennessee has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where is it in title II?

Mr. ADAMS. Money would be allocated to the Public Works Administration if the projects were Public Works projects.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President; title II does not take care of that. There are a number of uncompleted projects, a list of which I will give to the Senator from Colorado in a few minutes, after he shall have finished his statement, which are being constructed under the direction of the engineers of the War Department, many of them in Massachusetts, many in New York, many in other States. I recall very distinctly the projects in New York and Massachusetts. The cost of some of them amounts to more than a million dollars. All that work would be stopped immediately if the Senator's amendment were agreed to, because no funds would remain in the Treasury. The same situation exists with respect to half a dozen departments which are now expending relief money. The projects would be stopped if the amendment were agreed to, because those departments would not have the money with which to continue the projects. The Senator's amendment cutting off unexpended balances would affect a great many projects, some of which are nearly complete, some of them within $5,000 of completion, as I shall point out. All of them would be stopped, and it would take additional legislation to complete them if the Senator's amendment were agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Tennessee, with his long experience on the Appropriations Committee and his very faithful adherence to the statutes governing appropriations, would not advocate having the President or anybody else obligate the Government of the United States beyond the amounts appropriated. I am sure we can agree that the Senator would not wish the Government to enter upon obligations, even moral obligations, in excess of the funds already provided. If funds exist in the appropriations, it is a very easy matter to provide that they shall become obligated. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee and to other Senators that neither the President of the United States nor the head of the relief administration nor the head of any other bureau has the right to impose upon the Government or impose upon the Congress obligations to which they bind themselves, but which really are not binding in their character, and are merely of a precatory nature. That is, those asking for the money are looking forward in the hope that the money will be provided.

Mr. President, by this amendment we are not taking anything away from anybody; we are not restricting anything; but we are making an appropriation. This is an appropriation, and not the withdrawal of funds. We are appropriating a billion and a half dollars, and in addition to that we are appropriating all the moneys which the President has obligated or which Mr. Hopkins has obligated. That is in addition to the billion and one-half dollars. We are not reaching out and taking back anything, but we are saying that here is a billion and one-half dollars, and here is all the money needed to meet the obligations and the contracts which have been made. I estimate that the amount involved, in addition to the billion and one-half dollars, will run well over $200,000,000; and in the case of the unexpended balances which are really appropriated because they are obligated, I think the Senator will find there is well over a billion and one-half dollars of obligated funds.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say just now, in response to the Senator from Tennessee, that the unallocated funds of the Public Works Administration would not be affected by this joint resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. That is my understanding.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I assume that the Senator is referring to the language which is to be found on page 7, in title 2, that—

> All provisions of existing law relating to the availability of funds for carrying out any of the functions of said Administration are hereby continued until June 30, 1939.

Is that the language to which the Senator refers?

Mr. ADAMS. That is only part of it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, if I understand the Senator correctly this language makes available to the Public Works Administration the unexpended, unobligated balances which have heretofore been allocated to the Public Works Administration from previous appropriations.

Mr. ADAMS. As the Senator knows, all the moneys that have gone into the Public Works Administration are now in the revolving fund.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not at all certain of that, because the figures to which the Senator just alluded and the information produced before the committee distinctly show that some fund, as I recall, was allocated to the Public Works Administration from the previous appropriation. The Senator from Tennessee, for example, referred to certain instances in which moneys allocated from previous appropriations have not been obligated and have not been expended because the projects have been held up by injunctions. Is not that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. I may say to the Senator that the tabulation furnished us by Mr. Bell, the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, appears on page 348 of the Senate committee hearings. In that tabulation he shows that of the $4,880,000,000 appropriation there remains unobligated $15,000,000 in the Public Works Administration; of the $3,300,000,000 appropriation there remains unobligated $1,000,000; and of the $899,000,000 Emergency Relief appropriation there remains unobligated $1,000,000, or a total of $17,000,000 unobligated in the Public Works Administration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly the point. So the Senator proposes an amendment which cuts off the unexpended balances for the W. P. A. and for every other agency except the Public Works Administration. I now ask the Senator why the Public Works Administration should be put into a different category from any other department? Let me say to the Senator that I believe that the appropriation of this unexpended balance——

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is not speaking by the book. Will the Senator wait a moment? The Senator says that the Public Works Administration is the only one which will be affected.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. Of course, the General Accounting Office and the Treasury and other departments are also affected; but I am now speaking of the agencies which have been set up under the special fund. I believe the unexpended balances of the Public Works Administration should be reappropriated, because I presume that if they are not reappropriated the inevitable effect will be to cut off valuable and important projects which have been heretofore approved, and I am sure no Member of this body wants to do that. I feel that the same rule which we apply to the Public Works Administration ought to be applied to the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I shall be very glad to decline to appropriate any unexpended balance, and simply cut off entirely the reappropriation of unexpended balances, letting Congress make its own appropriations, specify so much money, and specify the purposes for which the appropriations are made, rather than to reach back, as these appropriations do, to 1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, and 1937, and take entirely out of our hands the allocation of money appropriated for specific relief purposes, and which has been set apart in various compartments in amounts which the Members of the Senate do not know, and which it is almost beyond us to ascertain.

That is the reason why the Senate Appropriations Committee is suggesting to the Senate that if it would like to know where its money goes it should say so in the joint resolution. If the Senate is perfectly willing to act in the dark, so that it does not know the amounts which it is appropriating, or where they come from, or where they go, let it go ahead and appropriate the unexpended, unobligated balances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator means, as I understand, that he is in favor of adopting the policy of discontinuing the reappropriation of unexpended balances.

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not sure that the Senator is not correct about it. However, this very year, time and again in appropriation bills we have reappropriated unexpended balances. Why should we take different action with respect to this particular measure?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that the fact that we may have been wrong once, twice, or a hundred times is no reason for not straightening out our course when the proper course is pointed out to us; and in no case have we gone back and reappropriated the balances from seven different funds, running back over a series of years.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think that has ever happened.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator from Colorado familiar with the projects in New York and Massachusetts to which the Senator from Tennessee referred, which, I believe, have not been completed?

Mr. ADAMS. I thought the Senator from Tennessee referred to projects in Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; they were in Massachusetts and New York this time, though I frequently refer to projects in Tennessee.

Mr. LODGE. I believe they are projects undertaken by the Corps of Engineers with funds from the Emergency Relief appropriation. In my State they are flood-control projects in the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers. I was wondering whether the Senator could tell me whether under this provision those projects would be completed?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that nobody can tell what will happen under this joint resolution as to where the money will be spent. If the Senator from Massachusetts or other Members of the Senate want money to go to their projects, let them put the proper provision into the joint resolution. What are we doing in this measure? As it came from the House it merely appropriated, as an addition to the relief appropriation, an undetermined amount to be used in the discretion of the President. He may use it for the projects of the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators or he may use it some place else.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me sufficiently long to enable me to give him the information the Senator from Massachusetts asked for?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Colorado says he does not know, and he does not think anybody can know, what will happen to the projects in which the Senator from Massachusetts is interested. I wish to read what General Pillsbury, the Acting Chief of Engineers, had to say about the projects to which the Senator from Massachusetts has referred. He says:

> If funds are no longer available on June 30, the above projects will have to be abandoned in a partially completed state, in which they would not serve the purposes for which the allotments were made.

Mr. ADAMS. Where does that testimony come from?

Mr. McKELLAR. I was reading from a letter from General Pillsbury dated June 14, 1937, showing what the effect would be on engineering works under the military branch of the Government.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator from Tennessee feel that the military authorities are better advised as to the financial situation of the Government and what will happen to appropriations than is the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The letter read by the Senator from Tennessee states that the contingency mentioned would arise if on July 1 funds should not be available. It does not state whether under the appropriations heretofore made obligations have been entered into or contracts have been entered into. If obligations or contracts have been entered into, then, those funds are carried over, in addition to the billion and a half dollars. If that does not occur, then, on July 1, $1,500,000,000 will be available for the purposes set forth in previous bills, and would enable the apportionment of sufficient funds to complete some of the projects to which reference has been made.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator if he understands that the Department is supervising or constructing the Works Progress Administration projects?

Mr. BYRNES. I did not know that they were.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not know so, either.

Mr. BYRNES. But the work has been done in the name of work-relief projects.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to state further what General Pillsbury says?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The letter is addressed to Colonel Harrington and reads:

DEAR COLONEL HARRINGTON: You asked to be advised if the action of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the United States Senate, in revising the relief appropriation to eliminate the provision for reappropriation of funds on hand, would affect the operations of this Department.

The elimination of this provision would seriously affect a number of projects being undertaken by this Department with funds provided from the emergency relief appropriation. These projects include—

And then there is a description of the projects.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator be good enough to advise his military friend that the joint resolution and the amendment do not do what he seems to think they do?

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with my military friend that they do exactly what my military friend says they do.

Mr. ADAMS. Just a moment. I wish to point out to the Senator that on March 31, according to Mr. Bell, there were $4,514,000,000 unexpended from the relief appropriations; that he anticipates that on the 1st of July there will remain unexpended $3,741,000,000. That amount will remain unexpended and available for these purposes if it has been set aside or obligated. The only portion of it that is affected by this provision is the portion which is unobligated and is not committed to any project. So there are $3,700,000,000 unexpended and available for the completion of projects in cases where the Government has entered into an obligation or a contract. We are not taking from those funds money available for the purposes mentioned. We are merely taking the money, for instance, $63,000,000, which is unallocated and which the President has in his hands absolutely, without strings and without allocation, and certain other funds. We are taking no money which in any way is committed to public improvements.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator a question prompted by general statements which have been made that it was with the utmost difficulty that the committee was able to ascertain the amount of balances remaining unexpended from previous appropriations.

Mr. ADAMS. May I say that the committee had difficulty in agreeing about it?

Mr. GEORGE. Difficulty in agreeing about it?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator another question. Is it ordinarily difficult to determine the amount of a general appropriation where a portion of the previous appropriation is unexpended at the time of the ending of the fiscal year?

Mr. ADAMS. No, sir. I will tell the Senator why the difficulty exists. It exists because we are dealing with several appropriations. The President has allocated money from this fund to over 40 different agencies. The President under the last bill allocated money to 20 agencies, and it is extremely difficult to gather the information from this multitude of agencies.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me, the suggestion that we have frequently and continually appropriated unexpended balances loses its entire force if we are dealing with certainties; but if, as in this case, we are dealing with odds and ends and balances left, and when even the members of the committee themselves are not able to agree from the testimony precisely what amount is involved, it looks to me as if an altogether different situation exists.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator it seems to me that that situation is a conclusive reason for doing what we have done. We spent 2 days——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ADAMS. Not until I have finished this statement. We spent 2 days and more with the Director of the Budget coming before us twice and Harry Hopkins coming before us twice, arguing with ourselves, and we left the committee room differing as to this item. It seemed to me that if we had reached a place where the computations led the committee studying them carefully to different conclusions it was time that we should reach a definite base and start with figures as to accuracy of which we were confident. As I have previously said, if more than a billion and a half dollars are needed, let us provide an additional amount in the joint resolution, but let us not reach back with a dragnet and see what we can get without knowing how much we are going to get or where it is going to come from. I am now glad to yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say a moment ago that there were unexpended and unallocated in the river and harbor fund——

Mr. ADAMS. No; I did not mention at all the river and harbor fund.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, I misunderstood the Senator. Referring, then to page 348 of the Senate hearings, to which the Senator himself alluded a moment ago, I find in the table there under the heading "Rough estimate of unobligated balances" the statement that the river and harbor fund will, on the 30th of June, contain $5,000,000, of which $1,000,000 came from the $4,880,000,000 relief appropriation and $4,000,000 from the $1,425,000,000 and $789,000,000 relief appropriations. So we are agreed, are we not, there is likely to be an unobligated balance of $5,000,000 allocated heretofore to rivers and harbors on the 30th of June of this year?

Mr. ADAMS. No; I cannot say that we are agreed, because I do not know that to be the fact.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the statement in the report, is it not?

Mr. ADAMS. Let me read to the Senator a statement about this report.

Mr. Bell wrote me a letter when he sent this statement. He said:

I want to again impress upon you that these estimates are very rough and can represent only a guess as to what the situation will be on June 30 next.

Then further on he says:

The following represent my rough estimates of the unobligated balances of June 30, 1937, based on allocations through June 11, 1937, without consulting the various Government agencies concerned, except in the case of the Works Progress Administration.

Then he says further:

The actual unobligated balance on that date for each organization may be entirely different from my estimate.

So I say I do not want to commit myself to things that Mr. Bell says are guesses and may be entirely inaccurate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand, and I quite sympathize with the attitude of the chairman of the subcommittee and of some of the members of the subcommittee with respect to this matter; but it seems to me that it is perfectly clear that no financial officer of the Government could give us an exact figure, because, as every member of the Appropriations Committee knows, there are items in transit upon the 30th of June which cannot by any possibility appear upon the books of the Treasury. There are items which may not be obligated until a week before the expiration of the appropriation period. The Director of the Budget was under the necessity of making a rough estimate. Only a moment ago the Senator from Colorado was referring to the fact that during the last 2 weeks of the present month the Works Progress Administration would necessarily be obligating funds for pay rolls in July. It is impossible in such circumstances for the Director of the Budget to state an accurate figure.

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all. I say not at all, for this reason: When we speak of items in transit, let me suggest to the Senator, that no item has any reason for going into transit until the issuance of the warrant and the entry of the item on the books. Without doubt, there is no justification for an item going in transit until that is done.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But on the 15th of June, the 1st of July, or the 30th of March it is altogether physically impossible for the Director of the Budget or any finance officer to estimate what obligations should be made or may be made between that date and the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator draws the conclusion that we ourselves should make no effort to fix a line, but should reach back to 1933 and appropriate every unobligated balance accruing from 40 different funds, and simply say, "You may do what you please with these items of unexpended or unobligated balances."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all. I sympathize entirely with the objective the Senator has in mind, but I think it ought to be made perfectly clear to the Senate that if the amendment of the committee is adopted it will inevitably cut off funds which have been allocated to various projects.

The reason why I rose at this moment was to call attention to the fact that there have been allocated to river and harbor projects several million dollars which are neither expended nor obligated and which necessarily will revert to the Treasury, with the result that scores of projects all through the country will suffer. I do not believe it is the intention of the committee or of the Senator or of the Senate to visit that difficulty upon communities of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course it is perfectly easy to argue to the Senate and to each Senator that there may be some project in his State that is not going to get money if we perform our work in a businesslike way. It is perfectly easy to argue that money is obligated for some purpose and if we do not proceed to lump into this appropriation bill moneys appropriated back as far as 1933, they will not be available. For instance, on the 20th of May there was $475,000,000 unobligated, of which $118,000,000 came out of the $4,800,000,000 act of 1935; $325,000,000 came out of the two acts in 1936, one of $1,425,000,000, and the other, $789,000,000; $18,000,000 out of the $3,300,000,000 act; $10,000,000 out of the Drought Relief Act; $3,000,000 out of the $889,000,000 for public works; and $1,000,000 out of the $950,000,000 appropriated for the C. C. C.

The only point I am trying to make is that we should set our house in order. If the Marine Corps or some other branch of the Government should have money for a project, let us stand up like men, state it in the bill in so many words, and make the appropriation to carry on the project. But let us do it as a Congress. Congress, I thought, had charge of the national purse. We have made these great unrestrained, undefined appropriations to meet the relief problem of the country. We did not think we were making those appropriations for all manner of projects in every State in the Union. I think we have reached the point where we should say, "The money which we are appropriating in relief bills is for relief." Let us earmark it for relief and state clearly that the only purpose for which it is to be used is for relief and not for the construction of projects in communities which are solely interested in having the project and are not interested in feeding and clothing the hungry and the cold.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want to misunderstand the Senator, but I understood him to say Congress in the joint resolution ought itself to earmark the appropriations and designate the places where the money is to be spent.

Mr. ADAMS. What I think should be done is stated in this very measure. It is an amendment which was offered in and adopted by the committee. In line 6, page 3, the Senator will find the following language——

Mr. BARKLEY. There is a provision on page 3 in the form of an amendment designating the amount that can be expended for different classes of work, but that is not what I understood the Senator to have in mind a while ago.

Mr. ADAMS. The language which I was about to read is the following:

Provided further, That no portion of the funds hereby appropriated shall be allocated or used for any purpose except to provide relief or work relief for persons in need thereof.

That is my idea of earmarking the funds. Nobody could or should attempt to tell the President of the United States how or where he should set about to use the relief money. We cannot tell him just what relief is, but we can say to him—and I think we should say to him, as we are seeking to do in the measure now before us—that this money shall be used only for relief of needy people. That should be its primary purpose. If in order to accomplish that purpose, certain projects are to be constructed, well and good; but it is not the primary purpose of the measure to construct projects.

Mr. BARKLEY. I evidently misunderstood the Senator, which I do not want to do. I thought he said Congress should include in the measure itself, just as it used to establish post offices in the old days, a definition or statement of just where the money should be expended.

I do not want to misunderstand the Senator about another proposition. He does not believe, does he, that this money or any part of it ought to be expended exclusively for the purpose of feeding and clothing people rather than providing them work while they are being sustained, which work may provide useful projects?

Mr. ADAMS. The purpose, in accordance with the plan adopted by the Congress, is to provide relief through the employment upon useful projects of citizens of the United States who are in need.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. Regardless of this language or any amendment, the fact is the President has already put that policy in force by requiring that all employment should be provided from relief or unemployment rolls in the communities where the works are to be carried on. It is not necessary to amend the law to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. There is a fundamental purpose which should be followed and that is the relief purpose through the provision of work relief by the employment of needy people. That is now the fundamental purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. That should be done through the construction of useful projects, but we should not invert or reverse the situation and start by constructing useful projects and, merely incidental to their construction, employ people who are needy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator is on sound ground. As I said a moment ago, that is already the policy of the President and the Works Progress Administration and, as a matter of fact, of the Public Works Administration also, because in all awards, in all contracts, and in the case of all projects approved recently it has been a sine qua non that the employees must be obtained from relief rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will go into the uses that have been made of the relief funds he will find there has been a very considerable liberality in the allocation of the funds.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think there should be. I do not want to be hard-boiled or hide-bound in such a matter.

Mr. ADAMS. I can point out to the Senator where relief money has been allocated to agencies which spent 100 percent of it in administration, 100 percent of the money allocated to the agency being consumed in administering the agency.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what agency it was, and I would not undertake to pass upon the propriety of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that under the terms of the joint resolution as it now stands the President could continue projects of the nature to which I previously adverted?

Mr. ADAMS. Unquestionably. He would have $1,500,000,000 with which to do it, together with the money which had previously been obligated.

Mr. LODGE. Is it true that, due to the proposed amendment, the work on projects would have to cease?

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. That would not happen?

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. There would be time to make new allocations and permit the projects to proceed?

Mr. ADAMS. A surplus of money is in the hands of the President and will be there the 1st of July. He starts the 1st of July with $1,500,000,000 of new money.

Mr. LODGE. All of the expert help would not have to be discharged and the project would not have to stop?

Mr. ADAMS. Absolutely not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the amendment advocated by the Senator from Colorado should be adopted it is inconceivable that the President would be able to make the various allocations all over the country on some 300,000 projects on the first day of the new fiscal year, and keep them going. The President would have to wait until the machinery was arranged, the allocations made, and new contracts entered into, in order to complete the uncompleted projects.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Tennessee is confusing two things.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am not. I am telling the Senator exactly what would happen.

Mr. ADAMS. The President and the Relief Administration do not make contracts. There is no occasion for the President or the Relief Administration under the W. P. A. to make contracts. When the Senator speaks of the Works Progress Administration there are contracts there. Under Mr. Hopkins' administration there are not merely 3,000 but over 50,000 projects under course of construction, no one of which will have to be stopped, because his supply of money will continue. He has adequate money to carry him up until the first of July. The billion and a half dollars will supplement his funds in such a way as to carry him on, so that not a single man on any of these projects will have, as a matter of necessity, to be laid off and the construction of the project stopped.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to explain to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in answer to his question, that General Pillsbury takes exactly the opposite view; and as he has charge of the work as Acting Chief of Engineers, that is what will happen. He says the work will stop; and, of course, it would be absolutely impossible for the President to start half a dozen projects in Massachusetts or New York or in any other State on the very first day of the fiscal year, and not only allocate the money but have it set apart and have all the necessary set-up for it.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator again permit me to ask him to convey my compliments to the general, and say to him that it would be well for him to study the finances of the Government before he attempts to advise the Senate, because he is in error?

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say that I have known General Pillsbury for a very, very long time. He is one of the most accurate officers in the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. ADAMS. He does not know what is in this joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. He knows more about appropriations than a great many of us who serve on the committee. I know that so far as the matters are concerned that relate to the engineering department, he knows more about them than I do, and I think he knows more about them than perhaps any other member of the committee. I refer to financial as well as military information, as a Senator suggests.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I congratulate the Senator from Colorado. He takes on the entire Senate, and several Senators at a time.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that they have me, and I cannot get away. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. I know; but our rules really do not mean anything. We get up and speak anyway.

I desire to pursue this matter, however. I was disturbed by what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] said about river and harbor items and flood-control items. The testimony before the Military Affairs Committee was that in flood-control work there is a possibility of an equal division of money, a dollar by direct appropriation and a dollar of labor under relief; that practically all the flood-control activities can be carried on in that way on the 50–50 basis. What is the significance of the statement of the Senator from Wyoming that, unless there is some change in the joint resolution, these activities will be discontinued? I think I am repeating what the Senator from Tennessee said out of order a few moments ago, but I should like to be reassured regarding this matter. May I ask the Senator about it? I see that the Senator from Wyoming is on his feet.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Colorado, let us assume that the sum of $1,000,000 was allocated by the President out of the $4,880,000,000 appropriation of 1934 or 1935 for a rivers and harbors project. Let us assume that there have been expended out of that amount $250,000, and that contracts have been made for the expenditure of another $250,000. Therefore there would be expended and obligated the sum of $500,000. There would be a balance of $500,000 unobligated and unexpended. Under the amendment reported by the committee that $500,000 would lapse; and it would then be necessary for the President to dig into the $1,500,000,000 which we are appropriating for work relief and these other agencies to obtain the $500,000 to reallocate to this project and go on with the work.

Mr. ADAMS. What financial difference does it make whether we reach into one of the pockets or into the other?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is a very big difference, if I may say so to the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. This money is all going into the same fund. On the Senator's theory, we were reappropriating these funds so that they were going in with the billion and a half dollars.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator that that was not my theory. The theory upon which I am operating is that under the amendment which the committee has brought in here, definitely unallocated funds will lapse, and that should not be permitted to happen. Does not the Senator agree with me in that statement?

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot agree with the Senator in assuming that the law as it stands should not govern us.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But the Senator avoids the question.

Mr. ADAMS. No; I am not avoiding the question. The Senator was assuming two things, one of which was that the making of contracts was involved. He illustrated making a contract for $250,000. No such contracts are made under the Works Progress Administration. The Senator overlooks the fact——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But this provision refers to all agencies.

Mr. ADAMS. Just let me finish, please. The appropriation act under which the last appropriation, at least, was made, and into which all of the unexpended balances were gathered, provided that no project should be undertaken unless the money was absolutely and irrevocably set aside to complete it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but money irrevocably set aside would be withdrawn by the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. No; not unless something can be withdrawn that has been irrevocably set aside.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me read the language of the amendment:

> Unexpended balances which have—> on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted.

What?—

The definition of the word "obligated" is the crux of this argument. "Obligated" does not mean "allocated."

Mr. ADAMS. I should say to the Senator that if money is irrevocably set aside, as the statute requires, it is obligated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What does the Senator mean by using the word "contracted"?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me to interject a remark here——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BARKLEY. Much of the work is being done, not by contract but by force account under the direction of the Works Progress Administration. None of that sort of work, which is in progress from day to day or from week to week, where relief labor is being employed by some agent of the Works Progress Administration, where there is no contract in the sense that a contractor has entered into an obligation for a certain price, and where there is no obligation that can be enforced on the part of the Government to continue it, would come even within the scope of the Senator's amendment. It would all stop immediately upon the signing of this joint resolution by the President, unless it should be delayed until after the 1st of July; and in that event the President would have to dig into this billion and a half dollars in order to go forward with that work, although there might now be enough money unexpended and unobligated to complete the project if the money were to remain available.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Senator from Colorado please to note the assumption I now make:

Assume that the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois—which I have the honor in part to represent, with my colleague—has had some understanding, so far as such understandings go, to the amount, say, of ten or twenty million dollars in respect to an airport undertaking, and twenty-five to fifty million dollars in advancement to the city in respect to a subway undertaking, an agreement being made at the time that the work is to be done upon these undertakings by those who are and who heretofore have been on relief. Suppose that under the amendment of the able Senator, tendered as a representative of the Appropriations Committee, this money is cut off and denied. In what manner, then, could the President or the W. P. A. carry out the agreement to grant this money, which heretofore, to use the words of the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York and the Senator from Wyoming but a moment ago, has been obligated by some understanding with those who do make the contracts by which the work shall be done and the men be put to work? How will that work be carried on if this money is cut off?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that, in the first place, no money is being cut off.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, to what object is my able friend addressing his splendid philippic this afternoon?

Mr. ADAMS. I have endeavored to explain it. Apparently, I have not been successful. I will say to the Senator that the purpose is to carry out the statutes of the United States, which the Senator has had such a large hand in making.

Mr. LEWIS. And doubtless that is why they are deficient. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Appropriations expire at the end of the fiscal year. All the appropriations which are now being talked about will expire on the 1st of July unless we take some action. The question is not whether we are taking money back, but how much are we going to appropriate? We are going to appropriate a billion and a half dollars; and the question is, Shall we also appropriate some other moneys which will not become available unless we include them in this joint resolution as an additional appropriation? I will say to the Senator that if we should strike out every word in the joint resolution in reference to unexpended balances—which would meet my approval—it would leave the situation just as I said it was. That is, none of the unexpended and unobligated balances would go over unless we should specifically appropriate them; so we are taking nothing away from anybody. It is a question as to how much we are going to give them in addition to that which they now have.

Mr. LEWIS. I say to the able Senator I cannot concur with him in his reasoning, but I will not take his time now. I merely wish to point out to him that if all he says be absolutely accurate, the fact will be that the President will be advised by our act that his power to carry out the understanding and the Works Progress Administration will be advised that its right to grant the money previously contracted have been cut off by our action.

Mr. ADAMS. If any contracts have been made they are absolutely protected by this joint resolution. If there has been any obligation of any kind, it is absolutely protected. As a matter of fact, we could not do away with it, because where money has been obligated, that money must be paid regardless. The money which may not be used after the 1st of July is that which has not been contracted, and that is the only money about which we are talking. The question is whether or not we shall pass on to the control of the President money as to which there is no contract. We are passing on some three and a half billion dollars of unused money as to which there are obligations and contracts. We are talking about some two hundred million dollars which has not been obligated. The question is whether or not we will make our appropriation vague and indefinite, or make it fixed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me again refer to the flood-control projects along the Merrimac, Nashua, and Connecticut Rivers, to which I alluded earlier. These are being constructed by the Army engineers with W. P. A. labor, and they are fine projects from every standpoint. As I understand, under the pending joint resolution the continuation of these projects with unexpended balances would stop even if they could be started at once.

Mr. ADAMS. They would not stop at all.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator. That is just what I wanted to know. The question I should like to ask now is, Is there a provision in the joint resolution which would assure that these projects which have already been begun would receive preferential consideration over W. P. A. projects which have not been begun?

Mr. ADAMS. There is no preferential consideration of anything provided. The money is specifically appropriated to be expended in the President's discretion.

Mr. LODGE. We would be trusting his judgment in selecting projects which have been begun?

Mr. ADAMS. It is true that as to every man in the United States who is on relief, if the President saw fit to say to Mr. Hopkins, "Is John Jones working on a project in Denver? If he is, cut him off", he would go off. John Jones might say, "Just where am I going to be? This appropriation runs out on the 30th of June. Am I going to have to stop that day and have the President issue another order putting me to work on the 1st of July?"

Mr. LODGE. We presume, then, that the Administration would follow the rule of common sense and continue the work already started. The Administration under this bill has as much authority in this respect as it has had from the beginning.

Mr. ADAMS. The words at the very beginning of the joint resolution are:

> That in order to continue to provide relief and work relief * * * in the United States.

That is the very purpose, and the declaration of the first sentence of the bill, to continue the work.

Mr. BARKLEY. That does not mean the continuation of any project; it means continuation of relief generally.

Mr. ADAMS. The projects have no place unless they are to provide relief.

Mr. BARKLEY. But that does not make the Government go ahead with them.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to see if I understand the contention of the Senator from Colorado. As I understand, it is not so much the appropriation of unexpended balances the Senator opposes as blindly appropriating them, and the Senator is contending that if they are to be appropriated the amounts ought to be put down in dollars and cents and added to the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the whole contention, as I understand.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the whole story.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the able Senator from New York be permitted to complete the question he started to ask the Senator from Colorado an hour and twenty-five minutes ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. I think, perhaps, I shall object, and then yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the matter over which I would worry is one about which I do not need to worry, because on page 2 the amendment inserted by the committee reads as follows, including a part of the original text:

> One billion five hundred million dollars, together with such unexpended balances which have on the date of the enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted.

If I understand that language, it means what it says. If the President has actually turned over to the Army engineers money to be used for the employment of relief workers on river and harbor or flood-control projects, if that obligation has been entered into and expenditure has been contracted for, by reason of the enactment of this joint resolution that money will be available for the purposes for which it was obligated and for which it was contracted. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ADAMS. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, why was the Senator from Wyoming worried about the river and harbor and flood-control projects? What was the significance, if I may ask, of his criticism of the joint resolution as written so far as these particular river and water projects are concerned? The Senator is now in the Chamber, and I ask him—and after I get through these questions and answers I will retire—what was the reason why the Senator from Wyoming was distressed over the matter of the obligation and contracting of sums to be used for flood-control projects?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. For the simple reason that I feel that it is unfair, as a general proposition, by the language of a joint resolution to upset definite allocations which have been made for public-works projects no matter what agency is carrying them out.

Let me add that this measure contains in title 2 a specific provision reappropriating the unexpended balances of the very funds which have been allocated to the Public Works Administration, and my discussion of rivers and harbors was a result of a question propounded by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, who was anxious to know what the effect would be on river and harbor allocations. I was merely calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that we here have two different rules, one of which reappropriates unexpended, unobligated balances for one agency, and the other of which repeals them for every other agency.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator, is it a matter of the definition of words? Does the Senator make a distinction between an allocation of funds and an obligation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. What is the difference?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. An allocation is an act by authority of the President whereby there is set up upon the books of the Treasury an earmarked fund. For example, it is estimated that a particular project will cost, let us say, $4,000,000 to construct. Let us assume all the money cannot be expended within a particular year, all of it cannot be contracted within a particular year, but it is estimated that the total cost of the project will be, let us say, $4,000,000.

A certain proportion of that money is immediately contracted for, a certain proportion of it is obligated by word of mouth, and a certain other proportion is awaiting the development of the project before it falls into the category of being obligated or contracted. Therefore that balance would be withdrawn from that particular project by this language.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me press the matter with the Senator. Suppose the President allocates $10,000,000 for a flood-control project. Is not that an obligation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is not an obligation, because it is merely an administrative act. And obligation is the engagement of the Government to lay the money out with some citizen, or corporation, or community.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, to be honest about it, it seems to me we are splitting hairs.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I quite agree with him. My contention simply is that when the committee brings in an amendment restricting the reappropriation of unexpended balances to those funds which are technically obligated, or the expenditure of which is technically contracted for, they are splitting hairs, and they are doing it in a manner that will react unfavorably upon many communities in the land. We ought to reappropriate the allocated funds, and, therefore, I am for the reappropriation of all unexpended balances.

Mr. COPELAND. If I understand the Senator correctly, I do not think I can endorse what he says. The mere fact that we have in the past appropriated vast sums of money, more money than was needed to appropriate, so that there is a surplus, is, as I see it, no reason why we should now reach back and take that and add it to the money we are appropriating today. But I am clear in my mind that in cases where money has been allocated or obligated or contracted for in a specific direction, that amount of money should be included in this appropriation and added to the $1,500,000,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is exactly the principle for which I am contending, and I am sure the Senator from Colorado will tell the Senator from New York that the word "obligated" and the word "contracted" do not include the meaning "allocated."

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to defend the Senator, although he does not need any defense, and is well able to make his own defense. My feeling about the matter is that if, in a rather hazy way, an allocation had been made from this old fund for some department of government to spend as it saw fit, I should not be in favor of continuing that in this measure. But if any money has heretofore been appropriated, the projects for which it was intended to be spent have been studied, an agreement has been reached that they are worthy projects, and the money has been set aside to carry into effect those projects—if the administration has been obligated in a sense to spend that money—then I say that all such sums should properly be added to the billion and one-half dollars.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Well, the Senator will vote against the amendment if that is what he wants to do.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I think we understand that we apparently do not agree; but I am not distressed now by reason of my immediate interest in river and harbor and water projects. I am quite clear that all sums which have been actually set aside and obligated for the purpose of carrying on these river and harbor improvements will be taken care of under the terms of the joint resolution as written.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall take only a few moments to discuss this amendment.

The amendment will be found in two places on page 2 of the joint resolution. It will be found, first, in lines 3, 4, and 5. After the amount of $1,500,000,000, the language in the House bill was "together with such unexpended balances as the President may determine." The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado is, after the word "balances" in line 3, to insert:

which have on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted.

Again, on the same page, in lines 11, 12, and 13, the same words occur.

As I understand, we are now about to vote on only the first amendment, but what I have to say applies to both amendments. If the first one should be voted out or voted in, the other would be acted upon in the same way, as a matter of course.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word about these unexpended balances. This is the eighth relief measure which has been passed since 1933. In every other relief measure except the first we have appropriated the unexpended balances remaining under the appropriations in the preceding bill or bills. The reason for that is that the institution we have created is a very large one, having to do with some 50,000 projects, located in every State and in almost every county in the Union. An immense amount of money is required to carry on those projects even for a day, much more for a week or 2 weeks. So in order to carry out the proposal of relief and relief work, it is necessary for the W. P. A. to have a very large sum in its hands at all times.

For illustration, let us suppose that we were to reject the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, and reappropriate the unexpended balances. Then at this time next June we should have about the same amount of unexpended balances remaining. We probably should not have exactly the same amount, but we should have the same sort of situation we now have; and if the W. P. A. were discontinued on the 30th of next June, about the same amount of money would remain in the Treasury as would remain if we were to discontinue the W. P. A. on the 1st of July this year.

What is called a "cushion" is required. Some hundreds of millions of dollars are required to keep going these projects all over the country. So if we want to continue the W. P. A. for another year it is absolutely necessary to leave the situation as it is at present.

Mr. President, it is true that these unexpended balances arise from moneys appropriated under a number of bills. They go back to the first relief bill of $3,300,000,000. Some of the money appropriated in that bill is unexpended. There is now in the hands of the President, according to the testimony, about $63,000,000 that he could allocate for hospitals or for schools or for any purpose that would bring relief and work relief. There is that much money in his hands today. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado were agreed to, one of the first effects of it would be that the President would no longer have that amount of money in his hands after the 1st of July unless, previous to that date, the President contracted for its expenditure, or, in the words of the amendment, unless he "obligated" its expenditure or contracted for it.

If the President were to say, "Here is a project in New York City, or in Cleveland, or in Oklahoma, which I think is a proper project, and I will allocate a million dollars for it", it would not be of any avail. That money would go by the board on the 1st of July. Other allocations which he has already made, some of which have been held up by injunction, would also go by the board on the 1st day of July. The result is that if this amendment should be agreed to it would result in virtually cutting off all projects for which money has been allocated, but for which it has not actually been obligated or contracted.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not a fact that when the Works Progress Administration submitted the estimate of a billion and one-half dollars as the appropriation for this year, it took into consideration the fact that it would likely receive an appropriation of the unexpended balances?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course; and that is the President's recommendation.

Mr. MINTON. And if it does not get the unexpended balances, instead of getting a billion and one-half dollars it will get a billion and one-half dollars less $223,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amount is not $223,000,000. It has been reduced to something in the neighborhood of $200,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me to make an explanation, I shall then gladly yield to him.

Let us consider this $200,000,000, or approximately $200,000,000. We cannot be entirely accurate as to the amount. There is some doubt about the exact amount, but it is in the neighborhood of $200,000,000. It is impossible, with 50,000 projects under way all over the country, to find the exact amount remaining. The Treasury figures cannot possibly agree with the W. P. A. figures, because the W. P. A. is expending money every day, and so there is a difference from day to day.

However, let us suppose about $200,000,000 are unexpended. In the first place, about $65,000,000 of that is to be paid to the employees for the first 2 weeks of July.

Senators, it would not make a particle of difference if we were to discontinue the W. P. A. on the 1st of July; we should have to pay those employees just the same, because under the law they are entitled to 2 weeks' pay. They must be given 2 weeks' notice of dismissal. So, even if we should stop W. P. A. absolutely, we should have to pay that sixty-odd million dollars.

Then there is another sixty-odd million dollars, or thereabouts—I cannot be accurate about the amount—for materials which have been bought. There has been no contract entered into, and there is no obligation with respect to them. There has simply been a purchase of materials, and, of course, we know that the Government is going to make good its purchase of materials; so that money has to be taken out of the total amount. When that is added to the fund necessary to carry on the business, we have the unexpended balances; and the unexpended balances should be reappropriated in this joint resolution.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I cannot understand how the Government could order and buy materials and not have any kind of contract or obligation with respect to them.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no written obligation that goes on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Indiana, in asking a question, made the statement that evidently Mr. Hopkins and the Relief Administration expected something in addition to the billion and a half dollars if the joint resolution should pass. Mr. Hopkins was asked by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] how much money he expected to get if the joint resolution was passed as it came from the House, and Mr. Hopkins said:

> Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Senator, in my opinion, when Congress passes this bill making this appropriation, the sum of money which we will be able to expend will not exceed $1,500,000,000.
> Senator McCARRAN. One billion five hundred million dollars?
> Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.
> Senator HAYDEN. That is for Works Progress?
> Mr. HOPKINS. No; altogether for the entire works program.
> Senator McKELLAR. If the unexpended balances are carried over?
> Mr. HOPKINS. That is my opinion.

In other words, Mr. Hopkins was only counting in his estimate on a billion and a half dollars. I may add that when he was asked the question he said he did not think the amount of unexpended balances that could possibly come to him would exceed $21,000,000. So he was not counting on anything extra.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, with all due deference, I think the Senator from Colorado is entirely mistaken. Mr. Hopkins said we were appropriating in new money this year a billion and a half dollars and that there were about $200,000,000 in all which were unobligated and unexpended, and that there would be about the same amount on hand the first of next July. In other words, he said that he will expend this year only the billion and a half that is in the pending measure, because he would have on hand next year about the same amount in the form of unexpended balances that he has this year. That is perfectly logical. We know that to be true; it cannot be otherwise, for an establishment of this kind cannot be operated without having on hand a large amount in unexpended balances.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. And if Mr. Hopkins does not get the reappropriation of the unexpended balances, he will be short at the end of the next year by the amount of the unexpended balances the Congress fails to give him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Exactly. It will mean that we will be appropriating for W. P. A. this year about $1,300,000,000 instead of $1,500,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, from the billion and a half now proposed to be appropriated there will be deducted the unexpended, uncontracted, and unobligated balances that will be left when the measure passes, and that at the end of the year there will be taken from it again the amount of the unexpended balances.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly what would happen.

Mr. BARKLEY. So it is proposed to take out 2 years' unexpended balances from the net amount of the appropriation provided by the pending measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we stopped the W. P. A. on the 1st day of next July, that is precisely what would happen. In other words, they would have on hand on the 1st of next July about $200,000,000. If we should not now include the $200,000,000 of unexpended balances, that would leave the net amount to be expended at a billion three hundred million dollars.

Let us see what effect that would have. In order to meet the reduced appropriation for the ensuing year, namely, $1,500,000,000, Mr. Hopkins has already cut off nearly one-third of his force and nearly one-third of the people to whom relief is given. If the amendment advocated by the Senator from Colorado should be adopted, 120,000 people now on relief and needing relief would have to be dropped from the rolls. That is what would happen. That is why I am very much opposed to the adoption of the Senator's amendment. It would be a wrong to the people in need of relief. After making a tremendous reduction in the appropriation, representing one-third below that of last year—for last year Congress appropriated nearly $2,300,000,000, and this year it is going to appropriate $1,500,000,000—and after allowance has been made for that reduction by Mr. Hopkins, if a further reduction of unexpended balances is made it will mean that 120,000 more of the needy will not be cared for.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, with the appropriations that have been available, there are on the rolls of the employed under the W. P. A. about two and a quarter million people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. With an appropriation of a billion and a half dollars, which is a reduction, of course, from the annual appropriation of a considerable amount, the number employed will have to be reduced from two and a quarter million to about 1,750,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true; and if the unappropriated balances are not reappropriated the number will have to be reduced 120,000 more.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that, with the reappropriation of the unexpended balances, there will necessarily be a reduction of nearly a half million people on the employment rolls of the W. P. A.

Mr. McKELLAR. Those are the facts.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if we refuse to appropriate the unexpended balances, 120,000 more will have to be dropped from the rolls.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, let me call attention to another thing. I see the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] whom we all love and admire sitting before me. He has been very much interested for a number of years in power questions. As the Senate knows and as the Senator from Nebraska knows, the President has allocated considerable sums of money for the building of electric light plants. He has $63,000,000 which he can use for that or other purposes between now and the 1st of July, although it is almost impossible to conceive that he could use it advantageously within that time. Take any city that has been allocated, as it is called, money for such a purpose. In other words, the President has written a letter to a city, say to the city of Birmingham, saying that so much has been allocated to aid in the building of a light plant, and suppose an injunction has been filed, as we know injunctions have been filed in nearly all such cases, against the building of the plant; then what happens to the allocation under the amendment of the Senator from Colorado? It would just wipe out the allocation entirely and the city of Birmingham would get no money.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to say that if this amendment were adopted we would lose $200,000,000 of unobligated balances on the first of the year and then at the end of the year we would lose them again. So we are going to lose $400,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Kentucky meant relief would lose it and not that the Government would lose it, because next year, of course, if we stopped the W. P. A. on the 1st of next July, the unexpended balances would revert to the Treasury.

Mr. ADAMS. If we now give the Relief Administration $200,000,000, will it work the reverse, so that the $200,000,000 now will be $400,000,000 next year?

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. ADAMS. It would not work in that way?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all. It is just as Mr. Hopkins explained it. If the $200,000,000 of unexpended balances are reappropriated, this time next June there will be about the same amount, so that we will be actually expending only about a billion five hundred million dollars during this year. If the unexpended balances are not reappropriated, it will mean a cutting down of the appropriation of a billion five hundred million dollars to a billion three hundred million dollars. That is all it is. Of course, that is the purpose of it. The Senator from Colorado could not have any other purpose. It is inconceivable that there could be any other purpose, because the Senator has voted time and again—he has voted six times, as I have, as I remember his votes, and if I am mistaken I hope I will be corrected——

Mr. ADAMS. I tried to follow the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that six times now we have voted in relief bills to reappropriate unexpended balances. Is not that so? The Senator has so voted six times. What is there in the present situation—what reason does the Senator have at this late date in the consideration of relief measures to come to the conclusion that he has been wrong six times heretofore in voting to reappropriate unexpended balances and that now he is right in desiring to prevent the appropriation of unexpended balances?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator to answer that question.

Mr. ADAMS. Will not the Senator yield a little beyond that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I will yield beyond that. I will yield to the Senator at any time.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator belongs to a group who always believe that there is a place of repentance on the mourner's bench.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, sir; I am a Presbyterian and believe that whatever is, is, and whatever will be, will be, whether it is or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the question of the unobligated balances crops up just as I indicated in the opening statement I made. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] pointed out a line of reasoning, which he has not followed clear through, which follows that pursued by Mr. Bell, the Acting Director of the Budget, who gives us a tabulation of compartments into which the unobligated balances have been distributed and from which it is said, if we adopt this amendment, they will be taken away.

This list only shows $17,000,000 going to the Public Works Administration. If Mr. Bell's statements are correct, we really cannot perpetrate the outrage on the Public Works Administration the Senator from Tennessee is portraying. In other words, there is only $17,000,000 unobligated which could be expended by the Public Works Administration for all the great projects in which the Senator from Nebraska and others are so much interested.

Mr. McKELLAR. The testimony before the committee was that the President had in his hands $63,000,000 which he could allocate for any purpose between now and the 1st of July; and if the Senator's amendment shall be adopted the President will be precluded from spending a dime of that money.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say, if the Senator will indulge me a moment——

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed, I will.

Mr. ADAMS. That under the tabulation which the Acting Budget Director gave us day before yesterday, I think the unallocated money totaled $48,000,000. I notice the Treasury's statement, which was on my desk this morning, it showed this amount to be $50,000,000. The Acting Director of the Budget or someone else testified it was $63,000,000. I have had some difficulty in finding any accurate figures, but I wish to remind the Senator from Tennessee that some of the members of the committee felt that there really was a substantial amount of unobligated balances. We differed from others who felt that the amount of the unobligated balances involved in the amendment was very small. Mr. Hopkins said $21,000,000 and the Acting Director of the Budget said $23,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator wants to be accurate. The Senator will recall that both those gentlemen appeared before the committee, and I frankly admit there were discrepancies not only in the testimony of one as compared with the other but they were not exactly consistent with themselves occasionally. However, when one said $21,000,000 and the other said $23,000,000, it was pointed out that the money had to be paid out in the first 2 weeks in July, that the money had to be paid out for materials, and there was also $100,000,000 that they were obliged to have as a working fund to carry on the 50,000 projects. There is no real or substantial difference in their testimony at all.

Mr. ADAMS. The Committee amendment is not mine, though I happened to present it. I remind the Senator that in the committee there was a very close vote upon the amendment proposing to reduce the appropriation from $1,500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, and it was only because of the fact that members of the committee felt that the unobligated balances, if they went back into the Treasury, would compensate for the failure to make the reduction which almost half the members of the committee felt ought to be made, that the motion did not prevail to reduce the amount to $1,000,000,000. I am calling attention to the fact that this item entered into the argument that revolved around the unobligated balance of only $21,000,000 or $23,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator will remember that I was opposed to any reduction of the $1,500,000,000; that I was opposed to the Senator's amendment to prevent the use of the unexpended balances; and that I was opposed to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] relating to the 40-60 plan.

I want to call attention to several other items, first the Public Works item. One witness said it was $15,600,000 and another said it was $17,000,000, but it is about that amount. That has been reappropriated in this very bill. The Senator so stated this morning, and I am sure he was correct about it. If it has been reappropriated, why should we reappropriate an unexpended balance for the P. W. A. and decline to reappropriate an unexpended balance for the W. P. A.? In principle I see no difference. I think in principle one is just the same as the other. If we reappropriate an unexpended balance for one, I do not see why we should not do it for the other.

Next is the Resettlement Administration. I believe the Resettlement Administration item is undisposed of. Some Senators from the West know more about it than I do; but, as I understand, if it is proper to reappropriate the unexpended balance in that case, it should be done in other cases.

Public roads have been taken care of in another bill, and that unexpended balance is reappropriated. Why should we reappropriate money for public roads and refuse to reappropriate money for the W. P. A.?

The unexpended balance of $18,000,000 has been reappropriated for employees' compensation. Why should we reappropriate for that purpose and not reappropriate for the W. P. A.? I do not see any difference in principle or policy.

I think it would be better if we could name the exact amount in every bill. Taking it generally, by and large, I think the policy of appropriating unexpended balances is probably a bad one, but how and why it should be done in the one case and not in another case is impossible for me to understand.

Through the years in all relief measures we have reappropriated unexpended balances, and yet we are asked to refuse to reappropriate such balances in this one case. I think we ought to reappropriate the unexpended balance in this case, as well as in other cases. I think the two amendments which we have been discussing are very unwise. The minority members of the committee, 10 in number, are opposed to it. The bill was really reported by a vote of 13 to 11, 1 member not being present who would have voted with the minority had he been present.

Mr. ADAMS. There was no record vote taken in the committee on this amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it was the same vote.

Mr. ADAMS. No; there was no vote taken on this amendment in the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the committee divided substantially 11 to 13. I think these two amendments are extremely unwise.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe the Senator from Tennessee will be able to convince the Senator from Colorado, or that the Senator from Colorado will be able to convince the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the latter is true.

Mr. BORAH. So I wish the Senator from Tennessee would talk to us on this side of the Chamber in order that we may have the benefit of his remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall endeavor to do so. I wish to show what will happen not only to the agency which we have been discussing but probably to 40 or 50 agencies of the Government which handle these funds in the event this amendment is agreed to.

I have here a letter dated yesterday, addressed to Lt. Col. Francis C. Harrington, Chief Engineer and Deputy Administrator, Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., and reading as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, June 14, 1937.

Lt. Col. FRANCIS C. HARRINGTON, C. E.
Chief Engineer and Deputy Administrator,
Works Progress Administration,
Walker-Johnson Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR COLONEL HARRINGTON: You asked to be advised if the action of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the United States Senate, in revising the relief appropriation to eliminate the provision for reappropriation of funds on hand, would affect the operations of this Department.

The elimination of this provision would seriously affect a number of projects being undertaken by this Department with funds provided from the Emergency Relief appropriation. These projects include:

Project:	Amount
Channel improvement at Massillon, Ohio, a part of the Muskingum Valley project	$1,078,716.58
Merrimack River at Lowell, Mass. (36 percent completed)	316,956.45
Wallkill River, N. Y. (70 percent completed)	341,000.00
Survey of the Red River of the North (89 percent completed)	5,690.82
Nashua River at Fitchburg, Mass. (34 percent completed)	1,002,438.87
Merrimack River at Haverhill, Mass. (52 percent completed)	179,391.60
Connecticut River at Springfield, Mass. (65 percent completed)	77,495.22
Susquehanna River at Hornell, N. Y. (25 percent completed)	296,629.20
Susquehanna River at Painted Post, N. Y. (45 percent completed)	52,029.07
Susquehanna River at Lisle, N. Y. (25 percent completed)	60,006.72
Oxford, N. Y., channel clearing (18 percent completed)	49,664.07
Avoca, N. Y., channel clearing (40 percent completed)	12,257.32
Susquehanna River near Kingston and Edwardsville, Pa. (10 percent completed)	1,289,644.39
Susquehanna River near Wilkes-Barre and Hanover Township, Pa. (10 percent completed)	1,825,096.88
Ballona Creek and Arroyo De Los Jardines (part of Los Angeles project; 5 percent completed)	287,087.93
Verdugo Wash (part of Los Angeles project) (44 percent completed)	34,357.84

If funds are no longer available on June 30, the above projects will have to be abandoned in a partially completed state, in which they would not serve the purposes for which the allotments were made.

Very truly yours,

G. B. PILLSBURY,
Brigadier General, Acting Chief of Engineers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator's contention to be that if the proposed amendment were adopted, all those projects would cease?

Mr. McKELLAR. They would absolutely cease, and the only possibility of their reinstatement would be from the $1,500,000,000, if application were made to the President. Of course, they would cease on the 1st of July, and it is not now long until the 1st of July. After that time, those who were interested in the projects could go to the President and secure additional money to complete those projects if the President desired to take that course. Otherwise, the projects would not be completed; and I do not think they ought to be left in that position. Especially ought they not to be left in that position in view of the fact that what we are doing now is simply to reappropriate unexpended balances, just as we have been doing for the past 5 years in these relief measures?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, how much does this amendment represent in the way of money?

Mr. McKELLAR. About $200,000,000. I do not think the Senator was here when I explained it.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I was here, but I did not understand what the amount was.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very sorry I did not make myself clear.

Mr. BORAH. It is about $200,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Apparently the joint resolution provides $630,000,000 for the type of projects mentioned in the letter of General Pillsbury, does it not? If so, is not that adequate for the completion of those projects?

Mr. McKELLAR. It would all have to be done over again, though, and new applications would have to be made. In other words, it would be a useless expenditure of money to go through all those processes again. If the Senator has had any experience—and I know he has, just as the others of us have had—in securing the building of projects in the various States, he knows how much trouble is involved and how long it takes to get projects through. Why do that when we know that we have about $200,000,000 in unexpended balances, that we have pursued this course all along, that it has been the uniform practice in the case of the last seven bills? I believe it is seven.

In the last seven bills, as I recall, we have reappropriated the balances every time. Now it is proposed to rub out that matter and start over again; and if we do that it will cost the Government a great deal more money and the relief workers will suffer and the projects will suffer.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit another question——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have to state that I am entirely unfamiliar with this matter of obtaining money for projects. So far as I can recall, I have not had any experience of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is very unfortunate. I forgot for a moment that Vermont was out of the Union. [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, Vermont was out of the Union for 27 years, an entirely independent country. Vermont annexed a part of New Hampshire, and afterward a part of New York, and finally, in 1791, annexed the rest of the Union; and she may have to do it again. [Laughter.]

Now, I will proceed with my question. From what the Senator says, I do not understand why it is necessary to add to this appropriation of $630,000,000 the sum of $200,000,000 out of so-called unexpended balances. Is it not necessary to go through the same formality, to go through the same effort, to obtain money out of the $200,000,000 referred to as unexpended, as it is to obtain the same allocations out of the $630,000,000 expressly provided for in the joint resolution?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is not, for this reason: The projects mentioned in the letter I read from the Acting Chief of Engineers have not only already been arranged for, but they have already been undertaken under some contracts between the Emergency Relief Administration and the War Department. If the unexpended balances should be reappropriated, undoubtedly these projects would be completed; but if the unexpended balances should not be reappropriated, all the projects would be up in the air again, and whether or not they would be completed would depend upon the action of the officials of the Department.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understood the Senator to say that these W. P. A. projects are contracted for. Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. McKELLAR. I may have stated the matter too broadly. They are contracted for only in the sense that the W. P. A., through the engineering department of the Government, is building these projects with relief labor. When the present appropriation expires that will stop. The authorities have allocated—not obligated, but allocated—so much money to these projects. If the money that has been allocated is required to remain in the Treasury after the 30th of June, of course, these projects will not proceed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, as I understand the matter—and I am inquiring for information—it is purely a question of allocation, a simple process of devoting money to the completion of these projects in order that they may be completed. That is all there is to it; is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not agree with the Senator at all. I think that has very little to do with it. What the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] desires to do is to cut the amount that those in need of relief will receive from $1,500,000,000 to $1,300,000,000, and if that is done it will take off of relief 120,000 persons who are now on relief and who need relief.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the argument were reversed, is not this the way in which it should be stated—that the proponents of the reappropriation are for increasing the amount of the total appropriation by this obscure and unknown amount, which has to be stated on the floor of the Senate in order that Senators may know what it is?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; not at all, for the reason that the House joint resolution—I do not know where it was prepared, but probably with the aid of the Department—provides as follows in perfectly plain language:

> There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1938, and to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President, $1,500,000,000, together with such unexpended balances as the President may determine.

Instead of that being unusual, the same provision has been carried in every single relief bill. I take it the Senator from Vermont voted for the six previous relief bills. I do not know whether he did or not.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, according to my recollection, I voted for all the relief bills, after an effort to amend them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then in the six bills for which the Senator voted, he voted for the reappropriation of unexpended balances just as it is proposed to reappropriate them in this joint resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I must say that it does not appear clear to me that there is any good reason for reappropriating these sums where they are not obligated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I take a different view of the matter. I take the same position as I took with the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Colorado. I do not think I could convince the Senator from Vermont, and I am quite sure he could not convince me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to clear up a matter?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Reference has been made to the inability of the committee to obtain accurate figures with reference to the amount of unexpended balances. No suspicion is to be attached to that circumstance. It seems to me that the very nature of the work, its widespread existence in every community in the United States, and the impossibility of keeping daily balances on all these widely scattered projects make it utterly impossible on any day to know what the unexpended balances are.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is absolutely true. Both the acting Director of the Budget, who is an official of the Treasury Department, and Mr. Hopkins, who is at the head of the W. P. A., testified to that fact. For instance, they spend millions in a day; and it is impossible for the records of such expenditures to be turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury and accurate books or accounts kept every minute of the day, or every day of the week.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not only is there nothing strange about it, but if we were able to have at the end of each day an accurate account of all the unexpended balances, it would look "phony."

Mr. McKELLAR. It would. I do not believe it could be done. I do not believe it was ever intended to be done. There is no reason why it should be done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. As I now understand the proposal, by this amendment the committee would practically reduce the appropriation from $1,500,000,000 to $1,300,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. And what the Senator from Tennessee would like to do would be really to increase the appropriation $200,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; $1,500,000,000 will be spent this year, according to Mr. Hopkins' testimony, and about the same amount that is now unexpended will be unexpended at the end of next June. If we should stop this work next year, we should have $200,000,000 left. Only $1,500,000,000 is proposed to be expended.

Mr. BORAH. I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. But if these unexpended balances were not reappropriated, only $1,300,000,000 would be spent this year.

Mr. BORAH. In all probability the amount which we are appropriating, whether it is $1,300,000,000 or $1,700,000,000, will be necessarily used?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think so.

Mr. BORAH. Nevertheless, the effect is that we are really appropriating $1,700,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; including the unexpended balances; but we shall have $200,000,000 on hand at this time next June.

Mr. BORAH. We may or we may not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had not finished my question. I should like to ask the Senator one other question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. I wish to yield the floor, however.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, when the President sent to Congress his message on relief he recommended the appropriation of a billion and a half dollars of new money to be expended for work relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. And that message and that request contemplated the use of all the money Congress had previously appropriated under previous appropriation bills. Is not that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that whether the amount is two hundred million or a hundred and fifty million or a hundred million, whatever the amount is, the adoption of this amendment would mean that to that extent Congress would withdraw from the expenditure for work-relief money which it had already heretofore appropriated for that purpose, and which was taken into consideration when the President asked for this billion and a half dollars?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Does it not all come down to the question of how much is really necessary to carry on this work?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Hopkins testified that even if the billion five hundred million and the unexpended balances all were appropriated, he would have to reduce the number of people who are now on relief by about one-third, that if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado were agreed to it would mean that 120,000 more people on relief would have to be taken off relief entirely. In other words, it would reduce the number of those on relief.

Mr. BORAH. We are considering, then, whether or not this amount, with the amendment of the committee, would be sufficient?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And the Senator contends it would not be?

Mr. McKELLAR. I say it would not be sufficient. As I have previously stated, we have reappropriated these balances each year. It is absolutely necessary to have this money. It is called a "cushion"; I call it a working capital. They are obliged to have $200,000,000 to work on. There are some 50,000 projects scattered throughout the Nation. It is absolutely necessary, as the Senator from Idaho and every other Senator can see, that it will take a large amount of capital to run the organization and to do the work they are required to do, and I think it would be very unwise to adopt the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has referred to people on relief. The Senator means that even with the billion and a half dollars, in addition to the unexpended balances, the Works Progress Administration will have to take about one-third of those who are now working off the employment rolls?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if this amendment shall be agreed to, 120,000 more who are now working will be deprived of jobs.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly what I stated, or tried to state. I hope I made myself clear, and if I did not, I am glad the Senator from Kentucky has cleared the matter up.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the Senator contending that it would be impossible to conduct the administration of this relief agency on the reduced appropriation without reducing those on relief to a state of hunger?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is what Mr. Hopkins testified.

Mr. BORAH. Those who are not members of the committee are not familiar with the details, and what I would like to know is whether Mr. Hopkins thinks this amount of money is absolutely necessary to take care of those who otherwise would be in want.

Mr. McKELLAR. He thinks it is absolutely necessary to enable his organization to take care of those who are out of employment, and who otherwise would be hungry, and would be a charge on somebody.

Mr. President, we have trusted the President of the United States seven times with the administration of the relief funds. We have given him control of these appropriations, made exactly as it is proposed to make the appropriation before us, joining the new appropriation with the unexpended balance. I believe the President has made good each time. Our country has been enormously benefited and improved by reason of our policy.

Mr. President, what would those on relief have done if it had not been for these appropriations? Many of them would now have been in their graves, through no fault of their own, if we had not made the appropriations. Why change our policy at this late date?

It is true that the country is now in better condition. It is also true that we have tremendously decreased the relief appropriation. The Senate will remember that at one time in one bill we appropriated $4,800,000,000. The next year the appropriation was reduced to three billion and some hundred million. Last year it was reduced to $2,300,000,000, or thereabouts, and this year it is reduced to $1,500,000,000. I sincerely hope that we may not need it at all another year. But I for one do not propose by my vote to deprive those who, without fault of their own, are without the necessities of life, and who can work on these useful projects, of the opportunity to do so. Why change our policy at this time, when the appropriation has been so materially reduced?

Senators, I think the amendment of the Senator from Colorado should be defeated.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Did the Senator express the hope that in another year we might not have to make any appropriation at all or a very greatly reduced appropriation, for relief purposes?

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope that we will not have to make any at all. If we have to make any, I hope we will have to make only a very small one. I am not one of those who believe that this system ought to be a permanent policy; I think we ought to get rid of it; but I know from the evidence which was brought before the committee that we are not able to abandon it at this time. It is the duty of the Congress to appropriate this money for relief purposes, just as was done in the House, and I hope that the pending amendment, and the other amendment providing for a 40-percent contribution by States and localities, will be defeated.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, if the Senator's hope is realized and it is not necessary to have a Works Progress Administration after June 30, 1938, the "cushion" about which much has been said will not be needed.

Mr. McKELLAR. We may need to reappropriate it, but if it is not used, it will go back into the Treasury.

Mr. BURKE. We will not need any money for the "cushion" for the first 2 weeks after the need for the W. P. A. has expired.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; if it is through by the 1st of June, of course, a substantial amount of the unappropriated balances will remain in the Treasury.

Mr. BURKE. I fail to understand the Senator's point that unless we provide now for that "cushion" for the first 2 weeks of July 1938, we are necessarily going to take 120,000 or 160,000 men off the W. P. A. rolls at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is only a portion of it. As I explained to the Senate, it takes about a hundred million dollars working capital for this enormous concern. It takes a lot of money. The projects are scattered all over the country, in the Senator's State, in my State, in the State of every Senator here, and in some of the Territories, I believe.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be delighted to answer if I can.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is my understanding that if the committee amendment is defeated, that will not mean an appropriation of $200,000,000; it will merely mean that the Administration will be provided the opportunity to use that money that was appropriated and that was contemplated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And if we find at the end of next year that the $200,000,000 is not needed or if we find at that time that no part of the $1,500,000,000 is needed, all of that money can be returned to the Treasury?

Mr. McKELLAR. Somewhere in the neighborhood of $200,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has conjured up a most terrible picture of what would happen if this amendment were adopted. If I had believed he was accurate I would not have voted for the amendment in the committee, and I would not vote for it on the floor. As a matter of fact, there is involved in this question, so far as the Works Progress Administration is concerned, $23,000,000. There will not be 120,000 people put on the streets if it is adopted; nobody will be put on the street by reason of the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know what information the Senator has, but the Senator must recollect the testimony of Mr. Hopkins that if his admendment were adopted 120,000 more people would be taken from the employment rolls.

Mr. ADAMS. I recollect very clearly Mr. Hopkins' testimony that only $23,000,000 was involved, so far as his funds were concerned. Mr. Bell's statement, which was furnished us a few days ago, fixes the amount of the Works Progress Administration funds at $23,000,000. What the majority of the committee is trying to do is to establish a sound principle of appropriating money, trying to escape from the thoroughly unsound method which has been pursued. We have felt that the Congress of the United States should spend the Government's money, should specify where it should go, and how much should be spent. The majority are opposing the making of undetermined, indefinable, unascertainable appropriations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, undoubtedly the sound principle which the Senator says the committee is seeking to establish ought to be established. But, after all, the practical question which some of us must determine in voting upon this amendment is what effect it is going to have with reference to taking care of those who need to be taken care of. I would defer the establishing of a sound principle if it were going to result in those not being cared for who ought to be cared for. For myself, I shall be governed in my vote by what I think is really necessary to take care of the unemployed—and by "unemployed" I mean those who are willing to work but who cannot get work. I should like to have the Senator state what he thinks as to the sufficiency of this fund to take care of the relief situation, if his amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. In answer to the Senator from Idaho, I will say that, in the first place, there is one and one-half billion dollars provided in this joint resolution which will become available at the beginning of the fiscal year. That is not all. The public works portion of the joint resolution, which was added by the Senate and was not in the House measure, adds $300,000,000 more. In other words, there is eighteen hundred million dollars in this joint resolution. The House sent the measure over here with a billion and one-half dollars, and we have added $300,000,000 to it. In this amendment we seek to take off $23,000,000, and that is all it will take off the Public Works Administration, according to the acting Director of the Budget, and $21,000,000 according to Mr. Hopkins. We have added, as I have said, $300,000,000 for public works which the House did not include.

In addition to that, I will say that the present Congress, and the preceding Congress, passed the Social Security Act and a number of other acts to provide for persons in old age and to take care of unemployment. Certainly those great measures are going to take some of the burden off the relief funds. So my judgment is that the funds appropriated by this joint resolution are adequate. If they are not adequate there is one body and only one body which has the power and which should exercise the judgment to provide the needed funds. Congress has not hesitated a moment in being liberal. If the need for relief crowds upon these funds so that they are not adequate, Congress will be in session after a comparatively short recess and can act to make them adequate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that the House made a provision with respect to that matter which will be found on page 6 of the joint resolution, as follows:

> The funds allocated hereunder to the Works Progress Administration shall be so apportioned and distributed over the 12 months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and shall be so administered during such fiscal year, as to constitute the total amount that will be furnished during such fiscal year through such agency for relief purposes.

The Senate has agreed to that provision with slight amendments, and it will undoubtedly become a part of the law. The purpose of the provision was to hold the appropriation within the billion and one-half dollars and the unexpended balances. The Senator recalls that fact.

Mr. ADAMS. And I approve of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator approves of it, and so do I. It seems to me that a much better rule to establish is that the money we now appropriate shall be allocated over the 12 months and spent by the Administrator in that way, rather than to hold out the hope that he may come back for a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. The Relief Administrator is now spending—and it is the low point in his expenditures—from $131,000,000 to $135,000,000 a month. This amendment will affect, at the outset, the expenditure of less than $2,000,000 a month. That is the proportion of the total which is involved in this amendment. The amount is relatively small. It seems to me that when the Congress provides moneys it should tie them as best it can to 12 monthly allocations; but, if a great emergency arises, Congress will not sit by and say, in the month of June, "Do not spend this money; it must last until the first of the year, and we will not now appropriate any more money to feed hungry people."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There is involved, in the total item of unobligated balances, $220,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. Twenty-three million dollars is Works Progress money only.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. As I understood the argument between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Tennessee, the answer of the Senator from Colorado to the argument which the Senator from Tennessee made was that the projects to which the Senator from Tennessee referred will not be stopped after the 1st of July, because of the fact that the money for carrying them on will come out of the billion and one-half dollars.

Mr. ADAMS. And will come instantly. The minute the one ends, the other begins.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If that is correct, is it not logical to conclude that the total amount available for the Works Progress Administration will be reduced by the amount that is transferred to these other agencies, and, despite the fact that only $23,000,000 is involved in the Works Progress Administration, that the whole $220,000,000 will actually be taken out of the billion and one-half dollars, and the amount available for the Works Progress Administration will be reduced by that amount?

Mr. ADAMS. No; it will not be taken out of the billion and one-half dollars. The fact is simply that these amounts will not be added to the billion and one-half dollars. The billion and one-half dollars is a net amount.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from Tennessee contended that certain projects in this list which are outside of the Works Progress Administration would stop; that it would not be possible to get the obligations through by the 1st of July. The answer of the Senator from Colorado to that was that they would not stop, because there would be newly appropriated money to take the place of the money that is appropriated but unobligated. If those projects are going ahead, then the money for those projects is going to come out of the billion and one-half dollars. Is not that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; but I will say to the Senator from Washington that unobligated money is not money now applicable to those projects. The very fact that the money is unobligated means that it is not now applicable to those projects.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is allocated.

Mr. ADAMS. Not to those projects.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is allocated to various departments, and it is intended in its allocation to be used in certain types of projects which the Senator from Tennessee has described.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me so that I may submit a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SMATHERS. Am I correct in my understanding that at the present time there are certain sums, known as unexpended balances, which will lapse on the 1st of July if not expended? Is that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall have to make an explanation. All of the unexpended balances will not lapse. Only those unexpended balances which have not been contracted for will lapse. There is three and one-half billion dollars of unexpended balances. There is only $200,000,000 of unobligated balances. In other words, there is roughly $3,300,000,000 of unexpended balances which will continue to operate and to meet the costs of the various projects, and only $200,000,000 is involved in this question.

Mr. SMATHERS. With respect to projects now under consideration and continued to the 1st of July, when the unexpended balances lapse, the purpose of the Senator's amendment, as I understand, is to force the President to go into the new appropriation of a billion and one-half dollars to continue such projects, instead of reaching back into the old unexpended balances. Is that correct?

Mr. ADAMS. No; that is not correct. There is no intent of that kind, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SMATHERS. I did not mean the intent; but that is the effect of the Senator's amendment, is it not?

Mr. ADAMS. No; it is not. As a matter of fact, at the present time there is a fund of money available for relief purposes. A large portion of that money has already been obligated. There is a small part of it of which no use has been made. It stands there just like the change the Senator has in his pocket. It is not in any way contracted for. It is free for the President to spend or not to spend as he pleases.

Our position on the committee has been, with respect to money which was free, that the Congress should say what should be done with it. That is all that is involved—that Congress should say how much should be spent for these purposes; that we should not merely leave an unascertained and apparently unascertainable balance to be adjusted or spent or not spent as the President sees fit. We are definitely giving him $1,800,000,000 in this joint resolution. Then we seek to give him an amount of money which is free money, which he has not spent, which he has not obligated; and we merely say to him, "If you have not used it during the fiscal year, let Congress determine where it shall go."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. If it is the position of the Senator from Colorado that the objection to appropriating the unexpended balances is that the appropriation is of an indefinite and undetermined sum, I suggest to the Senator that that difficulty could readily be overcome.

It seems to be generally understood in the debate that the unexpended balances which have not been contracted for and have not been obligated, amount approximately to $200,000,000. I understand that the Senator from Colorado does not object to this relief resolution carrying $1,500,000,000, plus some additional definite amount, but he does object to an indefinite appropriation of unexpended balances. If that is the objection of the Senator from Colorado, let me make a suggestion.

Following the words, in line 3, "together with such unexpended balances", appears the committee amendment, "which have on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted." I suggest that there be added "and in addition the sum of $200,000,000", and then continue the language of the joint resolution, "as the President may determine, of appropriations made by", and so forth. That will remove the objection which the Senator makes as to the uncertainty of the appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I shall be glad to have the Senate appropriate $1,600,000,000 or $1,700,000,000, and cut out all reference to unexpended balances and unobligated balances.

Mr. OVERTON. That would remove the uncertainty.

Mr. ADAMS. I am entirely agreeable to that. I am really representing the committee in trying to oppose a thoroughly unsound policy, a policy under which we find our funds shifting around where we cannot find them, either in amount or in location.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. We are really debating not the question of appropriations but the question of a sound procedure with reference to making appropriations.

Mr. ADAMS. I think that is true, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, but there are other things necessarily underlying that, because every unsound policy leads to unsound practices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 2, lines 3, 4, and 5, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, beginning in line 3, after the word "balances", it is proposed to insert "which have on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted", so as to read:

That in order to continue to provide relief, and work relief on useful public projects, in the United States and its Territories and possessions (including projects heretofore approved for the Works Progress Administration which projects shall not be subject to the limitations hereinafter specified in this section), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1938, and to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President, $1,500,000,000 together with such unexpended balances which have on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted, as the President may determine, etc.

Mr. NORRIS. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD (when the name of Mr. GLASS was called). I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is necessarily detained from the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). On this amendment I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce a pair between the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. If present, the Senator from Maine would vote "yea", and the Senator from Florida would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] would vote "nay" if present. The Senator from Maine and the Senator from Minnesota are necessarily absent.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is absent from the Senate because of a death in his family.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] are absent because of illness.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on departmental business.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If present and voting, the Senator from Utah would vote "yea", and the Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "yea", and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I am not advised how the Senator from Texas would vote. The Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to repeat the announcement made earlier in the day concerning the absence of my colleague the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], who is unavoidably detained on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—25

Adams	Copeland	Johnson, Colo.	Truman
Austin	Davis	Lodge	Tydings
Bailey	George	Logan	Vandenberg

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WAGNER subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to announce that I was absent from the Capitol upon official business and I misjudged the time of the vote on the amendment which was rejected a little while ago. I desire to have the RECORD show that, had I been present, I should have voted "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado, the chairman of the subcommittee, if he is not willing that identically the same amendment as that which has just been rejected, appearing in lines 11, 12, and 13, be now stricken from the joint resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly, that may be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that formal action be now taken to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 11, after the word "balances", it is proposed to insert "which have on the date of enactment of this joint resolution been obligated or the expenditure of which has been contracted."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the Committtee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 22, after the word "areas", to strike out "including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations", so as to read:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the following classes of public projects, Federal and non-Federal, and the amounts to be used for each class shall not, except as hereinafter provided, exceed the respective amounts stated, namely: (a) Highways, roads, and streets, $415,000,000; (b) public buildings, parks, and other recreational facilities, including buildings therein, public utilities, including electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, sewer systems, water supply and purification, airports and other transportation facilities, etc.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado what prompted the committee to strike out the words, "including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations"? What was the objection to projects sponsored by organizations of that character?

Mr. ADAMS. There was no objection whatever to them. The reason for the amendment, however, was that this is a bill which specifically provides that the appropriation shall be for "public projects." It will be found on page 2, in line 15 that—

This appropriation shall be available for the following classes of public projects.

That has been true of all relief appropriations. The committee felt that, however meritorious a project might be, the moment we spread out and entered the field of private projects we were departing from a principle which was sound and which would embark the Government upon an endless field.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Am I to understand, then, that this language does not exclude any projects which have been authorized in the past?

Mr. ADAMS. If they have been authorized by a public body.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For example, I am not certain whether any projects have been sponsored by farmers' cooperative power organizations under the Rural Electrification Act. I do not know whether any such projects have ever been sponsored by them and approved by the W. P. A., but I wonder, in the first place, why the language was included by the House and, in the second place, why it was striken out by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Was any testimony taken concerning it?

Mr. ADAMS. The language was inserted on the floor of the House. The Representative who offered it, Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, came before the committee and explained the situation to us. It was discussed with him, and the committee felt we ought not to go beyond the field of public projects.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator explain what kind of projects, according to the author of the language, would be included?

Mr. ADAMS. As I understood from Mr. RANKIN's statement, he had in mind certain projects in his State sponsored by mutual organizations, not incorporated in the form of a public corporation, not a district, county, city, school district, or improvement district, but merely a voluntary grouping of individuals, carrying out certain enterprises which in their nature were private as distinguished from public. It did not seem proper to the committee to bring them into the class of public projects.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What I had particularly in mind, as indicated in my question to the Senator, is whether the language would cover cooperative electrical organizations which have been set up under the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. ADAMS. I assume it would cover them, and also would cover cooperative farm organizations, cooperative buying organizations—in fact, any form of cooperative organization.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the committee amendment on page 2, commencing in line 22, been disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending question.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the clerk to read an amendment on page 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the one on page 2, lines 22 and 23.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to speak on the amendment.

Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment would preclude the allocation of any money under the Rural Electrification Act to any organization having a project sponsored by a nonprofit cooperative association. I can speak now with perfect freedom because the amendment will not affect my State in any degree. All organizations of farmers in my State, which are building rural electrification lines under the R. E. A., are not doing it through the instrumentality of a cooperative nonprofit organization, so that what I shall say has no application to my own State but I invite attention to the fact that it does have application to a very large number of States in the Union.

At a conference I had this morning with a representative of the R. E. A. Administrator—not with the Administrator himself but with one of his representatives—I was informed that under the R. E. A. Act loans made to organizations of farmers who are going into the business of constructing electric-light lines through the instrumentality of cooperative nonprofit organizations amounted to 87 percent of all the loans made to farm organizations, and every one of them will be affected by the committee amendment striking out this language.

In my own State the legislature which recently adjourned enacted a law particularly for the purpose of enabling farmers to take advantage of the R. E. A. Act. The law made provision for the farmers to get these loans and to organize what are termed "power districts." In most of the States such loans are obtained through cooperative organizations of farmers. It seems to me it is extremely unwise and unfair for Congress now to take this right from the great bulk of farm organizations which would be able to get some money allocated to them by the President, and make it impossible for any such organization to be designated by the President if he should wish to allocate any of this money to them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what the method is in various States—I presume there is some similarity—but in the State of Kentucky the rural associations of farmers make application for funds which will enable them to build electric-light lines.

Sometimes three or four or five counties are joined in the same project. The R. E. A. passes upon the application and makes the necessary loans and arrangements. By reason of the possibility of obtaining this form of rural electrification, in many communities the private companies have gone forward in an effort to provide all the facilities themselves, whereas previously they paid no attention whatever to the desire throughout the country districts to obtain electric facilities.

If the amendment should be adopted I am wondering whether the projects now under consideration, but which have not yet been approved or adopted, would be automatically stopped.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think they would be automatically stopped, but the organization sponsoring them would be unable to get any money for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. They would be able to get no money under the provisions of the appropriation?

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where else could they get it?

Mr. NORRIS. They could get it under the R. E. A. Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. But that act does not provide a sum at all sufficient to enable the R. E. A. to approve all the projects which are really meritorious.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct. I had a conference today with a representative of the R. E. A., as I said, and I was told by him that in my State of Nebraska applications have been made by farm-power organizations to borrow money under the R. E. A. Act which, in the aggregate, represent an amount greatly in excess of that available in 2 years under the R. E. A. Act. That is the situation before the first year under the act has expired.

A few months ago, talking with a Senator here in the Chamber, I was told that the same situation is arising in his State. Senators will remember that the R. E. A. Act was the first of its kind ever enacted anywhere. It was uncertain how much money would be taken. Some persons prophesied that there would not be any use for any money to speak of, and so we compromised. As the bill was introduced, it carried a much larger authorization for money than was in the bill as it was finally enacted. We compromised, and cut down the amount. The experience of the Rural Electrification Administrator shows that if we had retained the original high amount, it would not have covered the applications that are being made by farmers all over the United States to get some of that money in order to provide themselves with electric facilities on the farm.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment.

I judge from what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] said in answer to the query of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that all this difficulty comes about because these projects are not regarded as public projects. Technically, that may be true. To all intents and purposes, I do not know a single one of them in the United States that is not in reality a public project, nonprofit and cooperative in its nature. I am informed by the Administrator's attorney that there are some States in the Union where this is the only way they have to get money to establish a cooperative organization, and it is conceded to be a very fine way to do it.

The Senator from Georgia rose a moment ago. I now yield to him.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am interested to know just how the various local R. E. A. sponsors are to avail themselves of the funds provided in this measure. My State happens to be one of those in which we have a great many more applications pending to construct projects within the State under the original R. E. A. Act than funds are available for; but these sponsors of all those projects within my State have been borrowing the funds and assuming the obligation of repayment. Does the Senator understand that this language gives the President or the Administrator of the W. P. A. the right to loan money to these local projects?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I understand that this money is not in the control of the W. P. A. at all. This class of projects, however, is put in the same classification with highways, roads, streets, and public parks and buildings.

Mr. RUSSELL. In some sections of the country power lines are being constructed in part by relief labor paid out of relief funds, and the remainder of the funds are borrowed from the appropriation provided for the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume so. I presume that these projects, as in the case of schoolhouses or similar public projects, could get allocations under the language of the joint resolution. I do not mean that striking them out of the joint resolution would prevent their borrowing money under the Rural Electrification Act as therein provided.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. A few moments ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asked questions of the Senator from Colorado as to the interpretation and effect of the language which it is proposed shall be stricken out, namely, "including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations."

It is not by any means clear to me that the interpretation which I understood the Senator from Colorado to place upon the language is correct; and the question I now address to the Senator from Nebraska is whether "including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations" is limited to "electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas", or is broad enough to include any nonprofit and cooperative associations. In other words, would the language employed there, if not stricken out, permit the use of a portion of the funds appropriated in this joint resolution for a project of housing initiated by a nonprofit or by a cooperative association?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should say it would not apply to that. However, I wish to say to the Senator—and I expect to go into that subject before taking my seat—that if there is any doubt about the meaning of the language which the committee strikes out, I certainly should be glad to have it made clear, and even to change the language.

For instance, it has been suggested by a member of the committee, beginning with the language stricken out, "including projects", that instead of that we insert "which may be", so that it would read "which may be sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations."

When we take that in connection with the language in line 20, "including buildings therein, public utilities, including electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas"—we change that—"which may be sponsored by nonprofit and cooperative associations", I think that would make it perfectly plain, so that there would not be any doubt about it.

I say to the Senator that as far as I am concerned, and, I think, those who favor this kind of legislation, there is not any intention of reaching by this language anything except rural distribution lines established by cooperative organizations of farmers.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not sure that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] heard this colloquy between the Senator from Nebraska and myself.

A question was raised as to the correctness of the interpretation which the Senator from Colorado placed upon the language which it is proposed shall be stricken out. It is my impression that it is intended to apply only to "electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas", and I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] had the same thought in mind when he interrogated the Senator from Colorado. Does the Senator from Colorado think that the language quoted, "including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations", would be broad enough to include any nonprofit or cooperative association, for whatever purpose organized?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that as a matter of legal interpretation of course it ought to be interpreted, as we say, in pari materia—that is, limited by that which has gone before that is of the same kind. I think that is the correct legal interpretation.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is true; but, if the Senator desires, if it would make him feel that there is no doubt left about it, suppose we change "including projects", and say "which may be."

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me for a further interruption at this point, I think the punctuation that is used here justifies the implication that a new class is created. If there were no comma following "areas", so that it would read "to serve persons in rural areas including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations", there would be little question as to the meaning of the language. But taking the whole context, and reading from "public buildings, parks and other recreational facilities", that is a second class; "including buildings therein"—that is a third class; "public utilities"—a fourth class; "including electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects", and so forth, as if it were an entirely new class.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I am not sure that a court might not be justified in interpreting it to mean what I have stated.

Mr. NORRIS. We can easily amend that. In the first place, we can strike out the commas; and then if we use the words I have suggested, "which may be", that would refer directly to "areas"—"in rural areas which may be sponsored", and so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator? The Senator suggests changing the language to read "to serve persons in rural areas which may be sponsored by", and so forth. Does not the Senator think the better way of changing it would be "which projects may be sponsored?"

Mr. NORRIS. I think that would be all right.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that would be certain.

Mr. NORRIS. My own idea is that if we should strike out the comma after the word "areas", as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, the language would be all right as it is, although I should not have any objection to the other language being used.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he makes his proposal for a change?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have been following this discussion; and it seems to me that in line 20, by using the term which is between commas, "public utilities", we would, of course, include private power utilities; and I think we ought to know whether or not we want to make loans to them. We have to determine whether we want to loan to private utilities, because they are really public utilities. The term "public" used there would have only its ordinary meaning; and any private power system is actually a public utility.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator. Suppose we strike out the comma after "areas", and then there will be no doubt that the language applies to "electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations." Then there could not be any doubt about its meaning.

Mr. BONE. I take it it is the Senator's purpose to restrict the loans to cooperative electric utilities?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course. I take it there would be no dispute on that point. Now, let me ask the Senator from Colorado whether it would be agreeable to him if we struck out the comma after the word "areas" in line 22 and struck out the word "and" in line 23 between "nonprofit" and "cooperative", so that it would read "nonprofit cooperative", and then restored the language the committee proposed to strike out?

Mr. ADAMS. So far as the committee is concerned, we merely struck the language out because we felt that it did not follow the provision of the paragraph in lines 14 and 15. We had no opinion in opposition to it. So far as I am personally concerned, it is entirely agreeable to me to have it applied to nonprofit cooperative associations.

Mr. NORRIS. I will have to get unanimous consent to propose the amendment, because the comma has not been stricken out by the committee, and I want to strike out in line 21 the word "including." I thought that while this matter was before us I would ask unanimous consent to offer those two motions, and then it would be agreeable, I think, to reject the committee amendment. Would the Senator object to permitting me now to offer an amendment to the text of the bill to strike out the word "including" and to strike out the word "and"? I could move to strike out the word "and", because that is in the committee amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator would not have to get unanimous consent merely to strike it out and insert something in place of it.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but under the unanimous-consent agreement committee amendments must be considered first.

Mr. ADAMS. Cannot the Senator amend it by moving to strike out the committee amendment and to insert in place of it a revision of it?

Mr. NORRIS. No. There is one word I want to strike out. Let me say to the Senate that I want to strike out in line 21 the word "including." That does affect my State and I want the word stricken out, because I think it does affect the State in a very prejudicial way.

As I said a while ago, in the State of Nebraska a measure was recently enacted by the legislature which has been signed by the Governor and is the law, and the legislature has adjourned. That act, passed in pursuance of consultations with the rural administrator here in Washington, was an effort to enable the farmers of the State to form power organizations in order to take advantage of the Federal law, and that act provides that farmers can form power organizations.

In consultation today with the general counsel for the Federal Relief Administration, I was worried a little about this word "including", and I asked him about it. Under the law applying to our State the electric transmission lines are not public utilities, and if we leave the word "including" in the measure, I fear a court might hold, although I do not really believe it should, that it would be in effect making electric transmission lines public utilities, which would conflict with the law of my State, and make trouble in trying to carry out the Rural Administration Act. The word "including" certainly does not add anything here.

There is a comma after the word "utilities", and if we strike out the word "including", it will read "public buildings, parks and other recreational facilities, including buildings therein, public utilities, electric transmission and distribution lines." It separates the electric transmission and distribution lines from public utilities.

I may say to the Senator from Colorado that I do not know whether I made myself clear or not. I do not see how that word would do any good to anybody, but it might do harm in my State, and that is the reason why I want to strike it out.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator this question: If we strike out the first word "including", to which he refers and which is not stricken out by the committee amendment, and then restore the word "including", which is stricken out, would that not make it read entirely satisfactory?

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the Senator's question, it would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. LOGAN. Then it would read:

> Including buildings therein, public utilities, electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit cooperative associations.

There are too many "includings" in it as it stands at present.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to offer an amendment to the text striking out the word "including" in line 21, page 2.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, before the Senator's request is acted on, I should like to call attention to the fact that there should be some provision to permit farm organizations of a nonprofit character to construct dams and ditches, as well as rural electrification lines. There are a number of organizations of that kind in my section of the country, and I have one in mind at the present time which was just swept away by a flood.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is provided for in the law now, under the Rural Electrification Act; but we have before us now an appropriation measure. The Senator's amendment certainly would not be proper on this joint resolution. My own idea, speaking from memory of the law, is that the amendment is not at all necessary. I think the organizations to which the Senator refers now have the power he would seek to give them. I think that in the administration of the law there have already been instances where the Rural Electrification Administrator has constructed, or loaned the money to construct, generating facilities. He could do that with a steam plant, or a dam, or a gas or oil plant.

Mr. MURRAY. The measure in its present form would not permit the W. P. A. to accept a project from a farm organization of a nonprofit character for the purpose of building or repairing a dam or a ditch, which is certainly work of a public character.

Mr. NORRIS. That cannot be affected. If the organization had authority under the Rural Electrification Act, then we could get an allotment under this joint resolution, if the President saw fit to give it, without putting any amendment in the measure. That would be the construction of a transmission line or distribution line, or the construction of a project authorized under existing law—not this measure but the law which provides for the Rural Electrification Administration. I ask the Chair to submit my request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will not the Senator again state his request?

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that I may offer an amendment affecting the text of the original joint resolution by striking out the word "including" in line 21, page 2, and striking out the comma after the word "areas" in line 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator's amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 21, before the word "electric", it is proposed to strike out the word "including", and on line 22, after the word "areas", to strike out the comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I now desire to ask the Senator from Colorado whether he would rather that the language proposed to be stricken out by the committee should be changed, or whether he would not be satisfied to have the amendment rejected?

Mr. ADAMS. It is a matter about which there is no great question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 2, line 22.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 25, after the word "flood", to strike out "control and other conservation" and to insert "control, conservation, eradication of insect pests, and minor miscellaneous."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 3, line 3, after the word "professional" and the comma, to strike out the words "and self-help."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee the reason for striking out the words "and self-help"?

Mr. ADAMS. I think I can answer by saying that we did not see any reason for leaving them in. That seemed to be a rather misplaced phrase.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I asked the question because one of the Representatives from my State presented the amendment. It seems to me that the words "and self-help" in the text modify the words "persons", and, as such, have no meaning.

Mr. ADAMS. That was the feeling of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, before we entirely pass from the subject which has been under discussion by the Senator from Nebraska, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado to tell me whether or not in his judgment the use of the term "public utilities", in line 20, on page 2, would not imply the right to expend this money with any form of public utility, there being no qualification whatever in the use of the term? Public utilities comprehend telephone lines, telegraph systems, railroads, bus lines, truck lines, ferry systems, and similar utilities, and is it to be our policy, established by the Congress, to lend money to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., or to the railroads, or to any organization that is comprehended in the term "public utilities"? If we leave that language in the joint resolution, that is a broad term, and the courts, or others who may be interpreting the law, can only be guided by what appears on the face of the record. I think we ought to qualify that expression. I believe we ought not to lend money to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for rural work.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator if he has considered, in connection with his question, the beginning of the proviso, which says, "That this appropriation shall be available for the following classes of public projects", and as to whether or not that language limits and qualifies the other language so that the public utilities referred to could only be those owned by public corporations rather than privately owned utilities?

Mr. BONE. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. ADAMS. That is my understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I did not hear all that was said on the other side of the aisle. As I read the joint resolution, there is no justification for the administration to lend money to the American Telegraph & Telephone Co. or any similar organization, or to any private corporation; but it may lend money for projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit and cooperative associations connected with electric transmission and distribution lines or systems which serve rural areas.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that after the words "public utilities", ending at the beginning of line 21, there is a comma. It is in the disjunctive. We have set it off, we have identified it by the only language with which lawyers are familiar. Public utilities mean public utilities. Then we go on to add—because the Senator suggested setting it off completely—

Including electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of nonprofit cooperative associations—

But the language is used in a disjunctive sense there. We have set "public utilities" off from the rest of the sentence. Unless the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] should be the interpretation given to the language, I do not know how far we would let down the bars for loans to privately owned public utilities by this language.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. Let me call the Senator's attention to the first part of the language in title I, which reads as follows:

That in order to continue to provide relief, and work relief on useful public projects—

This appropriation is made.

Then, again, on page 2 appears the language to which the Senator from Colorado called attention. Apparently this language limits the joint resolution to public projects; and I think that is made more clear by reason of the fact that the joint resolution is to continue to provide a certain type of relief, and in the earlier legislation upon the same subject the projects were limited to public projects. So far as I am advised, no grant or loan has ever been made to a private corporation, even though it is engaged in some utility operations; and if this joint resolution is regarded as supplemental to the earlier acts and as carrying forward the policy heretofore provided, it would not be interpreted as authorizing an advance to a private utility corporation.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon now is referring to relief funds, I take it.

Mr. STEIWER. All these projects are either relief or work-relief projects. No other kind is contemplated within the joint resolution.

Mr. BONE. The Senator, of course, is aware that the Rural Electrification Administration has made loans to private utilities in the rural electrification field.

Mr. STEIWER. That is not involved in this joint resolution.

Mr. BONE. I understand that; but, nevertheless, it is not antipathetic to the policy which Congress has adopted. The Senator may be accurate in what he has stated. I merely wished this matter explored a little before it passed, because it would be well to understand now that there is a possibility of loans being made to private utilities. I am willing, however, to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado and other Senators that there is no probability of such action being taken under this joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 5, to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That no portion of the funds hereby appropriated shall be allocated or used for any purpose except to provide relief or work relief for persons in need thereof: Provided further, That not to exceed 5 percent of the amount allotted or used by any department or agency may be expended for administration of such relief or work relief; except that this provision shall not apply to allocations made to the General Accounting Office, the Treasury Department, the Employees' Compensation Commission, or to the Resettlement Administration for administrative expenses in performing functions for or on behalf of the relief or work-relief program.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to offer an amendment to this particular committee amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but I wanted to ask for an interpretation of certain language in the committee amendment. I shall wait until the Senator has offered his amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment which I send to the desk is simply a perfecting amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 13, after the word "Office", it is proposed to insert the words "the Department of Justice."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the language used in this committee amendment would seem to impose a very narrow limitation on the use of these funds, particularly if considered in connection with the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out section 10 on page 14.

The committee amendment reads, in part:

That no portion of the funds hereby appropriated shall be allocated or used for any purpose except to provide relief or work relief for persons in need thereof.

May I inquire of the Senator from Colorado what, in his opinion, is the true interpretation of that language?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be very glad to give the Senator from Arkansas my interpretation. There might be question as to whether the interpretation is the true one.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator need not question his own interpretation unless he chooses to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. No; I do not. The occasion for that amendment, I will say to the Senator, was that in the preceding part of the paragraph there had been enumerated numerous kinds of projects, and we wanted to make it clear that in the construction of those projects the fundamental purpose was not the project itself but the granting of relief and work relief; that when, for instance, a building was constructed, the purpose of erecting it was to provide relief and work relief. It is merely a restatement of the first sentence of the joint resolution, which says:

That in order to continue to provide relief and work relief on useful public projects.

I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that, in my view of the matter, I should have been better pleased if the classification of various kinds of projects had been eliminated, and this sum of money had merely been turned over to the President with the direction that he use it for relief and work relief, and leave to him the full discretion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should think that would be well worthy of consideration, for this reason: Manifestly in the case of every project it will be necessary to spend a portion of the fund used on the project for purposes which are not immediately for relief; in other words, for the purchase of equipment and material which are absolutely essential to all projects. The language used in this amendment is so restrictive and so narrow that it might be construed as forbidding the use of funds for the purchase of material. That thought is reenforced by the striking out of a provision on page 14 which gave the President express power—

To prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of special funds in the nature of revolving funds for use, until January 30, 1938, in the purchase, distribution, or rental of materials, supplies, equipment, and tools—

And so forth. I assume that the Senate committee had no intention of limiting the use of the funds strictly to the employment of persons out of work.

Mr. ADAMS. For relief and work relief, and all things that were fairly included within those terms.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Is it the Senator's understanding that the words "work relief" give that authority? It was my understanding that that was the intention of the members of the committee who offered the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; and I think that meaning has been given to the term over a period of years.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. If the Senator will turn to page 3, in line 12, I suggest that after the words "or work relief" there be added "which amount shall include all salaries or wages of those who do not have relief status", in order to reach the type of administrative employee that works in an office or has charge of a project. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to understand the Senator's suggested amendment before it is agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understood the amendment, it is a definition of administrative expense.

Mr. HOLT. I shall explain it. The provision, as I will explain to the Senator from Kentucky, is intended to catch employees who work in offices and are charged against a project, and in that way the administrative expense is cut down. Mr. Hopkins issued an order exempting all safety foremen from that group. That is the group that I intend to reach.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where is it suggested that the amendment be inserted?

Mr. HOLT. In line 12, on page 3. In other words, I propose that such administrative employees' salaries shall be included in administrative expense.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not hear the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. HOLT. The proposed amendment to the amendment is on page 3, line 12, after the words "or work relief", to insert "which amount shall include all salaries or wages of those who do not have relief status." In other words, if an individual had relief status, and was still an administrative employee, his salary would not be charged against administration expense. The amendment to the amendment is intended to reach those who work in offices and are charged against the projects. I think the amendment proposed is the proper way of reaching the question of administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment, I understand, would come in after the word "relief", in line 12, on page 3?

Mr. HOLT. In line 12, on page 3.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the exact language of the proposed amendment?

Mr. HOLT. The amendment reads:

Which amount shall include all salaries or wages of those who do not have relief status.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the Senator started to give an illustration of the situation he intended to cover.

Mr. HOLT. In a given district there may be a number of safety employees who are not relief workers and yet such safety employees or foremen are charged to the project and are therefore exempted from the computation of administrative costs. The amendment is designed to reach that group. If a safety foreman had relief status he would not be charged against administrative costs.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it occurs to me, after listening to the reading of the amendment, that the definition is a little too broad; that is, the Senator is including everyone who does not have a relief status. There might be a project where it was necessary to employ, for instance, temporarily, an expert mechanic who is not available from the relief rolls and whose compensation ought not to be an administrative charge, for it is a definite charge against the project.

Mr. HOLT. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. ADAMS. Therefore I think the definition ought to be qualified so as to make it clear that the employee is in an administrative or executive capacity.

Mr. HOLT. I accept such an amendment, and will modify the amendment in that way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado about this provision:

Provided further, That not to exceed 5 percent of the amount allotted or used by any department or agency may be expended for administration of such relief or work relief.

There are certain exceptions which include the Resettlement Administration, because of a certain very high administrative cost, due to the sparsely settled country, and other things in the rural districts. Take the Works Progress Administration, with an overhead here in Washington for the purpose of administration, and take the State director in any State of the Works Progress Administration, which has an overhead there. Is it intended that the 5 percent shall include all administrative purposes?

Mr. ADAMS. I may say to the Senator that this matter was discussed with Mr. Hopkins, and the provision was agreeable to him; that is, his administrative expenses are within that figure.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I am seeking to ascertain is whether that includes the combination of the administrative expenses in Washington in his office and also the administrative expenses in each State where there is a State director with a large number of employees of various types. Is the 5 percent to cover all that, or merely the administrative expense in the Washington office?

Mr. ADAMS. It covers it all.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the Administrator testified that the entire expense of the W. P. A., both here in Washington and in the field, amounted to 3.6 percent, that 5 percent was thought to be amply sufficient to cover it all, and the committee considered that such a limitation should be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I use that, of course, as an illustration. I wanted to know whether it included both Washington and the field.

Mr. McKELLAR. It includes both. I think the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is unnecessary, because there is ample leeway between 3.6 percent and 5 percent. I should think that would cover it.

Mr. HOLT. The amendment is designed to reach the particular group that have been exempted, such as safety foremen, and a good many engineers who work in the office and are charged against projects in the counties.

Mr. McKELLAR. The entire expense, as stated by the Administrator, was 3.6 percent, and that includes all groups.

Mr. HOLT. Yes; but that does not include—and that is the reason the figure is so low—the particular group that work within an office and yet are charged to particular projects.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think that the question which the Senator raises is one about which there arise more arguments between accounting departments and administrations in private business than in connection with any other one question. When it comes to the question whether a certain man is in the administrative department or in the operating department, countless discussions and arguments ensue, I think, in almost every business administration. That is the field the Senator wants to cover by his amendment. I think it would bring about many difficulties. Take an engineer who is working out the plans for the project; he is not doing any administrative work in the office; it may be that he is doing his work in some office; but, nevertheless, the value of that work is to the particular project; I think it is very properly charged against the project. I believe any reputable accountant would charge it against the project rather than against the general administrative expenses. I feel that the amendment which the Senator offers would get us into more difficulties than almost anything else I can think of.

Mr. HOLT. The amendment of the committee, according to the definition of the Senator from Colorado, as I understand, would prohibit the transfer of any individual from any office to a project, and, therefore, would limit the cost of administration. I want to reach that particular individual, because if we should allow the exemption to continue we would not have any limitation upon administrative expenses whatsoever. That is the group I want to reach, and I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he thinks the language of the committee amendment reaches that particular group?

Mr. ADAMS. My attention was distracted for the moment.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator think the language reaches the individuals who work within an office in the different district State and Federal offices and are not chargeable to a project?

Mr. ADAMS. I do.

Mr. HOLT. And that there is no need to insert the particular language I have suggested?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator, as I understand, has complained against the abuse of proper accounting methods; his complaint is against accounting methods rather than against the facts of the case.

Mr. HOLT. But, if we should provide a definition would not that strengthen and tighten the legislation?

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator from Washington made a good suggestion when he said that the adoption of the amendment would provoke many difficulties.

Mr. HOLT. If the provision as reported by the committee covers the ground, I have no objection, and I will withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to the committee amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to the committee amendment. That amendment is to add in line 13 after the word "Office", the words "the Department of Justice." That is the amendment pending and the question is on that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 7, after the word "its", to strike out:

Completion; and no non-Federal project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until adequate provision has been made or is assured for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds.

And to insert:

Completion: Provided further, That after September 30, 1937, no new non-Federal project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until (1) adequate provision has been made or is assured for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds, and (2) at least 40 percent of the cost of the project is to be supplied from non-Federal funds, except that in any case in which the applicant for any such non-Federal project certifies in writing that it is unable to supply such 40 percent, the President is authorized, after investigation of the taxpaying capacity and credit of the applicant, to determine the maximum amount possible for such applicant to supply. The President shall furnish to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July 1938, a list of cases in which less than 40 percent of the cost of non-Federal projects was furnished by applicants, together with a statement of the amount furnished by the applicant in each such case,

So as to read:

Provided, That no Federal construction project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until there shall have been allocated and irrevocably set aside Federal funds sufficient for its completion: Provided further, That after September 30, 1937, no new non-Federal project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until (1) adequate provision has been made or is assured for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds, and (2) at least 40 percent of the cost of the project is to be supplied from non-Federal funds, except that in any case in which the applicant for any such non-Federal project certifies in writing that it is unable to supply such 40 percent, the President is authorized, after investigation of the taxpaying capacity and credit of the applicant, to determine the maximum amount possible for such applicant to supply. The President shall furnish to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the 1st day of January and the 1st day of July 1938, a list of cases in which less than 40 percent of the cost of non-Federal projects was furnished by applicants, together with a statement of the amount furnished by the applicant in each such case.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Arkansas and have informed him that a number of Senators who desire to be present when this amendment is discussed are unavoidably absent for the remainder of the afternoon. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be passed over, and that the Senate proceed to consider the other committee amendments.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator refers to the amendment striking out the word "completion" and the language which follows beginning in line 7, and inserting a new provision in lieu thereof?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to have that amendment go over for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the Senator asks that the 40-percent sponsors' fund provision go over for the day?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, perhaps that amendment raises the most controversial issue involved in the joint resolution. I agree with the suggestion that the amendment go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over temporarily. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "This appropriation shall be available also", and insert "Not exceeding $100,000,000 of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure by the Resettlement Administration", and so forth.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Nebraska desired that that amendment go over, and, in his behalf. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 10, after the word "funds", to strike out "allocated hereunder to the Works Progress Administration" and insert "herein appropriated."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think I have on my desk an amendment I desire to offer to this committee amendment. I should like to have the amendment go over, as I did not anticipate we would reach it this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 20, after the word "Government", to strike out "and to empower such agencies to prescribe rules and regulations", so as to read:

SEC. 2. In carrying out the purposes of the foregoing appropriation the President is authorized (a) to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary and to utilize agencies within the Government to carry out the functions delegated thereto by the President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation from the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the idea the committee had in mind was to authorize the President to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary and to utilize agencies within the Government, but we felt that the agencies themselves ought not to be given authority to prescribe rules and regulations. It was our belief that they ought to go back to the President for the rules and regulations and have his sanction.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the amendment change the existing procedure under the law?

Mr. ADAMS. I think the wording as it came from the House is existing law. There was a suggestion of a change in the law, but I am not absolutely certain about it. It seemed to us it was an unwise delegation of power. We did not feel that we ought to delegate to some subordinate agency the authority to make rules and regulations, but that the agency ought to come back to the President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Was any testimony taken on this point?

Mr. ADAMS. None at all. It came up in an executive session of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as the Senator from Colorado is aware, the wage-scale regulations have varied in different sections of the country. They have been issued by the Administrator of the W. P. A. It may be that the President has been consulted about them. Would the adoption of this amendment make it necessary for the Administrator, not only of that agency but of any other similar agency, to have to take up all these details with the President rather than be able to have his agency take care of them?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not familiar with the situation the Senator has in mind.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator knows that the wage scale in different sections of the country has varied and also that the man-year allowance for projects has varied from time to time.

Mr. ADAMS. May I invite the Senator's attention to the next clause, which I think answers his question?

Mr. BARKLEY. That provides a minimum, but it still does not affect the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. It provides for the prevailing rates of pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. It relates to the rate of pay for laborers, but would it affect his ability to make a regulation affecting rules and regulations. I do not know that it is important, but would it affect his ability to make a regulation affecting the man-year allowance in money for projects in various parts of the country?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think so.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand it is the intention of the committee not to have the agencies make rules and regulations.

Mr. ADAMS. We do not want the President to delegate the power to some individual administrator and let him make his own rules and regulations to cover any situation that may arise.

Mr. HATCH. There is no restriction upon the power of the President?

Mr. ADAMS. None at all.

Mr. HATCH. He can make whatever regulations are necessary?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 6, line 20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, line 2, after the word "President", to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That in the event the Congress or any Federal agency so authorized by act of Congress shall establish minimum rates of pay for persons employed by private employers in any occupation or occupations, thereafter no greater percentage differentials in the amount of compensation paid than the average minimum differentials established by the Congress or such Federal agency shall be applicable to persons engaged upon projects under the foregoing appropriations, and in the event no differential be established there shall be no differential in compensation applicable to such persons.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be passed over. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 3, before the word "worker", to insert "relief"; in line 4, after the word "Administration", to strike out "who is needed and", so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That in order to insure the fulfillment of the purposes for which the foregoing appropriation is made and to avoid competition between the Works Progress Administration and other Federal or non-Federal agencies in the employment of labor on construction projects of any nature whatsoever, financed in whole or in part by the Federal Government, no relief worker shall be eligible for employment on any project of the Works Progress Administration who has refused to accept employment on any other Federal or non-Federal project at a wage rate comparable with or higher than the wage rate established for similar work on projects of the Works Progress Administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 9, after the word "any", to insert "relief", so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That any relief worker who has been engaged on any Federal or non-Federal project and whose service has been regularly terminated through no fault of his own shall not lose his eligibility for restoration to the relief rolls or for reemployment on any other Federal or non-Federal project on account of such previous employment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 8, line 23, after the word "employ", to insert "on such projects", and in line 24, after the name "United States" to strike out "on such projects" and insert "or aliens who have not prior to the enactment of this joint resolution filed a declaration of intention to become citizens", so as to read:

SEC. 3. The departments, agencies, or establishments having supervision of projects for which funds from the foregoing appropriation are made available shall not knowingly employ on such projects aliens illegally within the limits of the United States or aliens who have not prior to the enactment of this joint resolution filed a declaration of intention to become citizens and they shall make every reasonable effort consistent with prompt employment of the destitute unemployed to see that such aliens are not employed, and if employed and their status as such alien is disclosed they shall thereupon be discharged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, after the word "citizens", to insert "who are in need and on relief rolls"; in line 8, after the word "aliens", to insert "who are in need and on relief rolls and"; in line 9, after the word "have", to strike out "taken out first papers" and insert "declared their intention to become citizens"; and in line 11, after the word "this", to strike out "act" and insert "joint resolution", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That preference shall be given to American citizens who are in need and on relief rolls in employment by the Works Progress Administration and next those aliens who are in need and on relief rolls and who have declared their intention to become citizens prior to the enactment of this joint resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I read the amendment on page 9, beginning in line 8, it is intended to give preference, first, to American citizens, and, second, to aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens prior to the enactment of the joint resolution. Is that consistent with the language at the bottom of page 8?—

or aliens who have not prior to the enactment of this joint resolution filed a declaration of intention to become citizens.

Mr. ADAMS. Wherein does the Senator see any inconsistency?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if I may answer the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator will see, in the language following, that preference is given to veterans of the World War and Spanish War. That is the same language that has been included heretofore relating to veterans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 9, line 12, after the words "Spanish War", to insert "who are in need and on relief rolls", so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That veterans of the World War and Spanish War who are in need and on relief rolls shall be given preference for employment by the Works Progress Administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, after the word "officer", to strike out "named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the program and work contemplated under the foregoing appropriation and" and insert "or employee"; in line 18, after the word "salary", to insert "at the rate"; and in line 21, after the word "appropriation", to strike out the comma and "except persons now serving as such under other law", so as to read:

SEC. 4. Any Administrator or other officer or employee receiving a salary at the rate of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation, and any State or regional administrator receiving a salary of $5,000 or more per annum from such appropriation shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 5, after the word "State", to strike out "or county"; in line 6, after the word "bona-fide", to strike out "residents" and insert "citizens"; and in the same line, after the word "State", to strike out "or county", so as to read:

SEC. 5. Appointments to Federal positions of an administrative or advisory capacity under the foregoing appropriation in any State shall be made from among the bona-fide citizens of that State so far as not inconsistent with efficient administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 15, before the word "of", to strike out "resident" and insert "citizen", and in the same line, after the word "the", to strike out "State or Territory" and insert "State, Territory, region, or district", so as to read:

No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the United States who holds an administrative, executive, or supervisory position under this joint resolution, if the position is in any office located outside the District of Columbia or is on any project prosecuted in any place outside the District of Columbia, unless such person is an actual and bona-fide citizen of the State, Territory, region, or district in which the office or project is situated, but this provision shall not apply to the temporary and emergency assignment of any person to a position where the period of service in such position does not exceed 60 days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 21, before the word "No", to strike out "(a)", and on page 11, line 2, after the word "candidate", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso: "And provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be available to pay the compensation of Works Progress Administration district officials unless such officials are bona-fide residents of the Works Progress Administration district in which the office is situated", so as to read:

SEC. 6. (a) No part of the foregoing appropriation shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any person who is a candidate for any State, district, county, or municipal office (such office requiring full time of such person and to which office a salary attaches) in any primary, general, or special election, or who is serving as a campaign manager or assistant thereto for any such candidate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 7, to strike out:

(b) No part of the sums appropriated by this joint resolution shall be available to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the United States who holds an administrative, executive, or supervisory position under this joint resolution if such person receives or earns compensation for personal services (rendered during the period when he holds such position) from any other source.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 14, to strike out:

(c) No part of the foregoing appropriation shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any person who is related to the State administrator, district manager, or county supervisor, or the appointing power within the third degree by blood or marriage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 22, after the word "this", to strike out "act" and insert "joint resolution", so as to read:

SEC. 7. Hereafter all appointments of persons to the Federal service for employment within the District of Columbia, under the provisions of this joint resolution, whether such appointments be within the classified civil service or otherwise, shall be apportioned among the several States and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 6, after the word "this", to strike out "act" and insert "joint resolution", so as to read:

In making separations from the Federal service, or furloughs without pay to last as long as 3 months, of persons employed within the District of Columbia, under the provisions of this joint resolution the appointing power shall give preference in retention to appointees from States that have not received their share of appointments according to population: Provided, however, That soldiers, sailors, and marines, the widows of such, or the wives of injured soldiers, sailors, and marines, who themselves are not qualified, but whose wives are qualified to hold a position in the Government service, shall be given preference in retention, in their several grades and classes, where their ratings are good or better.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 19, after the numeral "9" and the period to strike out "So" and insert "Subject to the limitations of section 1 of this joint resolution so"; in line 21, after the words "by the" to strike out "Director of the Bureau of the Budget" and insert "President"; and on page 14, line 1, after the numerals "1935" and the comma, to strike out "or as may be necessary for administrative expenses of any agency heretofore established by the President under section 4 of said act", so as to read:

SEC. 9. Subject to the limitations of section 1 of this joint resolution so much of the foregoing appropriation as may be determined by the President to be necessary for administrative expenses of any department, establishment, or agency of the United States for additional work incident to carrying out the purposes of such appropriation or the provisions of section 5 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, may be allotted therefor by the President, and the funds so allotted shall be available until June 30, 1938, for expenditure in the discretion of the President for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of the first paragraph of section 3 of said act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado to state the effect of the committee amendment at the top of page 14?

Mr. ADAMS. I think that language was stricken out because the committee felt the matter was covered by the earlier provision in reference to the percentage that could be expended for administrative purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 8, to strike out:

SEC. 10. In carrying out the purpose of the foregoing appropriation the President is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of special funds in the nature of revolving funds for use, until June 30, 1938, in the purchase, distribution, or rental of materials, supplies, equipment, and tools: Provided, That with the approval of the President, materials, equipment, and personnel of the Corps of Engineers, War Department, may be assigned to service in connection with flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted under this act notwithstanding that such projects have not been duly authorized by act of Congress: Provided further, That the requirements hereinafter established that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, my attention was distracted. What happened to the amendment on page 14, striking out section 10?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado why that section was stricken out. The provision, I understand, is the one which affects certain possible flood-control projects that are not included in the act of 1936.

The language which is stricken out provides that—

In carrying out the purpose of the foregoing appropriation the President is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of special funds in the nature of revolving funds for use, until June 30, 1938, in the purchase, distribution, or rental of materials, supplies, equipment, and tools: Provided, That with the approval of the President, materials, equipment, and personnel of the Corps of Engineers, War Department, may be assigned to service in connection with flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted under this act, notwithstanding that such projects have not been duly authorized by act of Congress: Provided further, That the requirements hereinafter established that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted hereunder.

The facts are that this language was put in the joint resolution in the House in order to take care of a possible situation in recently flooded regions of the Ohio and other rivers of the United States where no authorization for flood-control projects was carried in the act of 1936. Of course, we all hope adequate funds are to be provided by Congress at least to make a respectable beginning in the flood-control projects and devices authorized last year under the bill reported and passed under the guidance of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]; but unfortunately that bill does not take care of situations that arose during the past winter in the lower Ohio, and other rivers tributary to it, and other rivers in the country.

In other words, as the matter now stands, there is no authorization for any flood-control projects outside of the Tennessee Valley and outside of the terms of the Act of 1936. If I am mistaken about that, I will ask my friend from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to correct me; but I think that is true.

Since the passage of the act of 1936 we have had the most disastrous flood in the history of the United States, involving about a million and a half persons, and causing damage estimated at nearly $400,000,000. Unless money is made available out of the funds appropriated in this joint resolution, or unless, in addition to the act of 1936, Congress authorizes the expenditure of funds for flood-control projects in the more recently flooded areas, there will be nothing available. It is my understanding that the House put in this section in order that there might be made available out of the appropriation, if the President found it was necessary and advisable, funds that might be expended for flood-control projects outside of those authorized in the act of 1936.

If that be true, and if it should turn out that we should not get any additional flood-control authorization at this session of Congress, it seems to me this language ought to be allowed to remain in the joint resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I can make a very frank explanation of the action of the committee.

The subject came before the committee, and the Senator from Kentucky was not there, nor was any one else there who had a clear understanding of the matter; and we felt that we had better strike out that section, and then take it up in conference with the House, and work out what might be necessary. We did not strike out the section because of any disagreement with it on the part of the committee. It was due to a lack of explanation, and a feeling that if it should be stricken out by the committee and by the Senate the whole matter would be before the conference committee, and we could then reach those who could explain it to us.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that. The matter has been brought to my attention by a number of the Members of the other House who are vitally concerned with this proposal, and with the possibility of securing some assistance under this language. I can fully understand the situation to which they refer. It may be that the language ought to be revised. It may not be as clear as it ought to be; but I certainly should dislike to see the language permanently eliminated, so as to preclude the possibility of getting any assistance under this joint resolution in certain regions where the greatest disaster in the history of the country has recently occurred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when the matter came before the committee, there was no proof at all about it, as I recall; and the section seemed to have been adopted in the House as an amendment from the floor, if I am correct in my recollection. At all events, the purpose in striking out the section, as I understood, was not because the committee disagreed with it but simply to see if a better proposal could not be worked out in conference.

Mr. BARKLEY. With that explanation, I understand that the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Tennessee are sympathetic with the objects intended to be accomplished by this language and will seek to work it out in better form.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the committee amendment is a wise one, because as the language of the section was written in the House there would be no orderly survey of projects to be undertaken; but certainly I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that in emergencies there ought to be some provision for dealing with them.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is difficult to work out the language here on the floor, and I appreciate the situation.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no doubt it can be done in conference.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Colorado in connection with the subject discussed by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from New York. Recently in New Mexico there were some very disastrous floods on two rivers, the Rio Grande and the Pecos. Perhaps there were also floods on the Rio Grande in the State of Colorado. I do not know about that. Neither of those rivers is mentioned in the Flood Control Act of 1936. There is danger, perhaps, of recurrence of the floods on those rivers. Is it correct to assume, now that this language is stricken out, that no relief money could be expended on flood-control projects?

Mr. ADAMS. No; that is not my understanding, because if the Senator goes back to section 1 he will find specific provision for flood control.

Mr. HATCH. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. ADAMS. That is in section 1 of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out lines 9 to 25 on page 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 8, to strike out:

SEC. 15. No part of the funds of the United States shall be loaned or granted, except pursuant to an obligation incurred prior to the date of the enactment of this joint resolution, to any State, or any of its political subdivisions or agencies, for the purpose of carrying out or assisting in carrying out any program or project of constructing, rebuilding, repairing, or replanning its penal or reformatory institutions, unless, under the laws of such State the sale in the open market of goods, wares, or merchandise, manufactured, produced, or mined in whole or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) has been prohibited.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to suggest two amendments to the original House text, with a view to asking then that the committee amendment be rejected, and that the House provision as amended be agreed to.

I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 16, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "unless" down to and including the word "prohibited", in line 20, and in lieu thereof to insert:

The President shall find that the projects to be financed with such loan or grant will not cause or promote prison competition with private enterprises: Provided further, That prisoners may be used in the preparation of materials for and in labor upon the projects authorized as provided for in this section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there were one or two members of the committee who were interested in this item who are not present this afternoon, and I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the amendment go over until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did wish to dispose of the matter this evening, if it could be done.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have just been advised that the Senators whom I had in mind do not care to have the matter postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now propose another amendment, on page 16, line 9, after the word "funds", to strike out the words "of the United States" and to insert the words "appropriated in this joint resolution."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment striking out section 15.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to section 15 as amended by the amendments of the Senator from Arkansas.

Section 15, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

SEC. 15. No part of the funds appropriated in this joint resolution shall be loaned or granted, except pursuant to an obligation incurred prior to the date of the enactment of this joint resolution, to any State, or any of its political subdivisions or agencies, for the purpose of carrying out or assisting in carrying out any program or project of constructing, rebuilding, repairing, or replanning its penal or reformatory institutions, unless the President shall find that the projects to be financed with such loan or grant will not cause or promote prison competition with private enterprise: Provided further, That prisoners may be used in the preparation of materials for and in labor upon the projects authorized as provided for in this section.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting the nominations of several collectors of customs, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Margaret Crew to be postmaster at Orchard Lake, Mich., in place of D. J. Wilson, whose commission expired February 5, 1936.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

Raymond B. Stevens, of New Hampshire, to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission for the term expiring June 16, 1943, vice William J. Sears;

John O'Keefe, of Pembina, N. Dak., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 34, with headquarters at Pembina, N. Dak. (reappointment);

Passed Asst. Surg. Raymond A. Vonderlehr to be surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from April 10, 1937; and

Dr. Dwight K. Shellman to be assistant dental surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Joseph A. Maynard, of Brookline, Mass., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 4, with headquarters at Boston, Mass. (Reappointment.)

Mr. HARRISON (for Mr. CONNALLY), from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of William H. Gilliland, of Port Arthur, Tex., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 21, with headquarters at Port Arthur, Tex. (Reappointment.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in their order the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Albert Lee Stephens, of California, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Healy, of Idaho, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

HAROLD P. BURKE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harold P. Burke, of New York, to be United States district judge, western district of New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask some representative of the Committee on the Judiciary if there was a hearing on the nomination?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the nomination was referred, and I spoke to the Senator from New York about it. The Representative in the House from the district affected [Mr. KELLY] asked that he be given an opportunity to present opposition to the nomination. I gave him as much time as he requested, and he presented some letters in opposition. Then I stated to him that our report would be made to the full committee on yesterday, and he said that that was satisfactory. The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and I were on the subcommittee. I consulted the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and he said he was satisfied if Mr. KELLY had been accorded the courtesy which he requested. Mr. KELLY was satisfied and wrote me a letter to that effect.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator will recall that my only request in the matter was that Representative KELLY be accorded an opportunity to be heard. I have no objection to the confirmation of the nomination, but I was anxious that the Representative be heard, and I have the assurance of the Senator from Delaware that he has been heard.

Mr. HUGHES. He was heard and presented all the letters he desired to present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dichmann Peek to be brigadier general.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frederic Harrison Smith to be brigadier general.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Philip Bradley Peyton to be brigadier general.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Bryden to be brigadier general.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry other nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the remaining nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the remaining nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotion in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 16, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father of every age, we thank Thee for the endless stretch of Thy wonderful love. We rejoice in the wideness of Thy mercy, along whose ocean shore lines there are no ill-fated travelers. Help us to come to full self-realization it is neither meat nor drink but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit. Earth's richest attainment and heaven's highest vocation is to make a life rather than a living. It will be a sad day for our age when material wealth outruns spiritual gain. Merciful Lord God, clothe us with the vestments of brotherly and consecrated activity, and we shall find ourselves nearer the perfect ideal. Look with divine favor upon our President, our Speaker, the leaders, and the whole membership of the Congress. We pray Thee to stir every impulse that makes for wise statesmanship and safeguards the happiness and contentment of our fellow citizens. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may be permitted to sit during sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

MARTHA L. BAILEY

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 230

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Martha L. Bailey, mother of Louen V. Bailey, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Louen V. Bailey.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN, Mr. CARTWRIGHT, and Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, at 10 o'clock, the Select Committee of the House on Conservation of Wildlife Resources will start hearings on the migratory bird situation, especially with respect to shooting regulations for the current season.

The Chief of the Biological Survey will be the first witness to explain the supply of ducks we have now and the regulations that the Biological Survey has in mind. The committee will be pleased to give an opportunity to all Members of the House, representing districts that are interested in duck hunting, to be heard on this subject.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we cannot agree with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS], the minority member of the subcommittee, with respect to time for general debate.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, at the present time I have requests for over 2 hours. Many of the minority Members are not on the floor at the moment and I am sure more requests will be made. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we run along for the balance of the afternoon in general debate, the time to be equally divided between the chairman of the subcommittee and myself.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit, I am willing that the debate should run along for a little while this afternoon, but I could not consent at this time to have it continue all the afternoon.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas will yield, what great hurry is there about forcing this bill through this afternoon? Can the gentleman give me a definite reason?

Mr. RAYBURN. There is no reason for forcing it through, but we do have a very definite program for Thursday and Friday of this week and also a program in the making for next week, and tomorrow, as the gentleman knows, is Calendar Wednesday. This is not a very long bill. It contains about 15 pages. I doubt if there is a great deal of controversy about it and we would certainly like to finish it today, if possible. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] will be liberal about debate, but I would not like to agree now that debate should run all day.

Mr. SNELL. I think we should let the debate run along for 3 or 4 hours and find out if there is any controversy about the bill. It may be that we can pass it very quickly at the end of the debate, but there are several Members who want to make some statements today, and, as this is the last general appropriation bill, I think they should be allowed to do so.

Mr. RAYBURN. I certainly want to give them that opportunity.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. May I suggest that we let the debate run along for three hours and a half, and I will take one hour and a half and give the minority side 2 hours.

Mr. POWERS. Then what am I going to do about the further requests when the Members come in and ask for time? This is the last appropriation bill and a number of Members want to speak in general debate.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request with respect to limiting the time for debate.

Mr. POWERS. What is the request now?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has withdrawn his request about time, and has moved that the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a better way to do it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the majority leader yield for a moment? On June 8 I secured 15 minutes to speak today after the reading of the Journal and when the majority leader and the Speaker saw fit to let me have the time. Can the gentleman tell us now when that 15 minutes will be allotted me?

Mr. RAYBURN. At the completion of the consideration of the bill today.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman have any idea when that will be?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not.

Mr. RICH. As the majority leader knows, he ran me over until after 6 o'clock a few weeks ago, and if it is after 6 o'clock today the gentleman knows I would not take any time of the Members of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. I understand that, and I am wondering if the gentleman could not get some time from the minority side in general debate on this bill today.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. No.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman understands the arrangement under which he was to speak.

Mr. RICH. Whenever the majority leader gives me the time, I am to speak. I am trying to find out when that is going to be.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have no idea when the Committee will rise this afternoon.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I might say that I have 15 minutes, and that I am satisfied with the position taken by the majority leader.

Mr. RICH. I will have to be.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7493.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, with Mr. McCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on Friday of last week I reported from the Committee on Appropriations the War Department civil functions appropriations bill. Today, at the outset of general debate upon that bill, I wish briefly to speak of some of its provisions and of the recommendations we are submitting for your approval.

This bill embraces appropriations which, since the fiscal year 1932, have been carried under the nonmilitary title of the War Department appropriation bill. Early in this session, even before the several subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations had been appointed, our late beloved chairman, Representative Buchanan, directed that the War Department estimates in the 1938 Budget be handled in two separate measures—one to include the items carried in former War Department appropriation bills under the military title, and the other to be composed of appropriations formerly classified as nonmilitary. These latter are embraced by the bill now under consideration, which has been denominated the War Department civil functions appropriation bill.

Personally, I think the idea a splendid one. It is plain deception to charge to national defense the cost of purely nonmilitary activities. I am willing to concede that the item of "Cemeterial expenses" is in the twilight zone, and there may be other items of expense here and there, negligible in amount, about which there may be some question as to their place of lodgment, but all in all they would not aggregate more than a fraction of 1 percent of the amount carried by the bill.

I have yet to hear a sound reason against the separation. I may say that opposition to the consolidation has manifested itself in several quarters. I have heard objection voiced by those who are wont to carp about providing for national defense. The course suggested will take away some of their thunder. I have heard the fear expressed that the separation may have back of it ultimately taking river and harbor and flood-control work out of the hands of the Army Engineers. To my mind, that is absurd. I cannot conceive of the Congress ever consenting to such a course. Lastly, it has been bruited about that if continued together, Budget recommendations touching river and harbor and flood-control projects might be more easily overridden, since the President would be less apt to exercise the veto because of the presence of military appropriations. If these be the only reasons, if they may be so termed, I submit that the division is wise and should be adhered to.

The truth of the matter is, disjointure is not a new departure. Prior to the fiscal year 1933, with one exception, every item in this bill then an object of appropriation, was carried in a measure other than the War Department Appropriation bill. The exception is the item applying to the Alaska communication system. I am sure the predominating sentiment of the House is in favor of the new arrangement.

Mr. Chairman, the Budget submitted estimates for the activities embraced by this bill totaling $194,375,544. That amount exceeds the sum of current appropriations thus far made by $3,783,559. The bill we are presenting appropriates a total of $194,328,363. We have effected a net reduction of $47,181.

We have made a net addition of $59,119 to the estimate for cemeterial expenses.

We have made a reduction of $12,100 in the estimate on account of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines.

And we have disallowed completely an item of $94,200 for making repairs to historical fortifications at San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Permit me briefly to enlarge upon those changes.

CEMETERIES

We carry an appropriation in this bill for the maintenance and improvement of national cemeteries—76 national cemeteries, 5 Confederate cemeteries, and 15 soldiers' lots. The estimates include $40,640 for 33 additional positions—24 at 5 new cemeteries, 8 at old cemeteries, and 1 at headquarters, Fifth Corps Area. The 5 new cemeteries are at Baltimore, Md., New York N. Y., Fort Sam Houston, Tex., Fort Rosecrans, Calif., and San Francisco, Calif. The 33 additional jobs are made up of 3 superintendents, 1 assistant superintendent, 1 clerk, 3 watchmen, 2 foremen, and 23 laborers. The pay ranges are from $780 to $1,620. The committee recommends approval of 27 of the 33 positions, 23 being laborers. The resultant saving of $7,800, and another small saving of $1,021 on some proposed construction work at Fort Gibson, Okla., have been employed partly to offset an increase of $5,000 for beautifying the grounds of all national cemeteries, and an increase of $62,940 for the procurement of headstones. Bids opened subsequent to the submission of the Budget indicate a probable advance in the average unit cost of headstones from $6.65 to $8.45.

PHILIPPINE HIGH COMMISSIONER

The reduction of $12,100 we are proposing in the appropriation for the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines involves three propositions. The present pay of the legal adviser to the High Commissioner is $12,000. The financial expert to the High Commissioner receives $10,000. Each of these officials has an assistant receiving $7,500. We have reduced the pay of the legal adviser to $8,000 and the pay of the financial expert to $7,500. For each of the assistants we recommend $6,500 each. It is our thought that the present rates of pay are far beyond what they should be and are all out of line with pay rates attaching to positions in Washington and elsewhere in the United States fully as important and responsible.

On rent we have made a reduction of $1,400, which is the amount by which the estimate exceeds actual prospective obligations.

At present the High Commissioner has available $10,000 for expenditure at his discretion for maintenance of his household and such other purposes as he may deem proper. The estimate for 1938 proposes that a like amount be made available. The committee is recommending an allowance of $7,800, which is the maximum paid to Foreign Service officers for household maintenance and representation allowances.

HISTORICAL FORTIFICATIONS

The Puerto Rico project has considerable appeal, but the committee just did not feel that it could lend its endorsement to an expenditure of such magnitude for making extensive repairs to some old fortifications when there are so many necessary things for which money is needed, but which must be denied.

We have made no money change in the other items of appropriation which the bill embraces.

The estimate for the Alaska Communication System is stepped up $3,000 to permit the modernization-of-equipment program to go forward a little more rapidly. The equipment is old and is badly in need of replacement. The total to be applied to repairs and alterations is $12,000. This is one of the few income-producing activities of the Federal Government. Disregarding expenses on account of military personnel engaged with the system, the net earnings in 1936 were roundly $140,000.

The estimate for the Soldiers' Home in this city exceeds the current appropriation by $5,351. An additional amount is requested for care of mental cases and for repairs, and the amount for heat, light, fuel, and power is somewhat less, resulting in the net increase stated.

The home is financed out of a trust fund, upon which the Government pays 3-percent interest. In addition to such interest, the fund is maintained by credits of stoppages or fines adjudged against soldiers by courts martial, forfeitures on account of desertion, unclaimed assets of deceased soldiers, and by contributions of 25 cents per month by each enlisted man and warrant officer on the active list of the Regular Army. The balance in the fund on June 30, 1936, was $2,377,399.65. Outgo exceeded income in the fiscal year 1936 by $310,639.99. Contributions by enlisted personnel did not begin until March 1926. For the present and succeeding fiscal years the revenue from this source should result in a moderate building up of the capital of the fund.

Prior to the fiscal year 1936 the home was conducted under a permanent annual appropriation of this trust fund. Commencing with such fiscal year, in consequence of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, the home authorities have been required to come to Congress each year and get advance approval of the amount which would be withdrawn from the Soldiers' Home Permanent Fund, instead of exercising that function independently, as had been the practice from the beginning back in 1851.

Because the home has been put upon a regular annual instead of a permanent annual appropriation basis, it appears that the Civil Service Commission and the General Accounting Office now wish the institution to be conducted like all other Federal agencies—that is, pay salaries in accordance with the Classification Act, adopt accounting forms and methods as prescribed by the General Accounting Office, and so on—to do which the home authorities advise would impose an additional annual charge upon their trust fund of an amount around $275,000, which would be the equivalent of an extra assessment of 25 cents per month upon, roundly, 92,000 enlisted men, unless the Congress should be willing to appropriate for the additional expense out of the Treasury.

There probably is no institution of the Government operated as economically as the local Soldiers' Home. In all of the years of its existence there has been no word of criticism of its conduct and management. It is run by a board of high-ranking Army officers and administered directly by retired officers of the Army chosen for their suitability for the work. The establishment is inspected once a month by a board of commissioners, and the Inspector General of the Army, assisted by an expert accountant, annually makes a searching inspection.
